from Massachusetts, and he perhaps did not quite catch my meaning. When I said self-government I meant republican self-government. I claim that every nation on earth is capable of self-government, but it will differ in form according to the capacity of the people; in other words, in the development of individuality in the citizen. As we lower our individuality and go into types we lessen our capacity for self-government, and at the rate of progress that is being made to-day, individuality going gradually down and types gradually rising, we will soon have the survival of types and the destruction of individuality. Will we then be capable of republican self-government? There is not a man here who can say so if he has studied history.

Now, I say that these people, like every people on earth, are capable of self-government. It may be a limited monarchy; it may be a constitutional monarchy with limitations to protect private citizens; it may be a free Republic like this, and it may be a confederated Republic with a delegated authority, nevertheless whatever they want let them have it, because government is not a thing made to fit. It will grow as the evolution of character. Let the people in the Philippines alone to solve their own destiny, to work out their own state, without let or hindrance from us. Let them grow on and evolve from their experience or that of their neighbors, or in any other way, the sort of government that will suit them, and let them have it. The inferior race is just as much entitled to its form of government as we are entitled to ours, and much more entitled to it than we are to make any attempt to enforce our ideas of government upon it in the actual practice and habit of life. So we can safely let those people alone. One of the most perilous undertakings that a Republic ever made was to attempt to impose upon any other people any government that they did not want, because liberty is a principle, and it is not simply a personal convenience, as is the light in which it is now viewed by most of the people of this country.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. It is not for me to say when the Senator has outlined his entire programme for the future for the Philippines; but I do gather this: That, in short, his programme would be, as soon as it is possible, whatever they may be, whatever may be their capacity for self-government, whatever may be the conflicts that will arise before that is established, to leave them to their own devices and withdraw. It is an entirely different programme from that which is outlined by the minority of the committee.

Mr. MONEY. Yes. I was not proposing to do that.

Mr. HALE. It is entirely different. The trouble with that programme is that it is self-repeating. We shall hold on to them and continue to do for them as we are now doing until they demonstrate their capacity for a stable government, which of course they can never do.

Mr. MONEY. I will say——

Mr. HALE. I am by no means certain——

Mr. MONEY. I will say to the Senator that I had not finished my programme of self-government.

Mr. HALE. The Senator had said enough so that I could comprehend him. I am interrupting him now because I am called away from the Chamber and must leave the Senate in a moment. I am by no means certain, Mr. President, but what the Senator has struck what in the end everybody will come to. There is a great deal in what he says about the power of conferring a government upon a people. No people ever had a good government conferred upon them. Every good government, every self-government, every stable government, has been earned by war, by suffering, by sacrifice. The Senator from Mississippi is right in saying that you can not confer a government. I do not know but what the Senator has struck the solution. I feel myself at a loss to conclude what will come out of this experiment, and I suppose there is nothing we can do except from time to time to demonstrate as well as we can what is the real situation there. In the end it may become what the Senator from Mississippi advances, as I understand, as his view of it.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, the great poet of common sense said once that—

> For forms of government let fools contest;
> Whate'er is best administer'd is best.

Now, the government that suits the people can be administered best, and the one that suits their mental spirit and moral needs the least will be administered the worst. You must consult the people who are going to be governed. They must give a tacit assent. If they do not concur in the consent to go with you, they must assent to your rule. If you put a law upon the statute books that is contrary to their mode of thinking and to their heredity or to any other characteristic which has become rooted in their nature, then that is going to be a dead letter.

Why, here in the United States of America do we not know that we are continually in a state putting laws upon the statute books that are a dead letter because they are opposed to public sentiment. Here, with a government that we ourselves instituted, we are continually passing laws that are absolutely useless because they can not be enforced. Why? Because they are contrary to public opinion and public sentiment, and they are worth nothing.

Now, as I said, I had not quite finished my programme. I wish those people well, whether we keep them or let them go. I wish that everybody undertaking the experiment of national existence a thorough and happy issue in their experiment. I would be less than human if I did not. But I would do this: Having secured their consent to talk with us about this matter and having assured them that we had no designs upon their liberty, I would not keep soldiers there to overawe them or a civil commission to eat them up. I would say, establish your own government in your own way, the best you can, and we will maintain here for a while a sufficient power to see that other governments of the world do not come in your chaotic, unformed, unmodeled, unclassified condition to oppress you and to make you a captive to their government. I would do that for them, because we assumed a moral obligation when we took charge of those people, and we can not rightly throw it off. But it all means an ultimate withdrawal. Now, as to coaling stations, ports, etc., and the other things provided for, as read by the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Mississippi permit a question?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator says that he would withdraw all authority after he had called together the leaders of the Filipinos and after they were attempting to establish a government except a military force, which he would have remain there for one purpose which he names, but for other purposes which I presume are in his mind. The one purpose he names is to protect them from foreign powers. The other purpose, I suppose, is to maintain the government itself in case it was assailed from any part of the islands.

I ask the Senator this question: Suppose after such a government had been formed and the United States was maintaining its soldiers there for the purpose of sustaining it, the people of the Visayans should dissent to the government which was thus established, and there should be a rebellion against the authority of the native central government, would he have the troops of the United States put down that rebellion of the Filipinos against their own government?

Mr. MONEY. No, sir.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. For what purpose, then, would you have our soldiers remain?

Mr. MONEY. I would let the cats fight it out to the last tail.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then why would the Senator permit a force of United States soldiers to remain there?

Mr. MONEY. As I remarked, Mr. President, and for no other reason than the one I stated, to prevent the interference from foreign powers and the seizure of the islands, making them subject to any other rule.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So the Senator excludes all internal dissensions?

Mr. MONEY. And I would do that because the moral obligation we had assumed voluntarily over those people——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So the Senator excludes all internal dissensions? Very well. That brings us to the second question. Suppose, then, it should occur to that government, as it has occurred to every government that ever was established, including our own, that for the purposes of the government, which are manifold and various—the establishment of public works, for example, or the maintenance of the government itself—it should need money. It would have to borrow that money from foreign capital, as has been the case, without exception, in establishing new governments.

It is the case in South American governments and it was the case in our own. Suppose it should borrow that money from German capitalists, let us say, or English capitalists, as was done by the Central American governments, and the money or interest thereon was to fall due and could not be collected; and under the rights of nations the power whose citizens loaned that money went to take possession of the ports of the Philippines and took charge of the collection of taxes, as has so often been the case and which is really the administration of the government; would the Senator have the United States maintain troops there in order to prevent the collection of that just debt? Yet that is what we should have to do under the Senator's proposition unless we guaranteed the debt itself.

These, Mr. President, are just one or two of the manifold practical propositions which confront the Senator when he proposes some general, nebulous plan which sounds well in words and works execrably in practice.

Mr. MONEY. I can not tell which part of that speech I am expected to answer.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Both parts, Mr. President.

Mr. MONEY. I can not recollect; there were so many shots fired by volley and fired by file, and there was so much fire and fall back in it that I can not tell exactly what I am to answer.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not intend the Senator to escape an answer to that question, for the reason that it is practically the proposition presented in the last campaign, and therefore I asked him in two sections. He said he would not have the troops kept there to maintain the government against the dissensions of its own people, but merely against the interference of a foreign power. Now, the interference of a foreign power usually comes in one way.

They would have to present a justifiable excuse to the public opinion of the world. They do that, Mr. President. I have named one method which they usually adopt in the example of a debt and its collection. Now, I ask the Senator, would he have the United States maintain those troops there for the purpose of preventing a foreign government from collecting money which its citizens had loaned?

Mr. MONEY. Now, I understand that much. The Senator had better stop before I forget it. If he goes on further, I will not recollect anything he has stated.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am not responsible for the Senator's memory any more than I am for his logic.

Mr. MONEY. That is all right. I think I can suffer under that opinion without any loss of self-respect. I am quite able to bear the criticism of the Senator from Indiana. It is not often that I am reprimanded in that sort of way, although reprimand seems to be the style of the day.

I will go on, then, to say, just as though I had not been interrupted by a speech, that I would not undertake to keep troops to protect these people from improvident debt or any other sort of debt or the collection of debt. It is true we made an agreement with Cuba that they were not to make any debt which they could not pay out of the revenues as they accrued and that would not meet our approval, and so on. We put them under a sort of tutelage that is quite possible in this island, though I think those people would come to almost any terms to get rid of the Americans.

They were willing to do anything to get rid of the Spanish, and they certainly would come to even the Platt amendment or something similar if it was necessary to secure the evacuation by the American troops of the positions they hold in the island. I quite understand that. I would be unwilling, however, to keep troops there for any determined length of time. The Senator probably is aware—if he is not I will tell him—that these debts are very rarely for to-morrow. Bonds are usually for a pretty long time, and the way that nations borrow money is upon bonds. It would be quite a stretch of time, probably, before any bonds would be due.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The interest would be due almost immediately, would it not?

Mr. MONEY. The Senator will allow me to finish my sentence, please. It might be then that something would happen, as with the British when they took possession of the customs of Mexico to pay what is called the $50,000,000 gold loan there. So some government in Europe or elsewhere that had loaned those people might find it necessary to come in and make a subvention of the customs dues for the payment of the interest on their bonds. But we can conjecture any number of difficulties without the ability to meet them all in detail, and we will do well in our statesmanship if we contend with the circumstances as they arise.

I recollect that one of the wisest of English statesmen, after an experience of sixty-three years in Parliament, said that after all his experience he had concluded that statesmanship was just doing the best he could under the circumstances; and certainly that man, called "the trimmer," who three times rescued Great Britain from her difficulties, Sir William Temple, was called "the trimmer" because he had no particular definite policy, but was always doing the best he could under the circumstances. So in this case I would do the best I could under the circumstances. I would cut loose from such entanglement as has been brought upon us by the action of the Congress of the United States. This Senate brought it about by its vote on the Spanish treaty. If there had been a change of two votes, we should not have had this difficulty.

Mr. BATE. Oh, no; one vote.

Mr. MONEY. No; two votes. A change of two votes would have dissipated all this difficulty which we are now in the midst of.

We have thrust ourselves, by seizing the Philippines, into the vortex of future storms in oriental seas; we directly face southern China, which is the object of schemes for exploitation and dismemberment, to which schemes we must assent or dissent. If there is anything in the prospect to-day that is difficult, it is that. I wish to ask the gentlemen who want to hold the Philippine Islands what would happen if we should unfortunately engage in war with any European nation? I want to say that war is an incident in the life of every independent nation. You can not fortell it; you can only be prepared to meet it; and that is the part of wisdom which we inherit from George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, and all the other statesmen who guided us in our infancy.

You all know there is great danger of war looming up. Three years ago the note of alarm was sounded by the Austrian Premier, and every chancelrie in Europe advocated a general bund against overwhelming American invasion of trade and traffic. The alarm was taken up and constantly propositions are being suggested and entertained to make a wall around us, such as Henry C. Carey, an original protectionist, said he wished to God could be put around the United States; but the protectionist does not want any wall now, except a wall that will let our products go out and prevent everybody's else products from coming in. They wanted the home market and got it, and now want the foreign market and a high protective tariff, which will enable them to sell at their own price here, and to sell at a lower price abroad, to meet competition.

This tariff war means bread and meat for the working people of Europe. This invasion of American manufactures and raw products is to-day exciting Europe from her core to her cuticle. Not only that, but it is the history of mankind that wars of armed men are brought about by wars of tariff and wars of commerce. When they can not get what they think is right, or can not get what they think is to their advantage, even though it is not right, then an appeal to arms is the next thing. If we go on to-day, as is proposed, endeavoring to sell to everybody and to buy from nobody, and then not permit the purchaser to carry home in his own ships the products which he buys, we may look for a real as well as a tariff war.

Suppose, Senators, we have this war. It is not improbable, I will not say impossible, that within a few years we may have this war. We have got the Philippines. What shall we do with them? You have 70,000 soldiers already there, according to the Senator from Massachusetts, with the archipelago practically pacified, as we are assured in daily dispatches. These dispatches are very amusing. They remind me of those which came every morning a year or so ago: "The situation well in hand; casualties, so many killed and wounded." That is what the dispatches said almost every morning for about a year.

Suppose we were to engage in a war with any of the first powers of Europe, or, still worse, with any two of them, then what should we do? Instead of 70,000 soldiers, we should have to keep 100,000 in the Philippines, for that would be the point of attack, and instead of having a squadron of eight or ten ships there, we should require one-half of the American Navy as it at present exists. Then, you have got to keep an army in Porto Rico; you have got to put ships and battalions where they never were before.

You have not got the army here, and you will strip this country and leave it naked and defenseless before its foes in order that you may protect these outlying insular dependencies by military occupation. You have got it to do; you can not give them up; your prestige is gone; your pride humbled; your shield is tarnished. You can not do that, and you will be damned by the whole American people if you permit it. You must send troops and ships there. Then, who is going to defend the United States? You will have to call out volunteers. They would come. Five millions or ten millions, if necessary, of the patriotic sons of America would fly to arms to protect the integrity of her territory and resent any insult to her flag.

But they would not yet be soldiers; they would be a mob animated by patriotism and courage, which are the common characteristics of Americans, ready to die, if need be, yet they would not be an organized force that could meet the legions of Europe; and with our coasts stripped and our ships sent to these distant possessions, with our soldiers sent abroad to defend our possessions, whom could we have to meet the trained soldiers landed here by the combined fleets of two of the powers of Europe? We would be left defenseless.

I tell you, Senators, if this policy is persisted in you must make your Army 500,000 strong and make your Navy equal to any in Europe, except that of Great Britain; equal to that of France, which is the second naval power of the world. We must have a spirit infused into that Navy, not of jealousy and bickering, but of emulation. We do not want a fight between the barnacles of the Department and the fighting men who are afloat. We have got to have officers working in concord for the good of the service; we have got to have the old fighting spirit infused into the Navy; we have got to have the trained men. I want to ask you what sort of a burden is to be laid upon the American people? It is nothing but the part of wisdom to provide for that very thing.

I can recollect of a debate in the House of Representatives, if I may be permitted to make an allusion to something that happened elsewhere. I was in favor of building up the Navy. I recollect that one of the most distinguished men the Democratic party ever had in that House—the Speaker—said if the nation would behave itself it would not need a navy and would not need to quarrel. But it does not take two to be wrong in order to start a quarrel. One man can be affronted; one nation can be wronged and yet be entirely in the right, and appeal to arms. It is one of the necessities of the case. So you must consider, if you are going to keep up the policy of having a President appoint a lot of people, who are responsible to nobody but to him under the circuit of the sun, you may just as well arrange now to have an army of 500,000 men and a fleet able to cope with any in Europe, leaving out that of Great Britain.

We are about undertaking to build a new isthmian canal. How many ships will be required to watch that canal? Since Congress met Great Britain has put another man-of-war on the Caribbean and the Atlantic stations. She already had 13 first-class cruisers and battle ships there. She has two of the greatest dockyards and naval depots on this hemisphere—one at Kingston, Jamaica, looking directly into the canal, and the other in Santa Lucia, of the Windward group.

It is idle for us to sit here and frame laws, not to govern, but to oppress another people; not to confer liberty, but to deny it; not to extend free principles, but to circumscribe and restrict them; not to confer human rights, but to take them away, and that with no protestation which any man has yet made before this Senate—none whatever in any sense—but it is always put on the sordid commercial plane, not the moral plane certainly, not even upon the plane of international right. We are in that position.

If this policy is to be continued, I am going to support the American flag and the American Army and the American Navy, whatever the country does. I am, as a citizen, loyal, and I shall do all I can to maintain its honor. But are we to be prevented here, where we are deliberating upon questions of public policy, for fear that somebody in power will be offended or that any man shall call us traitor, from declaring that which, in our opinion, is the best for the future of the American people, let come what may to the Filipinos or anybody else upon this planet? We are not concerned as to them, and we know it to be a hypocritical pretense to assert the contrary.

I make no concealment of my indifference particularly, except, as I said, that I wish every people might govern themselves. But I am speaking for the American people and not for the Filipinos. Some Senators do not seem to understand how we can get up here and debate the Philippine question without in some way or other being in sympathy with them and losing sympathy with our own flesh and blood. I have a son-in-law fighting in the Philippines. He is in Batangas Province. He has been in every solitary one of the fights there. He has already served two years there.

I have a daughter and a grandchild there. I do not want to see them killed or hurt; but I propose a measure which is not going to be adopted; I propose a measure which perhaps the minority here will not adopt; but I propose one that good morals will approve; I propose one that good common sense and statesmanship will advocate and justify, which is that we should simply attend to our own business and not interfere with the affairs of other people. When we do interfere with them, let it be done beneficently and upon proper grounds, and let us not put the frozen hand upon a people and chill them to the very heart, but the hand that brings with it blessings like the sun, to vivify and to restore.

We have the power to do anything we please, but when we attempt to shelter ourselves behind such catchwords and senseless phrases as "destiny" and "Providence," and all that sort of thing, how ridiculous we make ourselves in the eyes of everybody. Destiny is what you do yourself, not what some superior power makes you do. There is no such thing as that irresistible and inexorable power which the old Greeks called "fate" pursuing a nation or a man. It is what the nation does; it is what the man does. He makes his destiny. No destiny is put upon us; but we have assumed it; we have grasped at it; we have taken it greedily; we have taken it without regard to the rights of others concerned; we have taken it in violation of faith toward our allies in the contest for liberty. That is what we have done.

As for Providence putting those islands in our hands, is that true? If so, then Providence

> Moves in a mysterious way
> His wonders to perform.

They say that Providence put the Filipinos in our hands. Is that true? Why, Senators, how many votes did it take to carry the treaty by which we acquired the Philippine Islands? What was the motive and inducement that made a change in certain votes? I am not going to cast imputation upon the motives of Senators. I am respecting the motives of men, but I know what men said to me. One said to me he would rot here in his chair before he would vote for the treaty. He came to me the next morning and said he would have to vote for it, because he could not vote against the treaty when American soldiers had been fired on at Manila. I said to him that was a sham concern, and that it ought not to affect his vote on the treaty.

Of course there was not very much in that little fight there, but it brought about the ratification of the treaty. There is one vote accounted for. Another gentleman said he would never, so long as he lived, vote for the treaty; but he did. He changed his mind over night. Did these two Senators represent Divine Providence or not? Let us get away from this cant about destiny. It is too silly to fool a child. Do not talk about Providence, because there are people who do not care anything about religion, or God either, but assume that you are responsible for what you have yourself done. You have done this deed. Now, then, did it pay to do it? What is the compensation coming to the American people for the expenditure of a million and a half dollars a week and for the loss of life in Luzon and Samar?

When Senators said they wanted that treaty ratified so as to bring the volunteers home, I said, "You close one war that lasted two or three months to begin another that will last longer than you and your children. You saved the lives of a few volunteers in Cuba, but how about the thousands of American citizens in the jungles of Luzon?" Have not my words, which are in the RECORD, been verified? It did not take any great amount of prevision to see that. The only astonishing thing is that a blind man could not see it. But there is a sort of intellectual strabismus here that can not look at anything straight. You refused to see the facts; you refused to acknowledge the facts.

We have a duty, as I consider, to our constituents, not to the Filipinos, except in so far as it is the duty of every man and of every nation not to oppress or wrong anybody. Every writer on international law that ever I have seen—and I think I have read nearly everyone of them—has declared that a state or a sovereign is a moral person with obligations to act morally, to live under the Golden Rule, if you please, to "do unto others as you would have others do unto you." Are we acting like a moral person in this business?

Are we acting like a common-sense business man in this matter? Where is the income, where is the dividend on your expenditure of fifty or sixty million dollars a year, and where is your income upon the lives which have been wasted in the jungles and the mountains of Luzon, of Samar, of Palawan, and of Iloilo—where are they? When are we to get our returns? We are getting it in the hatred of the American name; we are getting it in the maledictions of a people who have never wronged us; we are getting it in the curses of the outraged, which very often represent the curses of Divinity itself. No man can afford to do wrong, and no nation can afford to do wrong. Punishment will come sooner or later.

> Though the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small.

Some day we shall have to pay for this, unless we repent ourselves of the course we have taken and essay to do right. In the pride of her power Rome thought that she was eternal. She sent out her colonies all over the world, not to oppress, but to give laws, to create homes. Wherever the Roman influence spread there the ancient Roman law was in the exercise of its justice, and the colonies that were planted were not simply military occupations. The word colonus means husbandman, and her colonists tilled the earth and taught the natives the civilization of Rome; but nowhere was there any interference with the religion or with the local laws or the local customs of the people.

Nobody talked then about any theories of government for them other than they alredy enjoyed. The same may be said of the Greeks and of every other colonizing people of the world, except those of modern date, whose colonization is not colonization providing homesteads for settlers, as we named them, but it is simply military conquest, military subjugation, military occupation and possession, All this springs from greed of money or of military glory. And we, in this efflorescent period of the world's history and growth and civilization, standing in the forefront of all that is Christian and religious and good and useful to mankind, have turned ourselves back and traversed the glorious record of one and a quarter centuries, to impose our rule upon a people about whom we have not the slightest concern in the world.

There was a seismic disturbance in the Orient a few years ago, when 400,000 people were drowned in the sea, and yet there was not a man in the Senate who lost his breakfast or shed a tear. If one year before the Spanish war or two weeks before it the whole Philippine Archipelago had sunk down into the bosom of the briny deep, it would not have troubled us a particle. We were not concerned so much for good government and better government there and better religion there, and so on, and we would not have allowed it to disturb the commonest business transaction of our lives. How shallow is all this cant! How puerile and transparent it is! The wonder is that men of character and ability will repeat these phrases like parrots, without undertaking to analyze or to scan them.

Mr. President, I did not get up to make a speech, but I got up here to address myself, as I thought, for a few minutes, but these questions have led me on and on until I have gone much further than I intended; but I want to say here now deliberately, responsible to my constituents, that I shall support the American Army and the American Government wherever it may be. I am for my country whether it be right or wrong. In this case I am of the decided conviction, and I believe nothing can move me from it, that we are wrong. I express that conviction in the best manner I am capable of, not to dishearten anybody or to encourage the Filipinos, but to lead the Senate and the American people who will read my words to some sober conclusion about this matter and not follow the ignis fatuus of military glory into morasses which are dangerous. We do not want the American nation to become a byword and a hissing among those who want freedom.

Never before in the history of any government, in a struggle for freedom like that which the Boers have waged, have we ever refrained from an expression of sympathy and of all the moral support that could be given. In this Chamber and in the other, on the forum, on the hustings, in the pulpit, through the press, in town meetings, wherever the American people could find a voice to speak, they said: "We sympathize with people struggling for liberty." We have not said a word for the Boers. There never was a cause more just than theirs. There never was a more flagrant outrage upon a nation than the attempt of the greatest Empire in the world to suppress the two smallest Republics, with not a shadow of title nor a shadow of right or of justice or of morals, nothing but simple greed—greed for the gold mines of the Witswater and, just as they, through the same greed, robbed the Boers of the Kimberly diamond mines.

Have we got any moral right to continue this business, having begun wrong? Whenever a man finds he is doing wrong, the time to correct it is now, right now, and not to wait until something will happen, not to wait until somebody has done something else. When a man tells me I am wrong, I stop; I do not say I am wrong, but I can not quit until somebody else does something else. To say we are in the wrong, but that we can not quit doing wrong because the Filipinos will not do something that we say is right; in other words, surrender their arms without any pour parler about it, without any invitation to come, without any assurance that there would be the establishment of a better government there or any other sort of government. We do not tell them that. We do not wait for anything of the sort. Suppose George Washington had been obliged to surrender his arms at the close of the Revolution because the King of France or somebody else did not think we could govern ourselves, how long would Mr. Washington have been in the woods fighting the King of France? Until the last man perished, because that is the American blood. It is a different thing from the Malay blood. We are capable of great exertion.

In all the history of the United States, as I have said, until this hour there never failed to come an expression from both Houses of Congress, from the executive department, and from the people in all their different functions to proclaim the sympathy of the United States to a struggling people. Yet we are as dumb as oysters when the Boer question is brought up here. Why? Because the pot can not call the kettle black. We are in the same business as Great Britain. We have gone back on our professions and our practices. We to-day have joined the ranks of the other side. We have gone to the robber plan—

Sufficeth them—the simple plan
That they should take who have the power,
And they should keep who can.

That is our platform now so far as foreign countries are concerned—that is, foreign countries that we can whip. We are very prudent not to give a better government to Ireland, or to Hungary, or to Armenia. We do not seem to be concerned whether they have good or bad government, or any other kind of government. If they should sink, I do not think it would disturb the Senate a particle.

I recollect a few years ago that a very distinguished minister from Mexico, who is now dead, wrote a series of historical articles in the North American Review, and he cited one instance where, after the revolt of several of the Spanish colonies, the United States of Colombia and Mexico prepared a cooperating invading force to enter the island of Cuba and raise the standard of revolt against the Spanish Crown, but that they were compelled to desist by the assurance of Mr. Clay, the Secretary of State, that the United States would not permit it to be done. He made the remark that Mr. Clay did that because the slave faction in the United States dictated that sort of reply to those envoys of revolution and liberty.

I happened to be sick at the time, but I was called upon by the editor of that magazine and asked if I would not answer it, which I did to the best of my ability, and I showed pretty conclusively that Mr. Clay was the Secretary of John Quincy Adams, the man who presented the first abolition petition to the House of Representatives, that the slave faction had nothing to do with it, but that Mr. Clay had expressed himself that the United States in its business could not afford to see the fertile island of Cuba lying close to our shores devastated and laid waste, and that was the reason the United States would not permit the invasion of Cuba.

I think I proved conclusively that there was not a single struggle, from Patagonia up to the Rio Grande, where we had not even sent commissioners to hunt up their peripatetic capitals to find somebody in authority with whom we could treat, with whom we could enter into some sort of commercial alliance, and whose independence and belligerent rights we would acknowledge. I think I have proven that conclusively.

I want to ask Senators on that side, suppose to-day there was a struggle of some people against their lawful sovereign, their legitimate sovereign, do you suppose the United States could afford to sympathize with them or pass any resolutions in either House of Congress or do anything to encourage them? Why, sir, the fire that is held aloft by the Goddess of Liberty, telling the world that this is a harbor of refuge, a state of safety, is nothing now but a "bale fire on the rocks, telling all comers that approach is danger and contact is death."

We no longer stand as exemplars of liberty. We have cast our lot with the other people of the world who have taken by military force and subjugated people with whom they had no concern. We can not complain since we have taken that attitude that the world places us where we place ourselves. Just as society places every man where he places himself, so nations place nations where they place themselves. We have voluntarily assumed a new rôle that is contrary to all our history, all our traditions, contrary to all our teaching, contrary to the principles of every political party that ever flourished in this country. We undertake a new rôle, that of subjugator, and contemporary with the passage of this treaty, by which we purchased 10,000,000 people for $20,000,000, the Senate passed a solemn resolution defining its policy and defining the policy of the Government, so far as it goes. That resolution declared that this conquered territory, this purchased territory, whichever it may be, according to your pleasure, shall never be an integral part of the territory of the United States and that these people shall never be citizens of the United States.

Do we want 10,000,000 people who are never to be citizens? Do we want 127,000 square miles of islands that are never to be territory of the United States? If the Constitution does not follow the flag, is it never to get to the place? Is the bill of rights, without which Thomas Jefferson said the Constitution was a failure, to be denied to the people who live under the ægis of the American Government?

When we come to talk about constitutions here we are told—it has been denied by my friend the Senator from Ohio that the gentleman ever said it was worn out and played out, and I am very glad to hear it—that we can do anything we choose as a nation.

My distinguished friend, the Senator from Ohio, who is so able in debate on this floor, and so profound a lawyer, and so bad an exponent of the Constitution, in my opinion, if he will permit me to say it, has said that we have all the power intrinsically and inherently that any other government has. The trouble is that Senators do not seem to be able to distinguish between a nation and a government. There is no question but that this great American nation, extending from ocean to ocean and from the lakes to the Gulf, enjoying insular possessions outside, as a nation, with 80,000,000 people and untold wealth, can do anything that any other nation on earth can do. But how does a nation govern itself? The government and the nation are two entirely distinct things.

This nation says it will govern itself according to the Constitution and the government which that Constitution provides, and nobody here that has a right to speak for the nation and say that the Constitution and the Government that the nation has set up for its own rule can be done away with. There is no power in the Government of the United States to violate the Constitution. There is a power in the nation to change it, to repeal it, to set up anything instead it chooses. That is the inherent right of any nation; it is the inalienable right of any nation, which it can not grant away, but to say that this Government can violate the Constitution which gives it being is simply a contradiction in terms. We can only do that which we are permitted to do, and the nation has spoken when it says "so far shalt thou go and no farther," in the language of the Constitution which has been imposed upon us and of which we are the creatures, and we can do no more than that.

Now, all these inherent powers are in the nation, but the nation is governing itself by a government, and that government is defined in a constitution, and the mode of changing that constitution is prescribed therein. The Constitution is declared to be the supreme law of the land. What land? Any land over which the flag flies—land in the Philippines and in Porto Rico and Hawaii, as well as in Maine and Massachusetts, Mississippi and Louisiana; the deck of a ship in midocean; land wherever its envoys, ministers, plenipotentiaries, ambassadors, or any other officer floats the Stars and Stripes. That is the land over which the Constitution is the supreme law. There is no limit except in the jurisdiction of the United States; and yet we are doing things here that not only are not in consonance, but are absolutely discordant with the provisions of the Constitution, upon the ground that as a nation we have all the rights that any other nation has. That is true. But that does not give us the right to violate the form of government which the nation has imposed for its own government to establish peace, justice, and tranquillity.

I do not know about what this debate arose this morning.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. On a newspaper clipping which was read as a matter of personal privilege.

Mr. MONEY. The bill is up for consideration. I have been speaking in a rather inconsequential way about this matter as it came up in my mind, and I have not been addressing myself particularly to the pending bill. The question of the Senator from Maine, however, has led me to give my views upon the question which should address itself to the intelligence of the people of the United States and the Senate, as to how to make a composition which I thought would insure peace and tranquillity to ourselves and incidentally to the people of the Philippines. It is not impossible. It is the easiest thing to do in the world. In fact, it is always easy to do right, and it is the most inexpensive mode of conduct that can be suggested. It does not tax people to do right. There is no blood shed in doing right. There is no immorality in doing right, and there is the approval of a good conscience.

We have taken possession of these islands, and there may be a pride which will restrain us from withdrawing from an unfinished business. There may be some sort of amour propre, and it might be said, "You tried and could not do it." But this people is big enough and great enough and rich enough and powerful enough and magnanimous enough to do what is right and let the minor things take care of themselves. We need fear no man's reproach. We are thrice armed if our ground is just.

Mr. President, I expect to vote for the minority report. I have not examined it carefully. I did not examine it carefully because I did not think it made much difference. I do not care how good it is, it will be voted down. I want to vote for it because I know necessarily from my experience here it is better than the bill—that anything would be better than the bill. Therefore I shall give it my vote, while not thoroughly approving the method. There are a great many things I would have left out and some things I would have inserted. But I can not vote for my own proposition, and I am going to vote for the best I can get. It is a choice, perhaps, between two evils. At any rate, I want to cast my vote with that side which is laboring for peace, for good will, for concord, for justice, and for morality.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, there is no time now for a full and complete answer to the remarks of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], and I do not desire to attempt it at this time. Perhaps at some future day I may desire to follow him in what he has said; but I do not wish this occasion to pass without expressing my emphatic dissent to what I understood to be the principle upon which his whole remarks have been founded.

I understand that he does not deny our right as a nation to acquire the Philippine Islands; that he does not deny our title there; that he does not deny our right of sovereignty there; but that whenever the people of the Philippine Islands say they desire independence, it is the right and duty of the American people to give it to them.

Mr. President, that is a doctrine to which this Government can not subscribe. To subscribe to that doctrine goes much further than the Philippine Islands. If we have the right to acquire territory by conquest or by purchase, or by both, it is stultifying ourselves to say that it becomes our right and duty to surrender that territory immediately the people thereof demand their independence. No nation can live in that way. If it applies to the Philippine Islands, it applies to every foot of territory which we have ever acquired and upon which we have not now erected a State.

It applies with equal force to Alaska as to the Philippine Islands—Alaska which we can reach only by water, which we acquired by purchase, in which we have never erected that form of government which is popularly known as a territorial government. Suppose the people of Alaska to-day demand independence and put themselves in arms against the United States to secure that independence, claiming that they are entitled to their liberty and to independence, and flaunt the Declaration of Independence in our face and say that they are struggling for liberty.

Will the Senator from Mississippi, will any Senator on the other side of the Chamber, say that it then becomes the right and the duty of the United States to give up Alaska to the people of Alaska, to let them establish there an independent Government, free from our jurisdiction, free from our sovereignty, and over which we have no control?

It applies equally to Porto Rico as to the Philippines. We reach Porto Rico by sea. It is an island of the sea, as the Philippine Archipelago is constituted of islands of the sea. Suppose that the people of Porto Rico to-day, dissatisfied with the manner in which we are governing them, revolt and say, "Give us independence. We propose to have our liberty. We will not longer submit to the authority or sovereignty of the United States." Does the Senator go so far as to say that it then becomes the duty of the United States to withdraw from Porto Rico, to drop it, to use the term which has been used here to-day, to allow them to set up an independent government, in defiance of the authority of the United States, in opposition to its claim of sovereignty?

You may go still further. You may go to the Territory of New Mexico, which we acquired both by conquest and by purchase, and we as much bought the people of New Mexico as we have bought the people of the Philippines. Nay, more; we promised them that we would incorporate them into the Union, and fifty-three long years have passed and they have not yet been incorporated into the Union.

Suppose that, wearied with this delay and under a sense of injustice and struggling for liberty, they organize a revolt there and defy the authority of the United States in arms and attack the court-houses and the other places where the United States authority is maintained. They would be struggling for liberty in the view which the Senator from Mississippi takes of it, but he would be the first man to vote to authorize an increase in the Army of the United States, if it were necessary, to proceed there and put down that revolt and to maintain the ascendancy and the sovereignty of the United States there.

No, Mr. President, the argument proceeds upon a false premise. There is no such right and duty upon us. The right and duty upon us when we acquire territory is plain and simple. It is to govern that territory as may best subserve our interests and the interests of the people occupying that territory, and in consonance with the principles which we have established for our Government. That is the right and duty of the United States, of our Government, of our nation. And there is no distinction to be drawn between a nation and a government. The government is the nation. It is false logic, it is sophistry to say that a nation has a right to do this, but the government has not.

Now, Mr. President, I am not going into a discussion of what we have done or what we have failed to do in the Philippine Islands, but I could not let this opportunity pass without saying that I thought the argument of the Senator from Mississippi proceeded upon an assumption which could not be maintained if we were to maintain the existence of our nation.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MONEY. I should be very glad to have the privilege of asking a question of the distinguished Senator from Connecticut before he takes his seat.

Mr. CULLOM. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MONEY. It is pertinent to the matter he has just been discussing. If the Government is the nation, and I suppose he means it in the sense that it can do anything it pleases, I ask him what mean the ninth and tenth amendments to the Constitution, which say that all powers not therein granted to the Federal Government are reserved to the States and the people thereof.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That would be a long argument to enter into, but I can say here that I believe that this nation and this Government—for I think they are synonymous in terms and identical—has power which is not specifically enumerated in the Constitution. In all its dealings with foreign powers it has, from the day when it was organized, exercised power for which no specific grant can be found in the Constitution. I might go further and say that we have both a written Constitution and an unwritten Constitution.

We may do many things which are not written in the body of the Constitution in plain and specific language, going back for our authority to the conditions which existed before the Constitution was formed, resting upon decisions of courts which have been made since the Constitution was formed; and that clause which says that all powers not enumerated in the Constitution are reserved to the people of the States, to my mind was limited to the questions which should arise between the General Government and a State government. To take any other view of that amendment of the Constitution is to shear our Government and shear our nation of the full authority which attaches to governments and to nations.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask the Senator from Connecticut one more question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAPP in the chair). The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. CULLOM. There is a considerable amount of executive business which should be transacted.

Mr. MONEY. The question is a very short one. I will ask the Senator, assuming his statement to be correct that the nation and the Government are one, why does the Constitution provide a way for its own amendment? If the nation can already do all things, why provide a way to amend the Constitution?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It seems to me that question ought to answer itself.

Mr. MONEY. It does to my mind.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Every constitution provides for its own amendment. It must necessarily do so.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me for a minute?

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I will not trespass upon the time of the Senate unduly. I should be glad, if I had more time, to express my entire concurrence with the argument just made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], but I content myself, under the circumstances, with putting into the RECORD, in answer to the statement made by the Senator from Mississippi that we are governing in the Philippines in violation of the Constitution and in violation of the Bill of Rights, the organic law, if I may so call it, under which the Commission known as the Taft Commission has been legislating and proceeding in those islands. The paragraphs I shall have read, in order that they may appear in the RECORD, are some of the instructions given by President McKinley to the Taft Commission under date of April 7, 1900. I will ask the Secretary to read them.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the Senator to permit me to say a word before that is done. I did not say that they were acting in violation of the Bill of Rights nor in violation of the Constitution, but that the Constitution was not there to provide that they should not. That is what I meant to say. That is the meaning I attempted to convey.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood the Senator from Mississippi to say, in substantially these words, that all we were doing in the Philippines was not only in violation of the Constitution, but especially in violation of the Bill of Rights.

Mr. MONEY. I said——

Mr. FORAKER. I want the paragraphs read, at any rate.

Mr. MONEY. I said if they were disregarded there is no tribunal before whom the violaters could be held responsible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary proceeded to read the extract.

Mr. CULLOM. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that he allow the remaining paragraphs to be inserted in the RECORD without being read.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; I have no objection. What follows is simply an enumeration of the Bill of Rights.

The matter referred to is as follows:

In all the forms of government and administrative provisions which they are authorized to prescribe the Commission should bear in mind that the government which they are establishing is designed not for our satisfaction or for the expression of our theoretical views, but for the happiness, peace, and prosperity of the people of the Philippine Islands, and the measures adopted should be made to conform to their customs, their habits, and even their prejudices to the fullest extent consistent with the accomplishment of the indispensable requisites of just and effective government.

At the same time the Commission should bear in mind, and the people of the islands should be made plainly to understand, that there are certain great principles of government which have been made the basis of our governmental system, which we deem essential to the rule of law and the maintenance of individual freedom, and of which they have, unfortunately, been denied the experience possessed by us; that there are also certain practical rules of government which we have found to be essential to the preservation of these great principles of liberty and law, and that these principles and these rules of government must be established and maintained in their islands for the sake of their liberty and happiness, however much they may conflict with the customs or laws of procedure with which they are familiar. It is evident that the most enlightened thought of the Philippine Islands fully appreciates the importance of these principles and rules, and they will inevitably within a short time command universal assent. Upon every division and branch of the government of the Philippines, therefore, must be imposed these inviolable rules:

That no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation; that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation, to be confronted with the witnesses against him, to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense; that excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted; that no person shall be put twice in jeopardy for the same offense or be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself; that the right to be secure against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated; that neither slavery nor involuntary servitude shall exist except as a punishment for crime; that no bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed; that no law shall be passed abridging the freedom of speech or of the press or of the rights of the people to peaceably assemble and petition the Government for a redress of grievances; that no law shall be made respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and that the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference shall forever be allowed.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. I send to the desk an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

The amendment proposed to be submitted by Mr. SPOONER is as follows:

Insert the following after the word "prescribe," in line 23, page 4, of the printed bill: "and all taxes paid upon such articles shipped to the Philippine Islands since May 1, 1901, under the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury of that date shall be refunded to the parties who have paid the same, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and a sum sufficient to make such payment is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. CULLOM. I now yield to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] for a few moments, and after that I hope no Senator will ask me to yield further.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Illinois, and I assure him that I shall not occupy much time.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] saw fit to lecture me on the proprieties, and it seems to me it was totally uncalled for. There is no difference of opinion between the Senator and myself. I think we quite fully agree. I do not care to lecture him or to say anything offensive, but it is absurd to advance the proposition that I would reprimand General Wheaton for things that he has not done. If he has not said what is attributed to him, my reprimand, of course, does not lie against him; but I was careful, I think, to ascertain the facts before I made my statement.

The Associated Press people here say that that dispatch came straight from Manila; that their man there is very painstaking and very careful, and that he would lose his head instantly if he sent a dispatch quoting General Wheaton or anybody else and misrepresented them. Every Senator on this floor knows that the Associated Press does not put into the mouths of men words which they do not utter. Every one of us is represented by newspaper correspondents, but I venture the assertion that none of us was ever misrepresented or misquoted when the language was set forth with accuracy or pretended accuracy by the Associated Press. I am quite sure of that.

I do object, however, to Army officers attempting to coerce the legislative branch of the Government. I say it is offensive to the spirit of our institutions. It is not their province to undertake to coerce the legislative branch of the Government. This is not the only time it has occurred. They are quoted right often reprehending us for some contemplated action. I agree fully with the Senator from Wisconsin that my criticism of General Wheaton does not lie if he did not say these things, but it is quite apparent to me that he did.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 28, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege, if not a privileged question; and it grows out of an incorrect report (with all deference to our splendid corps of reporters) of a colloquy between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and myself on January 23, reported on page 948 of the RECORD, and upon an article in the Morning Times based upon that incorrect report, headed as follows:

Fooled "Uncle JOE" CANNON. How Mr. GAINES used his leave to print privilege.

I dare say the Speaker remembers that this request was made, as the report shows, at the very end of the day's session, while the House was in confusion. The Speaker will further remember that I had to repeat my request to the Speaker in order that he might put it to the House, so great was the confusion. There is no report in the RECORD made, Mr. Speaker, of the request of the Chair for me to repeat my request or of the fact that I did repeat it, but the report in the RECORD reads as though I made the request but once, and without any request from the Speaker that I repeat it. Hence, Mr. Speaker, in the confusion the proceedings were incorrectly reported.

Now, I will read the report as it appears in the RECORD, and I do not wish to do our reporters any injustice, because the error no doubt arose out of the confusion in the House at the time and they did the best they could. Nor do I feel willing that injustice should be done to me, as has been done. Here is the report:

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD some figures taken from the report of the Secretary of War touching the health, the number of deaths, and the condition of the troops in general in the Philippine Islands. This refers to the year 1901.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. CANNON. How voluminous is the document the gentleman wants to print?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, I imagine only about a page or two of the RECORD. It is not very long.

Mr. CANNON. The report of the Secretary of War shows these things the gentleman wants to publish, but if the gentleman is willing to bury it deeper in the RECORD I do not object. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? The Chair hears none.

Now, Mr. Speaker, amidst the laughter and amidst the confusion, owing to the fact that the House was about adjourning, I said, as those around me will bear testimony:

I can not tell how many pages it will take; it will take several.

And I held up at the same time what I desired to put in the RECORD, so that those who wished to see it could do so.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, the article—the report of Surgeon-General Sternberg—as printed in the RECORD, occupies 10 or 12 pages; I have not counted, but there are quite a number of pages, a good many more than I thought there would be.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, this article, which says I took advantage of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois and "fooled" him—a remarkable accomplishment, I may add, if it were done—is based upon the incorrect report of my words—that is, that I said the article would occupy only "a page or two." On the contrary, I said that it would take several pages; I did not know how many, and, as I have already remarked, I held up the document for the observation of the House.

Mr. Speaker, the article published in the Times, is based, as stated, upon the incorrect report of my language as it reads in the RECORD which I have just read. The Times says:

Hereafter when Representative GAINES of Tennessee desires to have anything published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under the "leave to print," "Uncle JOE" CANNON proposes to see that it is properly edited with a blue pencil.

The other day, during the discussion over the Philippine question, while the urgent deficiency bill was under consideration, Mr. GAINES asked unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some mortuary and health statistics of the soldiers in the islands. Mr. CANNON wanted to know how voluminous the document was. "Oh, I imagine a page or two in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It is not very long."

I used no such language. Thus it will be seen that if the proceeding had been correctly reported in the RECORD, there would have been no basis for this article. Hence I desire to correct the RECORD. The Times continues:

Mr. CANNON thought as the statistics had appeared in the report of the Secretary of War, that it was sufficient, but at the request of Mr. GAINES "Uncle JOE" did not object.

The next day the statistics appeared. The RECORD showed that Mr. GAINES had a very feeble imagination and was a very poor hand in estimating space. Instead of "one or two pages of the RECORD," as he had estimated, the statistics covered 18 full pages, and these were made up of the most intricate and detailed tabular work. This little request of Mr. GAINES cost the Government $432. Now, when Mr. GAINES gets anything into the RECORD under the "leave-to-print" privilege, Mr. CANNON will see it first.

Now, Mr. Speaker, anybody can see in a moment in what light this places me. The Times bases its article, as I have stated, upon an incorrect report of what I have said, and undertakes to criticise me because the printing of the article which I asked leave to print, covering the entire report of the condition of our soldiers from their advent in the Philippine Islands down to the last fiscal year, cost $432. And, Mr. Speaker, I had this printed because it was official—because it was a document from Surgeon-General Sternberg, and because it contained the vital statistics showing the death list, the admission rate to the hospitals per thousand of strength, and the number of sick cases and the number of discharges in the hospitals in the Philippine Islands. I had it printed because I have been asked time after time in the House with reference to the death rate in the Philippines, the number of deaths, the number of cases admitted to the hospitals, the number of discharges, and, in my judgment, these figures would be of great value to the members of the House and to the country.

I find that the matter is considered so valuable that many gentlemen around me have asked me where I had been able to find these figures, and many inquiries were made outside with reference to the same.

Now, it seems to me, and it seemed to me when I asked to have this published, that this matter was of considerable public importance and justified the request I had made.

I will say, also, as to the question of mere dollars and cents that has been suggested, that it cost about $432 to publish this table; and in view of the fact that it has cost the American taxpayers over $100,000,000 to produce conditions in the Philippine Islands, that the huge sum of $432 is a small expense incurred in telling us all about how such conditions have been produced. This expense is an item of little importance in view of the information it gives this House and to the people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with this explanation—and that is all I wish to say—I desire to have the RECORD corrected, if it be necessary, to correspond with what I said as understood by gentlemen sitting around me at the time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, only a single word by way of answer to the gentleman from Tennessee. I do not know, of course, that anything is in order now, except by unanimous consent, touching this matter, nor is it material.

I recollect very well the controversy between myself and the gentleman from Tennessee, so far as I heard it standing in my place here, and submitting the interrogatory I did to the gentleman.

I glanced over the RECORD when it was published on the following day and it seemed to me to be correct. I saw nothing wrong, as I understood it, in the report of the official stenographers of debates. What the gentleman may have said, owing to the confusion, to modify his original request, I do not know; but, according to my recollection, the report is strictly in accordance with what I heard, and that is as far as I can go in regard to the matter.

But I will say this, Mr. Speaker, that if I had known that the document would have required, to publish it in the RECORD, the number of pages that seems to have been taken up by it, I should certainly have objected to its publication. Here are some 18 pages of tables—a costly character of work—which appear in the RECORD under the leave granted to the gentleman from Tennessee. For all practical purposes I take it that the first half page, which contains a digest of the following pages, would have accomplished the result the gentleman had in view. But, of course, I have nothing to do with that. According to my recollection the statement in the RECORD is just as the gentleman made it. If he made a subsequent statement it certainly was not heard by me.

Now, the RECORD ought to be as nearly as possible a history of the action taken by the House and what has been said by members in debate upon the floor of the House. There is, however, a leave to print granted to members owing to the great number which can not possibly be heard in the limited time at the disposal of the House, owing to the utter impossibility of all members being heard for an hour or two hours, as they may desire to be heard, which would necessarily, if allowed, take up all the time of the House. It seems to me that the printing ought to be in the greatest good faith, covering discussions that are before the House. It is not for me to criticise the gentleman. I did not know the newspaper article he spoke of had even been printed, did not know that any reference had been made to it in the public prints; but I do know that, so far as I heard the conversation and replied to it, whatever may have taken place that the gentleman thinks the reporter did not catch, I certainly did not catch. As reported it is substantially as I heard it touching that point. That is all I can say.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Speaker, a moment, if the Speaker pleases. The fact is that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] was seated right here, where my colleague is now sitting, and he heard every word I said, and verifies exactly my statements and called my attention to the fact that I had made the statement as before stated, and that I had been incorrectly reported in the RECORD. He did so the next day, after the House met. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] did not hear what I said, or did not hear all I said. I say he did not hear, evidently, all I said, owing to the applause that his remark caused and the confusion in the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Speaker, just a word, as the gentleman from Tennessee has mentioned my name. I was sitting by him. There was a great deal of confusion and noise, and I certainly heard him use the words "several pages" and saw him lift up the sheets of the report and run his thumb over the pages, so as to demonstrate the number of pages. There was a great deal of noise and confusion, and I am not surprised that the reporter did not catch all of his statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sees nothing before the House for action in this matter. The Chair remembers distinctly that there was an interlocutory talk between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES], and that the closing statement by the gentleman from Tennessee left the matter in doubt as to the amount of space that would be required. The Chair remembers that, and the Chair is unable to see any particular necessity for correcting the RECORD. If the gentleman feels that something should be added to carry out the idea that he was unable to say just how much space would be required, the Chair is quite willing to have it done.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want it understood that I never mislead anybody under any circumstances. I have never had cause to and never will.

RECEIVING SHIP VERMONT.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. FOSS], calls up a report from his committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill H. R. 2678.

A bill (H. R. 2678) to incorporate the Eastern Star Home for the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That Alcena Lamond, L. Cabell Williamson, and John A. Moyer, of the Grand Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star of the District of Columbia, and John F. O'Neill, of Ruth Chapter No. 1; Mary B. Okey, of Electa Chapter No. 2; Annie V. Yeatman, of Naomi Chapter No. 3; M. Ella Espey, of Martha Chapter No. 4; Clara Barnard, of Esther Chapter No. 5; Fred. J. Randolph, of Bethlehem Chapter No. 7; Henry G. Wagner, of Mizpah Chapter No. 8; Grace Holtzclaw, of Adah Chapter No. 9, and Matilda R. Sprague, of Areme Chapter No. 10, being the constituent chapters under the said Grand Chapter, and their successors to be selected in the manner hereinafter declared, representing the several bodies before named of the Order of the Eastern Star, be, and they are hereby, incorporated and made a body politic and corporate, in the District of Columbia, by the name of "The Eastern Star Home of the District of Columbia," and by that name may sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded in any court of law or equity of competent jurisdiction, and may have and use a common seal, and the same change at pleasure, and be entitled to use and exercise all the powers, rights, and privileges incident to such corporation.

SEC. 2. That the particular business and object of such corporation shall be to provide and maintain, under the direction of the Grand Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star of the District of Columbia, a home for needy and worthy master masons of this jurisdiction, their needy and worthy widows and orphans, and needy and worthy members of the Order of the Eastern Star of this jurisdiction and their needy and worthy orphans, under such rules and regulations as the board of directors, acting under said Grand Chapter, shall make and establish, not inconsistent with the laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the said corporation shall be capable of taking and holding real and personal estate by gift, purchase, or devise, which estate, real and personal, shall never be divided among the members of the said corporation, but shall descend to their successors duly elected and appointed in the manner hereinafter declared by the bodies they represent, for the promotion of the principles of the said corporation and the benevolent purposes of the Order of the Eastern Star; that the said corporation shall take and hold no more real estate than is necessary for the purposes of said home and its proper support, and to suitably and conveniently carry out the benevolent purposes for which this charter is granted; but that this provision shall not prevent said corporation from constructing suitable rooms or offices in connection with said home to rent, renting the same and receiving rent therefor, to be applied to the promotion of the principles and purposes aforesaid.

SEC. 4. That the government and direction of the affairs of the said corporation shall be invested in a board of directors consisting of the persons named in the first section of this act, representing the several bodies of the Order of the Eastern Star, and their successors, selected in the manner hereinafter declared by the Eastern Star bodies they represent, who shall hold their office for one year and until others are duly elected and qualified to take their places as directors; and the said directors shall elect one of their number to be president of the board, who shall also be president of the corporation, and shall elect a secretary from among their number, who shall also be secretary of the corporation, and they shall also choose a treasurer from their number, who shall give bond, with surety, to said corporation, in such sum as said directors may require, for the faithful discharge of his or her duties. A majority of the directors shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. In case of a vacancy in the board of directors by death, resignation, or otherwise of any director, the vacancy occasioned thereby shall be filled by the Eastern Star body represented by said director.

SEC. 5. That the directors shall have full power to make and prescribe such by-laws, rules, and regulations as they shall deem proper for the disposition and management of the property, estate, effects, and affairs of the said corporation not contrary to the charter or to the laws of the United States or to the laws and regulations of said Grand Chapter, and shall have power to alter or amend the same as the interests of the corporation in their opinion may require.

SEC. 6. That the Grand Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star of the District of Columbia shall be entitled, at its first annual election after the granting of this charter, and annually thereafter, to select by ballot three of its members as successors to the three persons then or last representing it as members of this corporation whose annual term expires next thereafter or which may have expired next before that time; that each of the constituent chapters named in the first section of this act shall be entitled, at its annual session, and annually thereafter, to select by ballot one of its members as a successor to the person then or last representing it as a member of this corporation whose annual term expires next thereafter or which may have expired next before that time, so that said corporation shall forever consist of three directors from the Grand Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star of the District of Columbia and one director from each of the constituent chapters under said Grand Chapter: Provided, however, That should any of the said several Eastern Star bodies named in the first section of this act surrender or forfeit its Eastern Star charter or warrant or from any cause cease to be recognized by the Grand Chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star of the District of Columbia, it shall not thereafter be entitled to any representation in said corporation, nor shall the continued corporate existence and rights of said corporation be in any wise affected thereby so long as there are five corporators qualified to act as such.

SEC. 7. That any constituent chapter hereafter instituted by said Grand Chapter shall be entitled at its next annual election to elect one of its members as a member of the board of directors of said corporation, and shall be admitted to a representation in said corporation upon an equal footing under the same rules and regulations as the several constituent chapters named in the first section of this act.

SEC. 8. That this act may be altered, amended, or repealed at the pleasure of the Congress of the United States of America.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Page 3, strike out the semicolon after the word "granted" in line 6 and insert in lieu thereof a period; also strike out all of section 3 after the word "granted."

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH].

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is clearly set forth in the report. It incurs no expense on the Government, and I know of no opposition to it. I ask for a vote.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REGULATING HOURS OF SERVICE OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 8336.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8336) to amend section 3 of chapter 480, of the laws of the United States, approved June 23, 1874.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of chapter 480, of the laws of the United States, approved June 23, 1874, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it shall read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That a laboratory shall be provided and fitted up by the Washington Gaslight Company, subject to the approval of the inspector, in the central part of the city of Washington, at a distance as near as may be of 2,000 feet from any gas works, and furnished with suitable apparatus for the transaction of the business of the inspector and assistant inspector, for which it is intended; and the laboratory shall be kept open on all business days between the hours of 9 o'clock in the forenoon and 4 o'clock in the afternoon: Provided, That the cost of fitting up said laboratory shall be paid for by each gas company in the District of Columbia in proportion to their sale of gas for the year 1873."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

TYPHOID FEVER IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the bill H. R. 8759.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8759) to require cases of typhoid fever occurring in the District of Columbia to be reported to the health department of said District.

Be it enacted, etc., That every physician attending or called in to visit or examine any case of typhoid fever in the District of Columbia shall at once send to the health officer of said District a certificate, in ink, signed by him, stating the name of the disease, and the name, age, sex, and color of the person suffering therefrom, and setting forth by street and number or otherwise sufficiently designating the house, room, or other place in which said person can be found, together with such other reasonable information relating thereto as may be required by said health officer; and upon the recovery or death of such patient the physician in attendance shall, within twenty-four hours after he becomes aware of such recovery or death, forward to said health officer a similar certificate certifying thereto.

SEC. 2. That whenever any person in said District is suffering from typhoid fever and no physician is in attendance or visiting such patient, the person in charge of said patient as nurse shall send to said health officer certificates relative thereto in the same manner as is required by section 1 of this act of physicians attending, visiting, or examining like cases.

SEC. 3. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100.

SEC. 4. That all prosecutions under this act shall be in the police court of said District upon information brought in the name of the District of Columbia and on its behalf.

SEC. 5. That all acts and parts of acts contrary to the provisions of this act, or inconsistent therewith, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all of section 2, and renumber sections.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, the sole purpose of this bill is to secure for the health department information as to cases of typhoid fever, in order that that department may be able to ascertain, if possible, the source of infection and provide for its removal. The bill is in harmony with other measures of this kind to take care of diseases that are contagious or infectious. The object of the amendment striking out section 2 is this: That section would require that any person in attendance upon typhoid fever, even if not a physician, should make this report. Your committee feel that this is impossible, as the ordinary nurse might not know. We have therefore confined the duty of reporting strictly to the physician in attendance. There is no objection to the bill, and it is unanimously reported by the committee.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. NORTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

JURIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 9342.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9342) to amend the code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 204 of an act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the word "one" in the second line thereof, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "two;" also by adding to said section the following:

"Provided, That immediately upon the approval of this amendatory act it shall be the duty of said clerk to proceed to break the seal and to draw from the said box the names of 23 persons to serve as grand jurors in said criminal courts whose term of service shall terminate on the Monday preceding the first Tuesday of April, 1902; and at the same time it shall likewise be the duty of said clerk to draw from said box the names of 26 persons for service as jurors in the police court of the District of Columbia and to certify the same to the said police court, and the term of service of said jurors so drawn shall terminate on the last Saturday of the January, 1902, jury term of said police court. All provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1901, entitled 'An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia' relating to the grand jury and the police court juries shall apply respectively to the juries drawn under the provisions hereof."

SEC. 2. That section 1640 of the aforesaid act be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding to said section the following:

"Nor shall the provisions of chapter 60 of this code nor any other provisions thereof in any manner affect the term, tenure, or compensation of any person filling any office or appointment under laws existing prior to its passage, but such persons shall continue in the exercise of the duties of such office, according to their respective commissions and appointments, except as is otherwise provided in said code."

SEC. 3. That the joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia," approved January 8, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend by striking out all of section 2, and renumber the sections.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the reading of the bill does not disclose the necessity of it, and I would like to have a brief explanation at least.

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, who will explain fully the provisions of the bill.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from Indiana that this is the same resolution that passed the House previous to the adjournment for the holidays, but it did not reach the Senate in time to receive the approval of the Presiding Officer of the Senate before the adjournment of the Senate. The necessity for its passage is to give the District of Columbia a grand jury, a petit jury, and a jury for the police court, before they can be drawn under the provisions of the new code. The bill is unanimously reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ARREARAGE OF TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. I call up the bill H. R. 10076.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10076) to receive arrearages of taxes due the District of Columbia to July 1, 1900, at 6 per cent per annum, in lieu of penalties and costs.

Be it enacted, etc., That the rate of interest to be collected of any person owing arrearages of general taxes prior to July 1, 1899, now due to and the liens for which are held by the District of Columbia, shall be 6 per cent per annum, in lieu of the rate and penalties now fixed by law, and all accrued costs: Provided, That this act shall apply only to taxes paid on or before the 1st day of July, 1903.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BABCOCK. That is all the business from the Committee on the District of Columbia to-day, Mr. Speaker.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Without objection, the following personal requests were granted:

To Mr. CALDERHEAD, leave of absence for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BOWERSOCK, leave of absence for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. SCOTT, leave of absence for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. LONG, leave of absence for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. PERKINS, leave of absence until Friday, on account of engagements in court.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following changes of reference, which were made without objection:

The bill (H. R. 70) authorizing the construction of new buildings at the New Dungeness life station, State of Washington—from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, the bill (H. R. 3136) for a public building for a marine hospital at Pittsburg, Pa.—from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees, and the Clerk will call the first committee.

The Clerk proceeded to call the committees, and when the Committee on Public Lands was reached—

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 202) to amend section 2294 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2294 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2294. That hereafter all affidavits, proofs, and oaths of any kind whatsoever required to be made by applicants and entrymen under the homestead, preemption, timber-culture, desert-land, and timber and stone acts, may, in addition to those now authorized to take such affidavits, proofs, and oaths, be made before any United States commissioner or before the judge or clerk of any court of record in the land district in which the lands are situated: Provided, That in case the affidavits, proofs, and oaths hereinbefore mentioned be taken out of the county in which the land is located the applicant must show by affidavit, satisfactory to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that it was taken before the nearest or most accessible officer qualified to take said affidavits, proofs, and oaths in the land districts in which the lands applied for are located: but such showing by affidavit need not be made in making final proof if the proof be taken in the town or city where the newspaper is published in which the final proof notice is printed. The proof, affidavit, and oath, when so made and duly subscribed, shall have the same force and effect as if made before the register and receiver, when transmitted to them with the fees and commissions allowed and required by law. That if any witness making such proof, or any applicant making such affidavit or oath, shall knowingly, willfully, or corruptly swear falsely to any material matter contained in said proofs, affidavits, or oaths he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall be liable to the same pains and penalties as if he had sworn falsely before the register. That the fees for entries and for final proofs, when made before any other officer than the register and receiver, shall be as follows:

"For each affidavit, 25 cents.

"For each deposition of claimant or witness, when not prepared by the officer, 25 cents.

"For each deposition of claimant or witness, prepared by the officer, $1.

"Any officer demanding or receiving a greater sum for such service shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished for each offense by a fine not exceeding $100."

The following amendments were recommended by the committee:

In line 7, section 1, after the word "person," insert "by delivering a true copy thereof to such witness."

In line 3, section 2, strike out the words "for attendance before such officers" and insert in the same line, after the word "fees," the words "and mileage."

Strike out, after the word "act" in line 20, section 3, all the remainder of said section.

In section 4, line 17, after the word "commission," insert "notary public, judge."

In line 22, section 4, after the word "fees," insert "and mileage."

In line 7, section 5, after the word "once," insert "at his own expense."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Wyoming, to explain the bill, as the bill was introduced by him.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a measure similar to the one now under consideration passed this House in the last Congress, having been called up by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE]. The bill as presented was drawn by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. The only changes in existing law are those which provide that affidavits and proofs in land cases which can now be taken only within the counties in which the said lands are situated may be taken before the proper officer at any point in the land district in which the land is located, with the proviso that if taken out of the county in which the land is situated, there must be an affidavit satisfactory to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the proofs were taken before the nearest and most accessible officer.

There is also an amendment to existing law in the provision including within the benefits of this act entrymen made under the timber and stone act. At the time the timber and stone act was passed this section of the Revised Statutes was already on the statute books and, I believe by clear inadvertence, the timber and stone entrymen were not included among those entitled to the benefits of the provisions of the section, and it is intended to extend those provisions to them.

As I have stated, the bill passed the House at the last Congress, but too late to be passed upon at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I notice in the bill, about line 11, that this proof may be made before any United States commissioner. It has been decided that the United States commissioner in the Territories—or rather the United States courts in the Territories have been decided to be not strictly Federal courts. The commissioners of these courts can not take the proofs unless there is an amendment to the bill, in my opinion, so that it shall say "commissioner of courts in the Territory exercising Federal jurisdiction."

Mr. MONDELL. The Commissioner of the General Land Office is of the opinion that those commissioners are authorized under the bill to take proofs.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It was tested long ago as to whether these commissioners were commissioners of the Federal courts. Your bill says "United States commissioner." He is not such, and it has been decided that he is not.

Mr. MONDELL. The circuit court commissioners were done away with some years ago, and I think the commissioners we now have under this bill would be authorized to take the proof.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The United States commissioner, as your bill designates him, is the commissioner of the United States court.

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There is no United States court in the Territory, and therefore no United States commissioner in the Territory.

Mr. MONDELL. I believe the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior have been accepting proof made before the court commissioners in the Territory.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I doubt that; I know the question has been raised in some land disputes in my district. It would do no harm to amend by saying after the word "commissioner," in line 12, "the commissioner of a court exercising Federal jurisdiction in the territory of the United States."

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman that there is a provision in the bill which covers that point to the effect that the judge or clerk of any court of record may take the proof.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is right where the gentleman is reading from.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; the judge or the clerk of any court of record could do it, but the judge and the clerk may both be away out of the county in another district at the time the affirmation or oath ought to be made; and then it would result that the United States commissioner, or the commissioner of a Federal court, would be the only one who could take it.

Mr. LACEY. What amendment would the gentleman suggest to cover this point?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I would propose to insert, after the words "United States commissioners," in line 12, the words "or commissioner of the court exercising Federal jurisdiction in the Territory." There certainly could be no harm in that amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. I think there would be no objection to the amendment, although I believe it entirely unnecessary.

Mr. RODEY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Wyoming another question about this bill. The bill provides:

That hereafter all affidavits, proofs, and oaths of any kind whatsoever required to be made by applicants and entrymen under the homestead, preemption, timber culture, desert land, and timber and stone acts may, in addition to those now authorized to take such affidavits, proofs, and oaths, be made before any United States commissioner, or before the judge or clerk of any court of record in the land district in which the lands are situated.

Now, in the Territories, the probate courts, although courts of very considerable jurisdiction, have been held not to be courts of record; so that under this bill the clerk or the judge of a probate court in a Territory would be cut out by implication from taking these proofs; and that, of course, would be a great hardship in those large districts.

Mr. MONDELL. This bill does not cut out any officer who has been authorized heretofore to take these proofs.

Mr. RODEY. Is that the construction placed upon the bill by the Land Office?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes, sir; I can not understand how any other construction can be placed upon it. There is no restriction with regard to officers who may now administer oaths and take proofs.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Can not the United States commissioner now take such affidavits?

Mr. MONDELL. I understand so.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But I see, as to the United States commissioner, there is a repetition here of the language of existing law giving him authority, while, at the same time, there may be doubt whether the commissioner of the Federal court of the Territory has the same authority. Although the amendment I suggest may be regarded as surplusage, it will cover a point on which there might be some misapprehension.

Mr. MONDELL. The bill before the House copies the existing statute, only amending it in those particulars to which I have referred. It gives to the timber and stone entry men the same rights now given to entry men under the other land laws and, in addition, it allows affidavits, proofs, etc., to be made anywhere within the land district instead of confining that authority to the county.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the object and spirit of the bill, but I know that questions have arisen, and unless we provide for the case may arise again, as to the authority of the commissioner of the Federal court of the Territory to take these proofs. The question is, whether under this bill that officer, who is not, technically, a United States commissioner, will have such authority.

Mr. MONDELL. So far as I am concerned, I do not object to the gentleman's amendment, though I think it unnecessary. I believe there will be no objection to it.

Mr. KLEBERG. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of the Interior for the last twelve years has been asking the passage of a bill exactly like this, almost word for word?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. KLEBERG. And the matter has been gone over thoroughly by him and the committee, and the bill contains the necessary amendments to the law?

Mr. MONDELL. This is word for word the bill drawn by the Commissioner of the General Land Office after careful consideration, and is indorsed by the Secretary of the Interior, and has been approved by the committee of the last Congress and this Congress. I doubt the necessity of the amendment suggested.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me ask a question. As I understand, the United States commissioners are appointed in the States by the district judges of the respective States?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And there are commissioners in the Territories appointed by the Federal judges of the Territories?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But, as I understand, these officers are not called United States commissioners?

Mr. MONDELL. They are not commissioners of the United States courts and can not be known as United States commissioners. Does the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] wish to offer an amendment? If so, I yield to him.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I move to amend by inserting after the word "commissioner," in line 12, page 1, the words "or commissioner of the court exercising Federal jurisdiction in the Territory."

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield for this amendment?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MONDELL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WITNESSES BEFORE REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS OF LAND OFFICES.

Mr. LACEY. I call up the bill (H. R. 7664) providing for the compulsory attendance of witnesses before registers and receivers of the land office.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That registers and receivers of the land office, or either of them, in all matters requiring a hearing before them, are authorized and empowered to issue subpœnas directing the attendance of witnesses, which subpœnas may be served by any person, and when served, witnesses shall be required to attend in obedience thereto: Provided, That if any subpœna be served under the provisions of this act by any person other than an officer authorized by the laws of the United States, or of the State or Territory in which the depositions are taken, the service thereof shall be proved by the affidavit of the person serving the same: Provided further, That said subpœnas shall be served within the county in which attendance is required, and at least five days before attendance is required.

SEC. 2. That witnesses shall have the right to receive their fee for one day's attendance and mileage in advance. The fees of witnesses for attendance before such officers shall be the same as that provided by law in the district courts of the United States in the district in which such land offices are situated; and the witness shall be entitled to receive his fee for attendance in advance from day to day during the hearing.

SEC. 3. That any person neglecting or refusing obedience to such subpœna, or neglecting or refusing to appear and testify when subpœnaed, his fees having been paid if demanded, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, for which he shall be punished by information or indictment in the district court of the United States. The punishment for such offense, upon conviction, shall be a fine of not more than $200, or imprisonment not to exceed ninety days, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, That if such witness has been prevented from obeying such subpœna without fault upon his part he shall not be punished under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That in case any party to a contest shall be unable to pay witness fees, and shall make and file with the register or receiver an affidavit that he is unable to pay said fees and that he has a meritorious cause, and set forth in said affidavit what he can prove by said witnesses, if the register or receiver shall believe and so certify that the testimony so set forth is material to the issue, said witnesses shall be subpœnaed and attend without first having their pay, and in such case the subpœna issued shall state that the witness is required to attend without prepayment of fees or mileage, and all the provisions of this act, for the attendance of witnesses, shall apply to said witnesses, and they shall receive certificate of attendance from the officer before whom he is subpœnaed, which certificate shall be a liability of the person at whose instance they were subpœnaed.

SEC. 4. That whenever the witness resides outside the county in which the hearing occurs any party to the proceeding may take the testimony of such witness in the county of such witness's residence in the form of depositions by giving ten days' written notice of the time and place of taking such depositions to the opposite party or parties. The depositions may be taken before any United States commissioner, or clerk of a court of record. Subpœnas for witnesses before the officer taking depositions may issue from the office of the register or receiver, or may be issued by the officer taking the depositions, and disobedience thereof, as defined in this act, shall also be punished; and the witness shall receive the same fees and mileage and be subject to the same penalties in all respects as in case of violation of a subpœna to appear before the register or receiver, and subject to the same limitations. The fees of the officer taking the depositions shall be the same as those allowed in the State or Territorial courts, and shall be paid by the party taking the deposition, and an itemized account of the fees shall be made by the officer taking the depositions and attached to the depositions.

SEC. 5. That whenever the taking of any depositions taken in pursuance of the foregoing provisions of this act is concluded the opposite party may proceed at once at his own expense to take depositions in his own behalf, at the same time and place and before the same officer: Provided, That he shall, before taking of the depositions in the first instance is entered upon, give notice to the opposing party, or any agent or attorney representing him in the taking of said depositions, of his intention to do so.

The amendments reported by the Committee on the Public Lands were read, as follows:

In line 7, section 1, after the word "person," insert "by delivering a true copy thereof to such witness."

In line 3, section 2, strike out the words "for attendance before such officers," and insert in the same line, after the word "fees," the words "and mileage."

Strike out, after the word "act," in line 20, section 3, all the remainder of said section.

In section 4, line 17, after the word "commission," insert "notary public, judge."

In line 22, section 4, after the word "fees," insert "and mileage."

In line 7, section 5, after the word "once," insert "at his own expense."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to print in the RECORD the report of the Committee on the Public Lands upon the bill which is now presented for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

[House report No. 135, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred House bill 7664, submit the following report:

In every report of the Secretary of the Interior for the last twelve years the passage of a bill for the compulsory attendance of witnesses before registers and receivers has been urged.

The House, on at least one occasion, has passed a bill for this purpose, but it failed to become a law.

Often property of great value is in controversy in the local land offices, and yet there is no means of obtaining the testimony of witnesses, unless by their voluntary attendance.

The refusal of witnesses to appear and testify frequently operates as a denial of justice.

Your committee recommend the following amendments:

In line 7, section 1, after the word "person," insert "by delivering a true copy thereof to such witness."

In line 3, section 2, strike out the words "for attendance before such officers," and insert in the same line, after the word "fees," the words "and mileage."

Strike out, after the word "act," in line 20, section 3, all the remainder of said section.

In section 4, line 17, after the word "commission," insert "notary public, judge."

In line 22, section 4, after the word "fees," insert "and mileage."

In line 7, section 5, after the word "once," insert "at his own expense."

As thus amended your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The following is the report upon substantially the same bill in the Fifty-first Congress:

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill, or one for like purpose, has been before Congress for the last ten or twelve years. Every Secretary of the Interior, every Commissioner of the General Land Office has asked for the enactment of a bill of this character, or having in view the purpose involved in the pending bill. The matter has been considered over and over again by the Committee on the Public Lands, and meets the approval of the Committee, and I therefore ask its passage by the House.

The condition calling for the passage of the bill is one that has been understood by the Committee on the Public Lands for a long time. Under the present law there is no provision by which the compulsory attendance of witnesses can be had in any land case. The bill provides for the compulsory attendance of witnesses to testify in cases involving these land rights. It frequently occurs that justice has been denied—that justice has been impossible—because of the absence of witnesses who could not be compelled to attend.

In many cases witnesses have refused to attend, and so the Department has requested the enactment of a law which will compel them to testify in land cases and enable a just settlement to be had of disputed claims. The Government in its own cases has found itself often powerless to compel the attendance of witnesses. It is necessary in view of the condition of affairs prevailing, with reference to witnesses in these cases, to enact a law of this character. We have sought for some time to secure its enactment. Such a proceeding as that recommended by the bill is necessary, so as to make it a misdemeanor on the part of a witness to refuse attendance; and I apprehend that there will be no objection to the bill, in view of its importance and the necessity which must be apparent for its enactment. We ought to have some such law as Congress has found it necessary to enact for its various committees, making it a misdemeanor to refuse attendance before them when summoned. Without such a provision the committees of the House would be powerless, and these land officials are powerless to exercise jurisdiction in these cases where the testimony of witnesses is required.

This bill, with a view to correcting that condition, has been carefully drawn and thoroughly considered, and we believe it covers the question thoroughly, and, as I understand it, with an amendment which is to be suggested by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RODEY], I believe the bill should be entirely satisfactory to every member of the House.

The gentleman from New Mexico suggests that the same amendment be inserted in this bill which was embraced in the last bill considered by the House, drawing a distinction between the commissioners appointed in the Federal courts and the Territorial courts having Federal jurisdiction over these matters.

And with this brief explanation I yield to the gentleman to offer his amendment. We heard the question as to this amendment discussed before on the preceding bill, and I imagine that all that is necessary will be to suggest the amendment of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa yields the floor to whom?

Mr. LACEY. To the gentleman from New Mexico to offer an amendment.

Mr. RODEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment I send to the desk to insert in line 18 of the bill the same words that were incorporated in the bill considered a few moments ago.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 18, after the words United States, the words "or in the district courts of the Territory exercising the jurisdiction of circuit or district courts of the United States."

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question.

Mr. LACEY. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman in the few remarks he has submitted with reference to the bill has suggested that this bill was before Congress heretofore on several occasions. He said, as I understood him, that it was before Congress for the last ten or twelve years. Now, I would like to ask him with regard to that matter——

The SPEAKER (interrupting). The Chair would like to ask the gentleman who offers the amendment where he proposes that it shall be inserted?

Mr. RODEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the amendment on page 2, in line 18, after the words "United States."

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the question of the gentleman from Illinois involves the discussion of legislation taking place in another body than this, and under the rules of the House I could not, if I desired to do so, go into that discussion. That is a question with which we can not deal now. We passed a bill here, we considered the matter in the committee, and as I have already stated, for ten or twelve years the question has been before Congress for settlement.

Mr. MANN. Were objections made to the bill originally by anybody?

Mr. LACEY. So far as I know, only by individuals who happened to be placed in a condition where they did not desire the evidence to be submitted.

Mr. MANN. In other words, they would lose if the evidence was there against them?

Mr. LACEY. Yes. People thus situated are against this bill. What arguments they have been able to make use of I do not know. Those are the only persons who would naturally have any objection to this bill.

Mr. MANN. So far as I could gather from what the gentleman said in his speech before, I judged that this was an innovation in the law conferring a judicial power upon a ministerial officer. May I ask the gentleman if that is correct?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; we have avoided that.

Mr. LACEY. We avoid that, Mr. Speaker, by simply indicting the party who violates the subpœna.

In the last Congress the Committee on Military Affairs brought in a bill of like character, to compel the attendance of witnesses before military courts, and that has become a law. This ought to become a law, and it is inconceivable to me what reasons have prevented its becoming a law long ago.

Mr. MANN. I can understand, Mr. Speaker, why we should confer authority to require witnesses to appear before any court, military or otherwise. That was just what I wished to learn from the gentleman. Are the registers courts?

Mr. LACEY. They are courts in a certain sense. They are courts in this that they pass upon property rights of enormous value, subject to appeal to the Commissioner of the Land Office, and subject to further appeal to the Secretary of the Interior. And I would say to my friend that the Secretary of the Interior every year decides property rights of more value than the Supreme Court of the United States decide every ten years.

Mr. MANN. Does he have any authority to require the presence of witnesses?

Mr. LACEY. He has not.

Mr. MANN. And there is no proposition here to confer that authority upon him.

Mr. LACEY. Not on him, because these matters reach him through appeal. The evidence is taken in the court below, or rather before the register and receiver, and then certified up with the case, so that at present if a case is being tried before the Secretary of the Interior on an appeal, involving property worth a hundred thousand dollars or half a million dollars, as the case may be, if the witnesses are unwilling to have their evidence taken there is no way in which they can be compelled to testify, so as to have the evidence reach that high tribunal upon appeal. Under this law the witnesses will be compelled to attend, or, if they fail to do so, will be subject to punishment. We have a similar law to compel the attendance of witnesses before the committees of this House, and that law has worked well. We have had no trouble about anybody refusing to obey subpœnas since the Hallett Kilbourne case, or since the law arising out of that case was passed.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL WEDNESDAY.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] to yield for a moment, as I should like to make a privileged motion.

I move that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

WITNESSES BEFORE REGISTERS AND RECEIVERS OF LAND OFFICES.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, resuming the discussion of this question, chapter 809 of the acts of the Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, is an illustration of the principle involved here. That is the bill in regard to military courts.

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask another question.

Mr. LACEY. I yield to my colleague upon the committee, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], such time as he may desire.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, I will state that this bill has been reported unanimously by the Committee on the Public Lands. Every section of it was carefully examined by the committee, and some amendments were made to the bill.

The necessity for this bill arises from the fact that it is impossible now, if a witness is adverse to the person desiring to present proof before a register or receiver of a land office, to get that witness to appear before the register or receiver.

Mr. RODEY. Even to prove a homestead.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Even to prove a homestead, or to prove anything. The difficulty does not arise in homestead cases often, but it does arise when great property rights are involved, such as mining rights, where sometimes a mine that is attempted to be proved up has a value of perhaps a million dollars.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to be captious at all about this. Is there any method now of trying these property rights in the courts?

Mr. MONDELL. No.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, not so far as the action of the register or receiver is concerned. Whenever a person files an adverse suit and gives notice of it to the register and receiver, in some instances he has the privilege of going to the courts.

Mr. MANN. What I wanted to get at is, whether any case comes up before the register where that can not now be secured.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; any number of them.

Mr. MANN. Well, give us one.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, I think that the decisions of the receiver and the register are binding in certain matters. There is no doubt that the findings of the registers and receivers and the Secretary of the Interior upon a certain state of affairs is absolutely binding on any court that might take it up.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. How have these matters heretofore been disposed of that are now being complained about?

Mr. SHAFROTH. They have usually been settled.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. How?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The witness usually comes up and testifies, but it is the one-thousandth case where they refuse.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Are you not opening a broad door in this bill for an increase of expenses in these Federal courts, the inferior courts?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; they are not inferior courts at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Oh, yes; they are.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. What are they, then?

Mr. SHAFROTH. They are the register and receiver. They are two people who sit and hear proof in proving up claims of various kinds, such as timber claims, homesteads, and mineral-right claims, in order to procure a patent from the United States Government. They have authority for taking testimony; they are allowed to transcribe their testimony and send that to the Secretary of the Interior.

Now the proof is already taken. Some of the witnesses come, and other witnesses will not come. Now, if he will not come, how are you going to compel him? You can not compel him under the law now; but this bill provides that if he refuse to come that they shall serve a subpœna on him, and if he fails to appear at the time that is required by the subpœna—of course that does not apply where he has any proper excuse—but if he fails to appear, then he can be compelled to attend.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. What additional pay do you give for the issuing of the subpœnas to the registers and receivers?

Mr. SHAFROTH. None.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. It is done without compensation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; without compensation. There is nothing in the bill that has a tendency to increase the fees.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Except the increase in the number of witnesses.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; that would not increase it. You would not want proof by an adverse witness unless you can prove something. They are entitled to the witness fees in case they go voluntarily, and it is only the adverse witness whose testimony you desire to obtain.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. I was just asking for information.

Mr. LACEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. RODEY. Mr. Speaker, I have not examined the text of the bill so as to see how it relates to the States, but such a bill as this is a necessity in the Territories. There is no remedy now by which you can compel attendance of witnesses as contemplated in this bill. The registers and receivers can not force them to attend before them. I knew of a few cases where homesteaders found it difficult to prove up on their homesteads because of the prejudices of their neighbors against their completing their claims, and therefore they could not obtain the witnesses. Now, take it in the case of mining camps, where mining claims are being proved upon. There are many occasions where a claimant who is trying to prove up before the register and receiver can not induce the witnesses to attend. I have not examined the question whether, as to the States, power such as this can be given to the register and receiver, but I am sure that as to a Territory it can.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee one question. I would like to know why the service of the subpœna is limited to the county in which the attendance is required.

Mr. LACEY. Because——

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Suppose you wanted witnesses from some other county?

Mr. LACEY. You must remember that in most of the Western localities where matters of this kind are pending the counties are large, and it was deemed best to provide, as is done in a subsequent section, that witnesses living at a distance and in another county should have their testimony taken by depositions——

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is provided for in a subsequent section?

Mr. LACEY (continuing). Instead of forcing him to go three, four, or five hundred miles to the land office. I understand the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] desired to ask a question for some time. I yield to him.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention——

Mr. CLARK. Before the gentleman from Arkansas begins, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa, or the gentleman from Colorado, or the gentleman from Arkansas, a question.

Mr. LACEY. Either can answer it.

Mr. CLARK. I doubt whether any of you can. [Laughter.]

Mr. LACEY. We will show you.

Mr. CLARK. The question is this: If it is not an extremely severe and dangerous provision that allows a man to be indicted because he does not attend court as a witness?

Mr. McRAE. That is one of the criticisms I was about to make.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman from Arkansas allow me to answer?

Mr. McRAE. As soon as I finish I will yield to the gentleman. Mr. Speaker, the interrogation of the gentleman from Missouri suggests one of the criticisms I expected to make on this bill, that it is an unusual and dangerous power to vest in any subordinate tribunal, a superior tribunal, if you please, that of compelling a witness to attend and testify, and then making his simple refusal to attend anything more than contempt of court.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield right there?

Mr. McRAE. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. You have either got to compel the witness to come by reason of his committing a contempt of court or else you have got to indict him, one of the two. We thought that to vest the power of contempt in the register and receiver was much more dangerous than to make it a misdemeanor, and make the party liable to indictment.

Mr. McRAE. In my country we have another way to compel witnesses to attend; and that is to issue an attachment and bring him in, and he pays the cost of attachment if in fault.

Mr. KLEBERG. Would not that be a far greater power than the other, to issue an attachment and bring him before a commissioner? In the contempt proceedings he could be tried by jury.

Mr. McRAE. The power to bring a witness and make him testify is vastly different from indicting him and putting him in jail because he could not or would not attend.

Now, there is some necessity for legislating along this line, but in my judgment this bill is too severe. You say that the witness shall have the right to receive his fees and mileage. What fees? What mileage? The bill is as silent as a tomb. Who shall fix the compensation? Shall you say that a witness who receives a subpœna shall attend for the sum fixed by the register or a receiver, say 25 cents a day, not enough to pay his transportation, and for the refusal to obey the subpœna he shall be charged criminally?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The bill provides that the fees shall be the same as those allowed in the State and Territorial courts, and also the same mileage.

Mr. LACEY. In line 7, section 2, the gentleman will find that an amendment provides that the fees and mileage of witnesses shall be the same as that provided by law in the district courts of the United States in the district in which such land offices are situated.

Mr. McRAE. I have just received the bill and had not examined it fully, and I stand corrected on that point. By fees I presume it is meant a per diem, although it does not say so. Therefore I have no objection to the bill except the extraordinary power lodged in the third section, and I suggest that all of that section ought to go out, and I will move to strike it out unless amended.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman from Arkansas allow me?

Mr. McRAE. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. There is another criticism in the bill which I wish to make, where it says that the persons refusing to obey such subpœna, or refusing to appear and testify, shall be subject to punishment. It ought to be coupled with the provision that unless he has a reasonable excuse.

Mr. LACEY. That is fully provided for in the proviso in line 21, section 3.

Mr. McRAE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out section 3.

The SPEAKER. There are amendments proposed by the committee, and an amendment to the amendment by the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I did not yield to the gentleman from Arkansas for the purpose of offering an amendment. I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that my friend from Arkansas would not make this motion after reflection. He and I have both been over this question in Congresses gone by and have attempted in vain to accomplish precisely what we are trying to do in the present bill. If section 3 is stricken out, you might as well strike out all after the enacting clause.

There is no way known to the law under the Constitution of the United States by which you can vest in a mere executive officer the power to issue a subpœna and enforce that subpœna by process of contempt. The Committee on Appropriations, of which my friend from Arkansas is an honored member, can not, in the absence of a statute substantially like this, enforce the attendance of any witness upon any investigation that might be held before that committee. We can not give, by act of Congress, power to that committee to issue process of contempt against anyone disobeying the subpœna. That question is no longer an open one. The Supreme Court of the United States has passed upon it, and has sustained a judgment against the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House where the attempt was made to punish a man for not obeying the subpœna. A military court can compel the attendance of a soldier under the Articles of War, because he is amenable to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War and to the Commanding General.

But if in a trial by court-martial some outside witness was desired there was no way to compel a civilian to attend as a witness, so that a defendant charged with a military crime might be thus prevented from obtaining the very evidence which would show his innocence, by reason of the fact that a witness having knowledge of the circumstances of the case had concluded to lock that information up in his own breast and decline to appear before the court. In the last Congress that difficulty was met by the enactment of a statute approved March 2, 1901, of which I will read the first part:

Be it enacted, etc., That every person not belonging to the Army of the United States, who, being duly subpœnaed to appear as a witness before a general court-martial of the Army, willfully neglects or refuses to appear, or refuses to qualify as a witness, or to testify or produce documentary evidence which such person may have been legally subpœnaed to produce, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, for which such person shall be punished on information in the district court of the United States.

Mr. McRAE. I suggest to my friend that the very significant and pertinent word used in the statutory provision just read—"willfully"—is omitted in the bill now under consideration.

Mr. LACEY. That is fully covered by the proviso in section 3, to which I invite the attention of my friend, which reads as follows:

Provided, That if such witness has been prevented from obeying such subpœna without fault upon his part, he shall not be punished under the provisions of this act.

Mr. McRAE. But the distinction which my friend from Iowa overlooks is that, under the proviso read, the burden of proof is upon the defendant to prove his innocence and in the other upon the Government to prove his guilt.

Mr. LACEY. Certainly. If my friend were sitting as a justice of the peace in Arkansas and issued a subpœna against a citizen of Arkansas to appear before him, and the party subpœnaed did not come, he would not wait to have a trial to determine whether the party desired as a witness had willfully stayed away or not; but the witness would be cited to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, and would be tried without a jury, because a justice of the peace is a court. He may excuse himself by showing his inability to attend, and if there has been no willful neglect or refusal on his part he may show that fact by way of excuse just as he might do in a proceeding for contempt in a Federal court or before a justice of the peace.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, the enactment of a law like this has been to my mind one of the most essential requirements of the Land Department ever since it has been my pleasure to be familiar with anything whatever concerning public lands.

We hear a great deal nowadays about the rich getting richer and the poor getting poorer. In this bill it is provided that all men, whether men of means or men without means, shall have equal process. I have had under my own observation a state of facts like this: One man who entered a piece of land was worth more money than the party contesting and could secure the attendance of his witnesses by paying them sufficient money to bring them to the land office. On the other hand, the poorer party, not having the neccessary funds, could not secure sufficient means to secure the attendance of a solitary witness.

I have known other cases—and there have been many such in these land contests—where the witnesses who knew all the facts would refuse to attend and testify unless the party desiring their testimony would pay them an outrageous amount, running in some cases as high as $500. If there were a provision of law whereby equal process could issue to both parties, this blackmailing, this holding up of contestants or entrymen by witnesses could not exist. Why should not the two parties have equal right to bring their witnesses into court and not be subjected to the difficulty of having a witness fix the fee or price in consideration of which he would attend and testify.

Some gentlemen have asked, Could not the matter be settled afterwards in court? But, sir, you can not go into court with cases of this kind until the case has been decided by the local land office, and then the proceeding is to appeal to the Commissioner, and from the Commissioner to the Secretary of the Interior. When the patent has issued, then you can go into court to try the right of property, but not until then.

If there ever was a bill that would give all parties an equal show in presenting their testimony, it is this kind of a bill, where you compel the attendance of witnesses on both sides and do not allow a witness to say to a man who needs his evidence, "Give me $500 or $1,000; otherwise I won't testify."

Mr. LACEY. I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] for five minutes.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that there should be any objection to this bill, which has been carefully considered and prepared by the committee, and I believe it should pass the House without objection. It simply provides a mode of punishing a man who refuses to obey the demands of an officer and give testimony in these cases. There has been much trouble in the past in securing such testimony.

My friend and colleague from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] suggests that this is something in the nature of a harsh expedient; that it would be an unusal and a harsh remedy to apply in such cases, and suggests that some such remedy should be applied as the writ of attachment in these cases.

Now, I am satisfied if my friend will consider the amendment and will reflect for a moment, that he will see that the remedy of attachment is absolutely more severe than the plan proposed in the pending bill. The attachment requires the marshal of the United States, or some officer intrusted with the duty, to take the body of the recalcitrant witness and bring him before the magisterial tribunal; and that, I insist, would be a most extraordinary power in these cases. It would be a harsh and unusual method of procedure, and would not succeed any better than the milder plan proposed by the bill in accomplishing the result which is sought to be accomplished. In this case, as proposed here, when a man willfully absents himself; when he refuses to obey the summons of the officer before whom he is cited to appear, and refuses to give the testimony which he is capable of giving in the case at issue, then he is subject to the penalties provided by the bill. In the case proposed the grand jury of his county can indict him, and this jury, grand or petit, of his fellowmen—a jury of his peers—can determine whether or not he has violated the law and is guilty or otherwise.

Mr. MCRAE. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. KLEBERG. Certainly.

Mr. MCRAE. I would like to ask the gentleman, with reference to the pending bill, just this: Now, in the first place, this bill assumes that the refusal of the witness to appear and testify is a willful violation of the law, and, in the second place, it does not compel the attendance, but if the witness refuses to attend then that refusal is made a criminal offense and his case is placed on the criminal side of the docket. What does the gentleman say in reference to that?

Mr. KLEBERG. I would answer my friend from Arkansas, in the first place, that the word "willful," referring to the refusal of the witness to appear and testify, is entirely unnecessary. And the bill in the first clause provides that the failure of the witness to attend is because of his own fault. If there be a failure it is a willful failure on his part, of course. The other objection the gentleman makes is untenable. The main question is as to the power of an officer to compel the attendance of witnesses to testify in these cases. The trouble has been in the past that there was no compulsory power. Now, if the witness is threatened with a prosecution it will compel him to testify, and is an effective method of securing his attendance. I think that this is a measure which should be adopted, and that the objections raised against the bill have no weight and ought not to be considered seriously by the House in dealing with it.

Mr. LACEY. I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY].

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Speaker, if the object of this bill is to secure the attendance of witnesses before the register of the land office, that a speedy trial of a cause can be had, it will not effect the object sought to be accomplished. If a recalcitrant witness fails or refuses to attend the only provision to compel him to attend is that he shall be indicted for a misdemeanor in the United States district court. Mr. Speaker, such a provision is very objectionable and oppressive.

Suppose a matter is to be heard before the land office and a witness refuses to attend. The remedy is by indictment in the circuit court. This court doubtless meets twice a year. If a witness is indicted, before his trial could be had and his attendance enforced six months or a year, or probably two years, might elapse, and therefore no speedy trial could be secured. But think of what expense would be entailed upon the unfortunate individual who, for some good reason, might be prevented from attending. If he lived 500 or 600 miles distant, as they frequently do in the Territories, and the defendant is required to cause witnesses to attend with him, it would cost the unfortunate individual hundreds of dollars and be a great injustice and oppression to him.

Let the bill be amended conferring upon the officers of the land courts judicial powers, and particularly the power to compel the attendance of the recalcitrant witness by capias or contempt proceedings, and the remedy would then be complete and effective. The Constitution gives the power to Congress to establish courts inferior to the Supreme Court, and there will be no constitutional objection in the way. But I am much opposed to subjecting the citizen to indictment for an excusable failure to attend as a witness when the consequences are so oppressive to him.

If the remedy suggested is not satisfactory, then confer upon the register of the land office the power to report the delinquent witness to the district court, and then let that court issue a capias compelling the witness to attend before the register, or attachment proceedings might be issued in lieu thereof——

Mr. LACEY. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BELLAMY. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. What court?

Mr. BELLAMY. Before the register.

Mr. LACEY. He is not a court.

Mr. BELLAMY. Then devolve upon him the powers of a court.

Mr. LACEY. You might as well say that a witness should be brought before the chief of police.

Mr. BELLAMY. Then give the register of the land office the powers of a court of equity and the power to issue a process to compel him to attend.

Mr. LACEY. The difficulty is that under the Constitution we can not give this power to anything but a court, and this is not a court. We can no more give the register and receiver power to issue subpœnas and enforce attendance by process than we could give the Doorkeeper of the House or the Clerk of the House the same power.

Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. CLARK rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELLAMY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why not provide, the same as is done in the law regarding the Industrial Commission, that when a witness refuses to appear before it the Commission can apply to a district or circuit court of the United States and secure a subpœna to compel attendance in that way? Would not that obviate your difficulty?

Mr. BELLAMY. That is a good suggestion.

Mr. LACEY. That is possible. The present course, however, is the one that was adopted in reference to military courts.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has the floor.

Mr. CLARK rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. LACEY. I wish to answer the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. This bill is founded substantially on the process that Congress uses in obtaining testimony, and that military courts use under like circumstances; and it has been found entirely satisfactory heretofore in those two organizations. No man is going to refuse to attend if he lays himself liable to indictment for refusing; and if he does refuse and is indicted, another subpœna can be issued and he can be indicted over again, world without end.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But you do not get a trial of your case. It might be worth while for a man to be indicted and convicted and then the case remain untried; while in the way I suggest you can compel a witness to come, you can issue a process out of the district or circuit court of the United States, and if he refuses to obey you can punish him for contempt and can keep him in jail until he testifies.

Mr. LACEY. You can punish him for contempt by sending him to jail, and that is what we would do when we indict him; and if a man under indictment will not save himself by testifying, the same witness will remain mute when imprisoned for contempt. We have gentlemen in some of the States resigning their offices, refusing to obey processes for contempt, simply because they think it is their duty to do so. In these cases that we are trying to reach, the only witnesses who refuse are usually men who have been employed to stay away, or, as the Secretary of the Interior puts it, have been intimidated to stay away. Now, if they have on one side the intimidation of a hostile party to a litigation in the land office and on the other hand an indictment, they will not hesitate about appearing to testify. We have had no trouble to get witnesses under laws of this character heretofore. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] for a question.

Mr. CLARK. I want to ask you two or three questions.

Mr. LACEY. Ask me one at a time.

Mr. CLARK. I will ask you one, first. When this register of the land office is engaged in this particular business about which you are talking, is he not acting with quasi-judicial authority?

Mr. LACEY. That is the trouble—it is quasi.

Mr. CLARK. Now, if a notary public can punish a man for contempt, what is the reason that power can not be safely conferred upon the register of the land office?

Mr. LACEY. A notary public can only do it under certain circumstances. A notary public in a case pending in court is acting for the court in which the case is pending, and you have the constitutional right to give to that notary the power that the court for which he is acting is possessed of; but the register and receiver are not acting for a court. They are simply acting for the Commissioner of the Land Office, who is not a court, and for the Secretary of the Interior, who is not a court, but who can be reached later on by an appeal from the Commissioner of the Land Office.

Mr. CLARK. The chief idea in this bill is to get the evidence, is it not?

Mr. LACEY. Precisely; the only idea.

Mr. CLARK. Well, now, what is the reason you can not do that better by the ordinary process of issuing an attachment for the witness and taking him there bodily than you can by letting him stay at home and indicting him?

Mr. LACEY. For the simple reason that when the attachment is issued and he is arrested, any court in the land would release him on habeas corpus, because the attachment would be void.

Mr. CLARK. Why would it be void?

Mr. LACEY. Because the registers and receivers would not secure——

Mr. CLARK. Why can not you put in a section, instead of making it indictable, conferring upon the receiver or the register power to issue an attachment to compel the attendance of a witness. The difficulty that a man finds himself in between being yanked up for contempt of court and being indicted for contempt is that any man of ordinary sense, without the assistance of a lawyer, can state to the court the reasons that will purge him of contempt, when not one citizen out of five hundred dares go before a court and be tried even for a misdemeanor without the expense of employing a lawyer. If what you want is the evidence, why not get it by an attachment instead of an indictment?

Mr. LACEY. To rely on an attachment that would be void would not enable a man to get the evidence. The committee have examined this with a good deal of care, and there is no way by which you can give these judicial powers to one of these mere executive officers. You can not give to the Secretary of the Navy the power to issue a subpœna and clothe him with power to punish for contempt. You may order an investigation by the Secretary of the Navy and give him power to issue a subpœna, and, if the subpœna is disobeyed, give a process to a court in which a trial can be had—a court in which the constitutional rights of the party would be regarded—and try the party for having failed to obey the subpœna and to punish him for it. You can not give to any party any judicial power outside of a court.

Mr. CLARK. Is not Congress continually constituting judicial officers of all grades?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. Why not constitute these men judicial officers?

Mr. LACEY. You would have to change the entire system of the Land Office. The same question would arise in special cases in the Pension Office. Suppose a special examiner of the Pension Office went out to examine a case and a witness refused to come to testify before him. There has been no trouble of that kind; but trouble would arise to the extent of requiring some authority upon the part of the courts to punish the witness who, when requested by the special agent to appear on a subpœna, disobeyed the summons and failed to attend. That would have to be done by proceedings in a court of justice.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does not the gentleman know there is some provision by which the Industrial Commission can secure the attendance of witnesses by applying to the district and circuit courts of the United States?

Mr. LACEY. I was not aware of it until the gentleman called my attention to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was reported in the public press the other day that the commissioners were about to apply to the circuit court for a subpœna to compel the attendance of Mr. Hill and his associates.

Mr. LACEY. But that has to be done by the courts.

Mr. BELLAMY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Do I understand the gentleman to say that we have no right to confer judicial power upon the register of the land office?

Mr. LACEY. I certainly say we have not done so.

Mr. BELLAMY. Does not the Constitution say that Congress has the right to create such courts as it sees proper?

Mr. LACEY. We can do so, with reference to courts.

Mr. BELLAMY. Why can not you confer the powers of a court of equity upon the register of a land office?

Mr. LACEY. Why, the register and receiver——

Mr. BELLAMY. It is not necessary to have a jury to try equity cases.

Mr. LACEY. They are not all lawyers; very few of them are.

Mr. BELLAMY. They ought to be.

Mr. LACEY. Perhaps the gentlemen occupying those places who are not lawyers would disagree with my friend from North Carolina in that suggestion.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman be able to yield to me?

Mr. LACEY. I yield to my colleague on the committee for five minutes.

Mr. BRUNDIDGE. Mr. Speaker, an examination of this bill will show, I think, that every member of the committee has taken pains to see that no injustice is done to witnesses who fail to attend without fault on their part. It must be conceded by all that it is necessary to have the attendance of these witnesses to testify. If it is necessary that their presence should be had, there must be some means by which their attendance may be procured. But two ways are suggested. One way is to make the failure to attend an offense, a misdemeanor; and the other, as suggested by the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Arkansas, is to apply to the court for a writ of attachment and compel attendance by this writ, or give to the commissioner or notary public the power to issue writs of attachment and punish the disobedience thereof as in ordinary cases of contempt.

Now, what are the ordinary punishments for contempt. Take the majority of the States and the law is that a witness is duly summoned by delivering to him a copy of the subpœna or reading the same to him. In these States if a witness refuses or fails to attend, an attachment is issued and the party who has failed to answer the subpœna is brought into the court, and he may purge himself of the contempt by showing a valid excuse of nonattendance. If he does not do so, power is given to the judge to punish both by fine and imprisonment in the county jail. Now, one of the reasons, and the strongest reason, why I favor this bill is, I am opposed to lodging in the hands of commissioners of the land office, or notaries public, or lodging in the hands of the Federal judiciary, power to punish a citizen for contempt without a hearing before a jury of his country.

I believe that more injustice has been done men by being pulled up before a court on a charge of contempt than in any other way known to the law. The cases are numerous where Federal judges have imposed unreasonable and cruel punishments by both fine and imprisonment on charges of alleged contempt, thus violating every right of personal liberty. This power to punish for contempt has been often abused. Now, under this bill the witness is first to be summoned, and that, too, by delivery of copy; not only that, but fees for attendance must have been paid or at least tendered to him, both for attendance and for his mileage. Then, if he fails to attend, he has the right to come and show that it was not through his fault that he failed to attend; and if so, he goes free. It is only in a case where the witness is at fault that the courts of the country have a right to impose any fine upon him or to punish him at all. Before that can be done he must be returned to the court either by indictment or information, and then be tried before a jury of his countrymen.

I wish it was the law of this land that no Federal judiciary, no Federal courts, could impose any fine or any imprisonment upon any man charged with contempt other than that which takes place in the presence of the court, except on a trial before a jury of his countrymen. I like this provision of the bill. I think it would be dangerous, I think it would be unsafe, to give to inferior officers the power to issue and to try writs of attachment. The power ought to be lodged in a court, and there is no better way in which you can reach it, there is no safer way by which you can protect the rights of a witness, than to give him a trial upon the question whether he is at fault, whether he has violated the law or not, before a jury of his countrymen. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, if for no other, I favor the provisions of this bill. In my opinion, it is a step in the right direction.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, it is manifest that we can not get to the end of this bill in the hour, and I ask that my time be extended fifteen minutes. I have eight minutes left, which I desire to yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks that his time be extended fifteen minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, there is so much talk around me that I did not hear the request of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LACEY. It was to extend my time fifteen minutes.

Mr. McRAE. Well, I would like to have a little additional time. I think it is hardly fair to undertake to close the bill within an hour and for the gentleman to take all the time himself.

Mr. LACEY. That is what I wanted to avoid, and that is the reason I asked for the extension.

The SPEAKER. The extension of time was only to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LACEY. I intended to move the previous question when my time was out, but if the gentleman will indicate how much time he would like to have I will yield to him.

Mr. McRAE. Five minutes.

Mr. LACEY. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for five minutes out of the time of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to disagree to anything said by my colleague from Arkansas [Mr. BRUNDIDGE], but I have as strong convictions on this question as he has. I think the third section of the bill, as it has been drafted, is a dangerous one, and ought not to be enacted into law. With the insertion of the word "willful" in the first line, and striking out the words "information or" in the twenty-seventh line of section 3, perhaps I might consent to it. It certainly would be improved.

Now, we have been told what the mode of procedure is for securing the attendance of witnesses in the courts of the different States of the country. The object of this bill, if it has any, is to get the witness and get the benefit of the information he is supposed to have. This bill stops short of that and switches off on to a criminal presecution for failure to attend, and also recognizes that one-man power, that is so much animadverted against, lodges in the district attorney the power to present an information against this witness, who has neglected or refused to attend, although his failure may not have been willful or intentional on his part.

Neither of these words find any place in section 3. The simple fact that he neglected or refused is certified to the district attorney by the register and receiver of the land office, and then it is the duty of the attorney to file an information or present it to the grand jury. If to the latter, the procedure is secret. The witness has had no opportunity to purge himself of contempt or to avoid arrest. We all know that 90 per cent—yea, 95 per cent—of all witnesses who are attached are excused for reasons that they give. But in this case the right to purge himself is denied him until he is before the court on information or indictment. The bill provides that he may not be punished if he has a good excuse, but it does not provide that he shall not be indicted.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. McRAE. Yes.

Mr. KLEBERG. The gentleman says the district attorney shall have the power to report this witness to the grand jury; that it is a one-man power. Would not there be the same objection to the fact that the receiver or the register or any ministerial officer should have the same power?

Mr. McRAE. I say it is substantially the same, but I would rather vest the power in the judge than in the prosecutor.

Mr. KLEBERG. If the witness could purge himself before the receiver or the register he could do it before the district attorney.

Mr. McRAE. There is no provision of that kind. The bill says that for his refusal to attend he is guilty and may be prosecuted by information or indictment.

Mr. KLEBERG. If the gentleman will look at the latter part of the bill he will find that the nonattendance of the party must be owing to his own fault or neglect.

Mr. McRAE. But that does not say he shall not be indicted. My friend knows very well that scores and scores of poor men have been absolutely ruined in fortune and reputation though successful before the jury on a final trial. A party can be greatly damaged by filing information against him and subjecting him to proceedings of this kind. He may finally be declared not guilty; but by that time his money may be gone, his reputation injured, and his spirit broken; whereas the whole thing could have been settled in the first instance by a statement before the officer who wanted his testimony. If the party summoned to appear had been allowed to present his excuse, the whole trouble would have been avoided.

Mr. KLEBERG. My experience does not agree with what the gentleman states, and I have had some experience as district attorney. I have never noticed in the administration of the law, so far as it has come under my observation, that parties were "oppressed," as the gentleman from Arkansas puts it. But after all, would not the witness finally be compelled to appear before the commissioner or the register and give his excuse? What, then, is the difference?

Mr. McRAE. There is no provision for that. The writ is returned and the officer is prosecuted by information.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LACEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is within the experience of every member of the House that depositions are taken every day before notaries public throughout the land. In a case pending, for instance, in Chicago, a deposition may be taken in the District of Columbia or in any State or Territory of the Union. There would be the same reason for conferring upon notaries public the power to punish for contempt or to indict witnesses refusing to appear before them as exists in the case now presented to us in this bill. The situation in the two cases is precisely the same.

That there ought to be some method of compelling a witness to appear before a register so long as the register is authorized to hear testimony goes without saying; that this is the correct method does not seem to me true.

It is a common everyday experience that where a witness refuses to appear before the officer authorized to take a deposition, that officer under the law and the comity of States is permitted, through appeal to the courts, to have the person brought before him and his deposition taken. The court orders the witness to appear, if in the judgment of the court he ought to appear. But in that case a hearing is given to a witness before an attempt is made to punish him by indictment. Here, however, is a proposition to confer upon a register of the land office an authority granted to no other person in the land authorized to take testimony except a judicial officer.

It is true that Congress at the last session passed a bill somewhat similar to this, but with many more safeguards, conferring some sort of power in regard to witnesses who may refuse to appear before military courts. It was feared then, and so stated in the House, that that measure was but the opening of the door to more legislation of the same kind. But the advocates of the measure said: "The case of a military court is unique; there is no other court like it; there will be no other case like the case arising in a military court." So the bill was passed and became a law. Now comes a second bill, proposing to make it an indictable offense for a party to refuse to appear before the register of the land office. Why not confer upon the parties in interest or upon the receiver or register of the land office the power to make application to a judicial officer—to a court in the proper district—laying the facts before the court, so that it may be determined whether the witness shall appear and testify?

Gentlemen have stated that in the land offices many cases come up involving millions of dollars. Why, sir, in cases involving a million dollars, where a witness corruptly refuses to testify, this bill would not make him testify. The power conferred would not begin to equal the contempt power of a judicial court. In such a case a court can put the person in contempt. Here there can be only a simple indictment over and over again, and a trial over and over again, until the rights of the parties are wasted. The proper method, it seems to me, to overcome the difficulty which now exists is by means of a law authorizing the parties in interest, or the register or receiver of the land office, to make proper showing before the court of the district and let the court determine whether the witness shall appear or not, and if the court determines that the witness should appear, and he refuses to appear and testify, the court can punish him for contempt as any other court can do in a similar case. But I would not under any circumstances say that refusal to appear before a nonjudicial officer to testify shall be a misdemeanor and punishable by indictment.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, in answer to my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I do not think the proposition suggested by him would be valid. I do not believe a court could be either permitted or required to dance attendance upon a committee or a mere executive officer to try a lawsuit to determine whether or not A or B should be brought before the court to testify. The gentleman's proposition would involve the necessity of actually trying a lawsuit, with the right of appeal, certiorari, and all the various proceedings known to the law, to determine whether one witness or several witnesses, possibly 25 or 50, should be required to attend and tell what they know of the case pending before an executive officer. No such law has ever been enacted.

Upon examining the original act providing for the Industrial Commission I find that my friend from New York was mistaken in asserting that that law contains a provision of that kind. If there has been enacted such a provision with reference to the Industrial Commission it must have been by way of some amendment in some subsequent law.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] to make a motion to amend, as I understand he desires to insert the word "willfully."

Mr. McRAE. And also to strike out the words "information or."

Mr. LACEY. Well, the difficulty about the latter amendment which the gentleman suggests is that the punishment, light as it is, is usually obtained by information, because that is a much quicker and shorter process.

Mr. McRAE. Still, such a proceeding would make the matter very much more serious, and would impose upon the officer the necessity of looking into the facts before there could be any indictment.

Mr. LACEY. But the information would be filed by the district attorney, or, if he regarded the case as more serious, he could refer it to the grand jury.

Mr. McRAE. That is the very point I make; that no man ought to be called on to answer an information of this sort unless by indictment of his peers, and the power to institute such a proceeding ought not be lodged in one man.

Mr. LACEY. I shall not object to the gentleman's offering his amendment.

Mr. McRAE. I offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 3, line 13, insert the word "willfully" before the word "neglecting."

In line 17 of the same section strike out the word "information or."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). These amendments may be regarded as pending, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. I now yield to my colleague from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] three minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of this debate the gentleman from Illinois asked why legislation so manifestly necessary as this had not been enacted in times past. I think the discussion on the bill has shown some of the reasons why its provisions have not been enacted into law.

The legal gentlemen on the floor do not seem to be able to agree as to the exact provision which should be made for the punishment of witnesses who refuse to testify. They have offered a very great many suggestions which, it seems to me, do greater credit to their ingenuity than to their judgment. The committee carefully examined this matter, considered it in all its phases, and agreed upon a provision which we believe, while compelling the attendance of witnesses, will at the same time work no unnecessary hardship upon witnesses.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very important measure. It should have been enacted into law years ago. As matters now stand the Government, as a great landowner, has no power to summon witnesses before registers and receivers for the purpose of securing evidence in cases where the interests of the Government demand that witnesses be obliged to attend.

There are many cases where, by reason of intimidation or from other causes, entrymen find it difficult to secure the attendance of witnesses before the receivers and registers in cases involving the ownership of their homes and lands. It is believed that this bill will remedy this condition of affairs, and I hope it will be adopted by the House.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LACEY. I ask a separate vote on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE].

The SPEAKER. Prior to that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RODEY] should be considered, which provides, on page 2, line 18, after the words "United States," to insert what has been read by the Clerk.

The amendment was considered, and agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The next amendment is the first amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE], which the Clerk will report.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was considered, and agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment proposed by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The amendment of Mr. McRAE was again read.

The amendment was considered, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

The bill was considered, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

EDUCATION OF THE DEAF AND DUMB.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question, but, first, I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry, if in order; that is to say, if sixty minutes have expired since the beginning of the call of committees?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that that time has elapsed.

Mr. GROW. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, viz, H. R. 2041, to aid in establishing homes in the States and Territories for teaching articulate speech, etc., to deaf children, etc.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman is in order, but the Chair would suggest to the gentleman that it would not be in order to limit the proceedings of the House to any one particular bill.

Mr. GROW. Then I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, under the rule, to consider bills on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The other motion would not be in order unless the gentleman was authorized by the committee to make such a motion.

Mr. GROW. Then I will leave that out, and upon that motion, or before it is submitted, I ask unanimous consent that the House allow this bill to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to consider the bill which he has indicated to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, is the bill on the House Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Under this order of the call of committees I do not think this motion is in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. It is entirely within the rules, after sixty minutes have elapsed, for any member to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, or, if instructed by a committee, to make the same motion to take up a particular bill, which motion would be subject to one amendment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] makes the general motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and coupled with that motion he makes a request for unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if that is done, do we proceed with the Union Calendar in regular order, right on down?

The SPEAKER. If the motion of the gentleman is carried, the first bill on the Union Calendar will be the one to be considered.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And then the next would be the second bill on the same Calendar?

The SPEAKER. After the first one is disposed of, the next bill on the Calendar would be in order, of course.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. From what I know of the bill, or what I have heard of it, I think I should prefer having the bill considered in Committee of the Whole, and I insist on that.

Mr. GROW. Then I insist on my motion.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the request for unanimous consent, and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. UNDERWOOD) there were—ayes 47, noes 21.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 88, answered "present" 8, not voting 151; as follows:

HOMES FOR TEACHING CERTAIN DEAF CHILDREN.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Calendar. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2041) to aid in establishing homes in the States and Territories for teaching articulate speech and vocal language to deaf children before they are of school age.

Whereas Mary S. Garrett and Emma Garrett (deceased, her sister), did on February 2, 1892, establish at the city of Philadelphia a home for the training in speech of deaf children before they are of school age, which home has been continued by said Mary S. Garrett by her own charitable contributions and contributions of other persons, aided by a small appropriation of money by the State of Pennsylvania; and

Whereas it has been clearly proven by such training in said home that deaf children can learn articulate speech and language by the use of the eye for all practical purposes as well as children who hear can learn through the ear, provided they have this training in infancy and early childhood: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose herein specified, to be paid to the following persons as trustees for said fund: Ex-Governor Daniel H. Hastings, ex-Governor Robert E. Pattison, Frank K. Hipple, Charles C. Harrison, and Alfred C. Tevis, to be expended in payment for the time and expenses of not less than 50 persons, to become qualified as teachers in said system of teaching the deaf before they are of school age, so as to become teachers in such homes as may be established in the States and Territories and the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That persons who are to become teachers in such homes as may be established as aforesaid shall be selected, on the recommendation of the governor of each State and Territory and by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, by said Mary S. Garrett, or, in case of her death, by her successor or successors, as the principal of the aforesaid home at Philadelphia, from all the States and Territories of the Union, including the District of Columbia, not less than one person from each State and Territory and said District. All said persons so selected for teachers shall remain at Philadelphia and attend daily the exercises at said home as long as the said Mary S. Garrett or her successor shall deem advisable, not exceeding one year, and each of said teachers, on completing their training, if in the judgment of said Mary S. Garrett or her successor the said person is thought to be a competent teacher for the purpose herein specified, shall receive a certificate to that effect signed by said Mary S. Garrett or her successor.

SEC. 3. That said trustees or a majority of them shall file with the Treasurer of the United States an itemized account, with proper vouchers, for the expenditure of the money hereby appropriated.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Clerk to read the report accompanying this bill.

The report (by Mr. GROW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Education, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2041) to aid in establishing homes in the States and Territories for teaching articulate speech and vocal language to deaf children before they are of school age, report the same with a recommendation in favor of its passage.

It needs no words to portray the hard fate in life of children born deaf. The mere statement of the fact is of itself sufficient to enlist the cooperation and aid of all the humane in relieving, so far as may be within their power, the hardship of those thus afflicted. The home established by the two sisters, Miss Mary S. and Miss Emma Garrett, at Philadelphia, February 2, 1892, has proven conclusively that deaf children can learn speech and vocal language just as well for all practical purposes as those who hear, provided they have proper training in infancy before they are of school age.

Your committee take the liberty of adopting as part of their report the following from the circular addressed to the public by Miss Mary S. Garrett, now the principal in conducting said home in Philadelphia:

"In the past ages the deaf were the victims of deliberate as well as ignorant cruelty. In the present age they are no longer deliberately drowned, as in ancient Rome, or exposed to die, as under the laws of Lycurgus. But they are still largely sufferers from a modified form of the ignorance which formerly ranked them with imbeciles and now fails to realize that they are able to learn and to do anything and everything the hearing child can if they are given precisely the same opportunity.

When a hearing baby is learning to talk the mother does not use motions to it, because it has not commenced to understand her language; but she repeats over and over again the pet names she calls it; tells it again and again to say "papa" and "mamma," etc., until it learns to understand and then copy her words. She is quick to discover, encourage, and correct its first attempt at articulation. It has been proven by experiment that if the attention of the deaf child be directed to the mouth with the same persistency, and if it be talked to just the same by everyone who is with it, that it will learn the speech and language through the eye which the hearing child learns through the ear. Like the hearing child, it has a hereditary tendency to talk, and only needs the same opportunity to learn. No more motions should be used with it than with the hearing child. Its attention should always be guided to the mouth of the speaker and concentrated there. Little by little it will begin to attach meaning to the words and sentences it sees, just as a hearing child learns little by little to attach meaning to the words and sentences it hears.

The names of objects may be taught with the objects, which is really the way hearing children learn them in their homes. When a hearing child is learning to talk its hearing gives it the advantage of every word spoken in its presence, while the deaf child only has the advantage of seeing the mouth of the person it happens to be looking at or who is talking to it. This difference must be made up to the deaf child by a great amount of repetition of the words and the language it is being taught. Deaf babies begin to say "ma-ma-ma" just as hearing babies do, but as a rule they are not encouraged in repeating the word. If they were, and were properly guided to further articulation, they would talk. The ordinary practice, however, when an infant is discovered to be deaf is to make no further effort to teach it to talk or read the lips, but immediately to begin motions with it.

"Just here begins the cruel system of training the deaf differently from the hearing, and making them feel from the very outset of life that they are peculiarly unlike those around them. The truth is that it is the faulty system of training that makes them different by depriving them, during their infancy, before school age, of the free and constant communication with other minds which the hearing have.

"There is a popular delusion that the vocal organs of deaf children are defective. The fact is that such cases are rare exceptions, and that as a rule their vocal organs are normal. The articulation of consonant sounds depends on certain positions of the lips, tongue, teeth, and palate. The quality of vocal sounds depends on certain positions of the tongue. Any deaf child who can cry and scream, and has lips, tongue, teeth, and palate, has the necessary vocal organs for speech.

"Until society learns that by doing its whole duty to the deaf so they can become like normal people, we shall need efficiently and intelligently conducted homes for the training in speech of deaf children.

"The work of this generation should be to establish such homes, and if this work is done as it ought to be, the next generation will thus learn to do the work for all deaf children in their own homes. And it will by that time become as natural to parents and to the community to give them exactly the same training through the eye as they give hearing children through the ear."

This bill only provides for the selection from each State and Territory of persons to attend at the home in Philadelphia as students to become teachers in such homes as may be established in the States and Territories for the teaching speech and vocal language to deaf children before they are of school age. It is not proposed to establish any institution or to aid any already established. This appropriation of money, therefore, would require no additional or subsequent appropriations by Congress in order to make it efficient for accomplishing the object specified in the bill.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, this bill does not establish any school or furnish aid to any school already established. It does not interfere with any system of education established in any State. It simply provides a donation of $100,000, to be expended for teachers who can teach these unfortunates of the race from about 2 years old until they are of school age, when they go into the common schools. As to the constitutional power to make such a donation, Congress has been doing it for years in paying men to teach Indians to plow, and is not the human intellect of more consequence in its development than any grain that is sowed by mankind? These unfortunates are taken as soon as they are able to leave their mothers.

This school desires to have the children as soon as they cut their teeth, if they are to have the full advantage of these homes. The children stay in the homes for a few years, learn articulate language by sight of the lips, and then go into the common schools into the classes there, and many stand at the head of their classes with hearing children. There are schools all over the country to teach the deaf. They take them, however, at school age, not as infants. The period most important in man's life is lost. The first six years of our existence are more important for the future than any other twenty.

It is during that period that ideas are first imbibed and most of our knowledge comes through the eye and not the ear. The first idea the infant in the cradle obtains is from sight, and when lying there helpless and you speak to it its bright eye flashes upon you with a greater intensity than in after years it hardly ever possesses. They gather by sight from the lips of the mother, or those teaching them, the first ideas of their existence. Malformation in the voice hardly ever exists. Every baby born with a larynx, pallet, tongue, and teeth can talk; if they can make vocal sounds they can learn to talk. It is rarely that you find a malformation in the organs of speech.

In the ear there is a combination of formation; there is a bone formation, a tubular formation, and a muscular formation, and therefore there are more malformations in hearing than in sight. It is for this class of people, born in the world with the loss of this sense, which is next to that of sight, that this bill aims to benefit. Of all the senses given to the race, sight is the most important. As you open your eyes upon the creation, you gather all the ideas you have of objects that surround you. Whether you can hear or not makes no difference with that class of knowledge.

Now, it has been tested and proven in this school, begun first by the two Garrett sisters as a charity. The State of Pennsylvania makes now annually a small appropriation of money for its support, and what is the result? Graduates from that school have gone into the common schools of the country, taken their place in the school in every branch of learning and knowledge, and standing, many of them, first in their classes. I will have read by the Clerk a few of these cases. The deaf children can be taught before they are of school age to use language as well as the hearing children and to comprehend ideas spoken by others as well as the hearing children do. Is not this an object worthy of a contribution by the Government when it is establishing no institution interfering with the State?

I recognize that the State should provide systems of education. On the same principle that we send the teachers to the Indian tribes, that we send them to the Philippines, and to Porto Rico, this donation of money can be appropriated without establishing any precedent in legislation. Let the mothers of the country know that by constantly talking to deaf babies in the cradle and during their infancy they can teach them to talk as well as hearing children, and there will be no need of dumb asylums or schools in this country. The deaf infants will all grow up to womanhood and manhood with the ability to converse with anybody the same as hearing children and with the ability to learn any branch of knowledge, and to engage in any of the pursuits of life. In acquiring knowledge, if the children are taught for their first eight years according to this system they need no more aid, but can go to the common school and institutions of learning and take their places in all branches taught there and hold their own with the hearing children.

Now, I will ask, before proceeding with further remarks, that the Clerk will read the extracts I send up from letters, which letters I have in full. They are letters from teachers in the common schools to which these children, deaf born, have gone at the age of seven and eight and nine years from this home for teaching deaf children. They show what its advantages are in relieving this great misfortune that falls upon children born without the important sense of hearing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Letters from teachers in the common schools for hearing children sent to Miss Garett relative to boys and girls from her school for deaf children.

Letter of Hanna B. Morrison, Shenandoah, Pa., Dececmber 17, 1901:

"Raymond is making very rapid progress in his studies. * * * There is not the slightest difficulty in our understanding each other. He takes part in all exercises and requires no extra attention whatever."

Letter of Rachel E. McConald, Shakers, N. Y., December 2, 1901:

"Fredericka is doing nicely and has not been any drawback. I send you her school report: Arithematic, 100; spelling, 100; reading, 88; penmanship, 100; drawing, 98; geography, 100; history, 98; physiology, 88."

Letter of Sarah W. Darlington, Uniontown, Pa., November 25, 1901:

"I am now positively certain that Isabel can do as well as any of the children in her class. Her studies with me this year are English and Latin, and in both subjects she is doing well. She not only always has a good recitation in her own turn, but also is often quick to correct any mistake on the part of some one else. It is really a surprise to me to find how readily she grasps the enormous difficulties of Latin syntax. * * * My assistant tells me that she is improving in her arithmetic and algebra. In Latin she is first in a class of six. In English she is above the class average. In algebra, arithmetic, and physiology, her teacher is well satisfied. I feel very strongly, after my experience in teaching Isabel, that a child which has been trained in your school is entirely fitted to work with hearing children and to meet the same requirements."

Letter of R. M. McCarroll, Astonville, December 12, 1901:

"Edgar and Albert have made term averages, which exempt them from taking an examination. Edgar ranks first in his class. He is particularly good in spelling and in taking the words from my dictation. He rarely fails to get a perfect mark."

Letter of Mary Beveridge, Kittanning, Pa., December 4, 1901:

"I am glad to tell you that Herbert is doing excellent work in school. He understands almost everything I say to him, and what he says is nearly always intelligible to me. His papers in English are nearly all perfect, and he takes the lead in spelling and geography. It seems marvelous to me that any one deprived of hearing should make such progress."

Letter of Madge R. P. Jones, teacher in school in West Philadelphia, January 4, 1902:

"Anna is doing very nicely with her lessons. She seems to experience no difficulty in fully understanding all that is said. I am inclined to forget very often that she can not hear a sound.

JANUARY 6, 1902.

Hon. GALUSHA A. GROW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GROW: * * * I think you will be glad to know that I have received from the Government school in St. Petersburg a set of questions to be answered "before they establish such homes in Russia," and on Tuesday last I received a visit from Eugene Joffriaud, doctor, Imperial Russian Navy, accompanied by a lady, and they had received from St. Petersburg the same set of questions, with orders to visit our home. I feel that this will lead to the establishing of similar homes in Russia, and in answering their questions I told them that if they really wished to make such homes a success it would be necessary to send someone here who spoke English well, as so many of them do, for me to train in our methods.

Yours, very gratefully, MARY S. GARRETT.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, the difference between this teaching and the teaching of the dumb asylums is, that the children are taken as infants, and there is a nursery connected with the home; they are taught from the first articulate language by taking from the lips of those talking to them by sight. What they have accomplished these letters show. Now, there are no dumb asylums in this country of any considerable number that take these infants. It is after the school age that they take them. In the last Congress all of you gentlemen will remember that you received a great number of letters from people connected with dumb asylums, saying that this attempt was of no use, and they were so solicitous about the Treasury of the United States that they appealed to you not to throw away $100,000.

If the mothers of the world knew that by talking to their deaf-born infants the same as to the hearing ones they could teach them language, fit them for any affairs in life, there would be no dumb asylums anywhere, and "Othello's occupation would be gone." These people have no monopoly to relieve the misery of human nature.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GROW. Certainly.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If this money was appropriated, would not the people of Pennsylvania have a monopoly?

Mr. GROW. No, sir; they do not have a cent of it. This money would go to pay the expenses of the persons that come from the different States to be taught. When these teachers return to their respective States where they live, their influence in establishing an approved institution in those States like this is the return for the money paid. This home in Philadelphia does not get a cent of the money donated.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. One other question. Is there not a considerable percentage of the persons teaching the deaf and dumb who believe that this is not a successful method?

Mr. GROW. Every person at the head of a dumb asylum does not believe it; that was the purport of the letters you got in the last Congress.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Most of them are against this method of teaching.

Mr. GROW. I do not know what their opinions are. I know by the experience of this home itself, and you know by the letters you have just heard read that this method is a success. I have seen the children talking across the table at their meals, the same as any other children, and yet you have letters saying that it would be impossible to teach articulate language in this way, and you have received statements as true which were all untrue; statements made by parties who did not know anything about what they were writing about. They knew about their own employment, and they did not want that interfered with. I say that that kind of selfishness of human nature has no place where the future of a large part of the race is at stake.

If we give to infants who are born deaf the opportunity to learn articulate speech by putting them on the same plane with other children, instead of confining them to schools where they are taught to talk only by their fingers and by motions, they become qualified for communication by natural speech with others, the same as hearing children do.

Of what consequence is a donation of $100,000 to secure such a result? Congress at its last session voted over a quarter of a million dollars to purchase garden seeds to send to the farmers of this country, which might just as well have been thrown into the mill pond.

The utility of this system has been demonstrated by actual proof and is no longer a matter of theory. You are not asked to appropriate any money for a particular institution—for this school of Philadelphia or any other. It happens to be the most successful school; that is the only reason for putting it into this bill. If the mothers of the country can be made to understand that an infant born deaf can be taught to talk by sight, that is all we desire. That is the whole benefit that we expect to accomplish by means of these homes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania do credit to the generosity of his heart. But we sit here as national legislators to handle national questions. The gentleman seeks to procure an appropriation of $100,000 for the establishment of a school at Philadelphia.

Mr. GROW. No, sir. The school has been established there for five years.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then this appropriation is for its support?

Mr. GROW. No, sir. I do not propose to establish any school, but simply to pay the expenses——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Yes; to pay the expenses.

Mr. GROW (continuing). Of persons to go there and learn this system of education.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In view of the fact that Indiana is the center of the population of the United States, has the gentleman any objection to an amendment providing that Indianapolis, within 100 miles of the center of population of our country, shall have this appropriation?

Mr. GROW. If you have a school there teaching by this method I will change the bill so as to name Indianapolis instead of Philadelphia.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I have already suggested that the gentleman's heart was generous——

Mr. GROW. You have not any school at Indianapolis that teaches this system. If you have, I will make the change I have just mentioned.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. There would be no trouble about——

Mr. GROW. I do not propose to establish any school.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Has there been any law enacted heretofore by which the United States Government gave money, as this bill proposes to do, to schools of this kind?

Mr. GROW. You give money for the benefit of children who can hear—children less deserving than these deaf-mutes. You vote money for the Philippines and for Porto Rico and for the Indians.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But that is not in point. I believe there has been no law of Congress heretofore to provide for the deaf and dumb?

Mr. GROW. No, sir; I have tried for three Congresses to pass a donation like this.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The State of Pennsylvania has provided for her deaf and dumb, has she not?

Mr. GROW. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Have not various States of the Union made such provision?

Mr. GROW. Not like this. Provisions of this kind were begun by charitable contribution; and the work has been continued in the same way in part. There are but two paying children in this home.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does not the gentleman see that he fails to discriminate between the case of the Philippines, Porto Rico, etc., and the case of the States? Does he not understand that Congress legislates arbitrarily for the islands that have been annexed to the United States, while the States, having their own separate jurisdiction, have been taking care of their own people in matters of this kind?

Mr. GROW. Yet I venture the assertion that there are not more than one or two States of the Union that have any schools teaching by the methods that this school teaches, taking children under school age.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. As my last question, let me ask the gentleman whether he has provided that the persons who are to receive this species of education shall be recommended by the governors of the various States?

Mr. GROW. That is part of the bill. If the gentleman from Indiana can suggest a better form or a better method for accomplishing the object of this bill, I will gladly accept such an amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. My understanding of the bill as proposed by the gentleman is that he provides that the governor of the States shall recommend the amounts to be expended in these cases, and, as I further understand him, the manner of the expenditure of the fund to be raised by the States——

Mr. GROW (interrupting). No; not all. If the gentleman will permit me I will state that these persons are allowed to remain a certain length of time at this home, and it is believed that such homes would be desirable in all of the States, but Congress has nothing to do with that. There are 45 States, and the Territories are included, with the District of Columbia, in the provisions of this bill. I do not know what provision can be better adopted than this.

If the gentleman desires to reduce the amount, of course he can do so by an amendment. I desire, for my own part, to provide by this donation by Congress that the children who are born deaf shall have in the common schools in the States and in the Territories established by the States the same privileges which are accorded to those children who are able to speak and who have their normal hearing. I propose that we shall do what we can by this donation to give these unfortunates the primary education that will fit them for the common schools with other children who are more fortunate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. As I understand it, this bill provides that the ladies who have supervision of these schools shall have a veto on the governor's action if they so desire.

Mr. GROW. Well, if the gentleman can adopt a better plan, I will certainly be willing to accept it. It is a question of vast importance to many people in the country, a question which will enable these unfortunates to be educated in same manner as hearing children, and if the gentleman can offer a better proposition than this, or one which will have more good results to the persons who are so afflicted, I shall be glad to accept it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But the gentleman—and that is the point I am making—does not make clear the difference between legislating with reference to State matters and Territorial matters. Now, I would like to have him explain how it is that he can draw a distinction between the bill which he proposes and the suggestion I have made——

Mr. GROW (interrupting). I do not think that children in the Territories or the States would have the least objection to acts of charity or benevolence on the part of the General Government.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. You mean with reference to the United States Government?

Mr. GROW. Necessarily, and especially the children in all parts of the country, many of whom are helpless, because of the conditions to which I have referred, certainly deserve as much consideration as we have given to the children of the Indian tribes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What does the State of Pennsylvania, in its legislation, say with reference to that?

Mr. GROW. With reference to what?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I mean with reference to taking care of their own deaf and dumb children.

Mr. GROW. Everything is being done that can be done to enable the deaf and the dumb to hear and to talk.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I wish to ask the gentleman if the legal authorities of the State of Pennsylvania have given their consent to the recommendation which the gentleman himself makes in this bill?

Mr. GROW. Certainly; and they have made an appropriation for it already in that State.

Now, I repeat, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman can show any better plan or a more meritorious system than that which is proposed in the pending bill I shall willingly accede to it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania how much the State of Pennsylvania has given to this kind of charity?

Mr. GROW. I do not know exactly the amount, but my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHOWALTER], to whom I now yield the floor, can answer the gentleman's inquiry, and he can give the exact amount which has been expended by the State in that direction. He was in the legislature when the first appropriation was made.

I yield now to my colleague [Mr. SHOWALTER] as much time as he desires.

Mr. SHOWALTER. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Missouri, I will say that the institution in Philadelphia known as the Home for Training in Speech of Deaf Children before they are of school age, is at present a State institution and supported by the State. I can not give the exact amount in dollars and cents which has been appropriated for its maintenance, but it reaches the sum of thirty or forty thousand dollars annually.

The home was started, or an appropriation made for it, in the session of the Pennsylvania legislature of 1891, the appropriation made being $15,000. Governor Patterson, then the chief executive of the State, was appointed on the board. The bill provided for his appointment, and also for the appointment of the auditor-general and the State treasurer. These three gentlemen constituted a board to secure a location and build the home. Colonel Bennett, of Philadelphia, donated the ground sufficient for this purpose. The home was erected, as my worthy colleague has said, partly by donations from charitable people and partly by the $15,000 which had been appropriated. It has been in successful operation ever since, and to-day there are sixty children under school age receiving instruction in that home. They are taken from one year up.

The little ones are taught to speak articulate language, and the success of the efforts in this direction has been wonderful, as is indicated by the letters received from teachers throughout the different States where these children have been sent. To my mind there is no better use for public funds than to make such an appropriation as this. The idea is not to appropriate for the Pennsylvania institution. It is for the States of the Union and the Territories. Money will be spent in educating teachers from these different States and Territories, who will go back to their respective States, and through their influence like institutions will be inaugurated.

I trust my friends on the other side, and especially my friend, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], will not interfere with this appropriation, but will concede the justice of it and give it their hearty support.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that this bill will receive the approval of Congress. Let us inquire what is the object of this proposed law? Simply this, to educate teachers from every State in the Union, so that they may be fully equipped to teach little deaf children to talk, and thus enable them to enter the public schools of their respective sections of the country.

Is this practicable? Can it be done? Has it been done? To all of these inquiries I reply in the affirmative. It is practicable. It can be done. It has been done. Pennsylvania, the great State that I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor, has demonstrated beyond the peradventure of a doubt the success of the oral method in the instruction of the deaf. In the city of Scranton the Pennsylvania oral institution for the education of the deaf is located. It yearly turns out many pupils well qualified to successfully fill most all the avocations of life.

Several other States have like institutions which are doing a grand and good work. America is indebted to Europe for the idea that deaf children could be taught speech. It was there first demonstrated that it could be successfully accomplished. But it is due to Pennsylvania to say that she was the first State in the Union—aye, the first State in the world—to establish a home for the training in speech of deaf children before they are of school age. When, as a member of the appropriation committee of the Pennsylvania senate, I, with other senators, visited the Pennsylvania oral school for the training in speech of the deaf, our attention was called to the wonderful development in speech of a mute child two years of age, which had been left by its mother at the school.

She was a poor widow and left the child against the protests of the authorities, who assured her that there were no provisions for taking children before they were of school age. The mother walked off and left it, well knowing that the kind and sympathetic heart of the great and renowned principal of the school—the pioneer of oral instruction for the deaf before they are of school age—Miss Emma Garrett, now of sacred memory, would take it in and care for it. The child had been at the institution some months at the time of our visit, and could talk as well as any hearing child of the same age. It was a revelation to the committee. Miss Garrett informed us that the same results could be attained by any mute child in degree, having reference to the difference in mental endowment of the children; that the reason the mute child could not speak was because he was not taught to speak; that if he was treated the same as a hearing child the results would be the same—he would learn to talk just as soon as the hearing child.

We could not doubt the truthfulness of her statement, for had she not given us a practical demonstration of it? She stated she proposed resigning her position as principal of the Scranton institution and intended establishing a home for the training in speech of children before they are of school age. I said to her the State should do this. Upon my return to Harrisburg I prepared and introduced a bill carrying an appropriation for the establishment of the home, and although there were but two weeks of the session left the importance of the measure was such that it passed both houses and received the approval of the governor.

The home was established at Philadelphia and has been in successful operation since 1892. Were it possible for the members of this House to visit that home—now enlarged to two homes—and there see and converse with the 68 little tots from 2 years up, I am as positive as I am of my own existence that there would not be a single vote against this bill. My word for it, a visit to the home is well worth the time and expense of making it. Looking at the matter from a dollar-and-cents point of view, would not the enactment of this bill be wise legislation? Would it not be great economy if by the enactment of this bill you could in time do away with the deaf and dumb institutions?

If by the passage of this law and the establishment of homes in the different States of the Union for the training in speech of deaf children before they are of school age and thus prepare the children for attendance at the public schools with speaking children you can do away with deaf and dumb institutions, are you not doing well? Would it not be a great saving and would it not be a great advantage to the children? Would they not be better fitted for the duties of life, better equipped to successfully compete in the struggles incident to human existence? Is it not our duty to do the very best that can be done for these little afflicted wards of the nation? Would it be wise and proper to subject our speaking children to the rule that they are not to be taught to speak until they are 6 years of age? Certainly not.

Well, then, is it wise and proper to subject the mute child to this rule? Give the mute child a faithful, affectionate, educated teacher, and you have the word of the most devoted friends and teachers of the deaf that he will make the same progress in speech and intelligence as his hearing brother. Now, if this be true—and who will controvert it—how important it becomes that we provide the way to supply the teachers to these little ones. This bill opens up the way. Pass it, and before six months roll round there will be young women from every State in the Union gathered in Philadelphia preparing themselves for this noble work. Pass it, and before five years elapse I predict that every State in the Union will have established homes similar to the home in Philadelphia, and the great work of training the deaf in speech—a work too long delayed—will have been properly begun—begun in infancy, where it should be commenced, and with the absolute assurance of being a success.

What a blessing you will confer upon these afflicted children of our common Father. Think of it. To the ear forever closed and sealed you open, by the education of the eye, the tones of the human voice and affection's endearing words. You add a new sense and open up a new world to the afflicted ones. You translate them from a world of silence into a world of harmonies; from a life of seclusion and limited possibilities into a life of busy activities and unbounded opportunities. To the tongue forever dumb you sunder its chords and bestow upon it the power of articulation. To the lips mute and silent as the tomb you give the art of speech, with all its wonderful versatility and power of utterance. The cadences of the human voice, who can fathom them? The sweet tones of affection of departed loved ones, how priceless; and who would erase them from memory's gallery? How paltry the sum this bill appropriates in comparison to the millions we almost daily appropriate for various purposes, and yet how important and far reaching in its results.

The passage of this bill will be a direct notice to the States of the Union to establish these homes, to commence the training in infancy of the mute child where it should commence. And what State is there that would not do so? Not one, I take it. The people of these States are a generous and philanthropic people. They are a justice-loving people, and they are quick to understand that it is the duty of the States to give the very best education and care to their afflicted ones.

Now, if the statements I have made are true, namely, that the mute child can be taught to speak and converse; that the reason he does not speak is because he has not been taught to speak; that if he had the same treatment as the hearing child the results would be the same, he would learn to talk and converse just the same as the hearing child; that the time to commence his training is in infancy. That after a few years spent in these homes the children are prepared for attendance at the public schools with hearing children.

If these statements are well-authenticated facts, how important that this bill become a law. In view of these facts and of the great importance of this measure I appeal to you, fellow-members. Vote for this bill. Pass this bill, and unborn generations will rise up and call you blessed. I appeal to the dauntless manhood of this House, to their well-known, generous, and philanthropic impulses, to their high sense of honor, to their desire at all times to do justice, to aid and protect the weak and afflicted, to vote for this bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is a thankless and unpleasant task for me to oppose what upon its face would seem, at first glance at least, to be a purely benevolent and charitable appropriation of money for a great object and purpose of beneficence. But I believe I should be lacking in my duty if I did not oppose this bill.

In the first place, independent of every question which has been met by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHOWALTER], it is a matter absolutely foreign to the duty of the United States, from any standpoint of public duty about which I know anything, to undertake to educate teachers for a purpose of this character.

I do not know all about the charitable institutions of the State of Pennsylvania. They may be derelict in their duty toward their citizens. I do not believe they are; but I know that the States of this Union as a rule are absolutely alert, with their official eyes pointed in every direction where any good can be gleaned for the suffering in their State. It is a matter of State duty. It is a matter within the jurisdiction of the States, and foreign to the jurisdiction of the United States. I imagine every State in this Union stands upon the same platform of charitable and beneficent purpose that the great State of Ohio does, and that State has many of these great public institutions; six of them for lunatics, one for the feeble-minded, another for epileptics, another for the deaf, and one for the dumb and blind, and all the various grades of affliction. They are carried on with a vast expenditure of money, running away up into many millions of dollars, and every one of them through their officers is carefully scanning the horizon of the world for every development of science that can be brought into action for the benefit of its inmates. I have no doubt that every State in this Union, in proportion to the development and wealth of the State, is doing just as much as the State of Ohio. I have only spoken of my own State because I know something about it.

Now, I have spoken thus far only upon the question of the public duty of the United States to appropriate money for the purpose of building up or aiding these institutions in any way. There is nothing peculiar to-day in the proposition to teach the deaf and the dumb to speak. I saw an exhibition of the effect of it in the institution in Ohio many years ago, and I saw the same thing here in the city of Washington eighteen years ago. I am told that this system is in full operation away out in the State of Colorado, and I do not believe there is one State of this Union that has within its borders a deaf and dumb asylum that is not experimenting with this identical plan that is proposed in this bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. This particular system?

Mr. GROSVENOR. This particular system; I mean the system of teaching the dumb, where their dumbness is caused by deafness, to articulate by observation of the lips. I have spoken only of the question of jurisdiction, the propriety of the General Government entering into this sort of business. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW] to other ills that mortal flesh is heir to, just as occult in their origin and just as difficult of management as the subject under consideration. Take the matter of the treatment of epileptics. We have in Ohio an epileptic asylum, exclusively for persons suffering with that malady. It has only been in operation as a separate and independent institution of the State some ten years, perhaps. During that time no less than two or three entire changes of treatment have been undergone. The State has dispatched its ablest specialists to foreign countries to study the latest discoveries in the matter of epilepsy in the great institutions in Europe.

The whole subject of this occult, curious and apparently incurable disease is being canvassed carefully, while nearly a thousand patients are suffering in that institution. Now, if somebody somewhere in some State has a specialist upon that subject, who thinks he has a little better system than the State of Ohio has—and I do not doubt he may have—why not appropriate money for that purpose, and try to alleviate the terrible burden that is pressing down upon so many of our fellow citizens? Insanity and all the various ills we find here in public institutions have just as good a right to claim the favor and sympathy of Federal support as this ailment. One may be in a different degree from the other, but the principle is exactly the same.

Let us see what there is in this bill in detail. It is proposed that the governor of each State and Territory may nominate, and this lady down at Philadelphia has to either confirm or reject the nomination of the governor, as she may see fit. If she approves the appointment, the person is to stay there, and there is to be paid for expenses and education $2,000 a year. Now, how much is to be for the expenses and how much for the education of the person I do not know, and it does not say. They put him here and pay him a price of $2,000 for his expenses. I take it the expense will go to the teacher in part; how much goes to the teacher I do not know. Five hundred dollars would be a pretty fair price. That would be $25,000 out of this sum to this good woman. Mighty good pay; no doubt about that! Far better than the $15,000 that the State of Pennsylvania has given her.

When you have this man or woman educated fully, let us see what is to become of him or her. He goes to Philadelphia and spends a year and learns this sign language, and he has appropriated for his benefit during that time $2,000. At the end of that time where does he go? He goes just wherever he pleases. He is under no obligation to anybody to provide himself with an appointment in any State institution that anybody knows anything about, and for aught that appears in the scheme he may go about as he pleases, having enjoyed one year at Philadelphia as a student in a law college, as a student in a business college, or a student anywhere, and having been paid for his time he may go somewhere and take employment in some State institution or not, just as he sees fit.

The bill is loosely drawn in any event, and it was quite well and apt and fortunate for the gentleman to say that it was a "donation" of $100,000, because that is exactly what it is, without any assurance to anybody that any good can ever come of it.

Now, I said that this had been a matter that had been experimented on in more places than one; and I hold in my hand a letter of a gentleman whom I believe was one of the originators of this very idea in the United States. I know that many years ago, as I have said, as many as eighteen years ago, I saw an exhibition of this very system here under the tutelage of the gentleman whose letter I am about to send to the Clerk's desk; and it seems to me that while it may be said that he has some prejudice against this institution, that the statement of a man of so high a character as he is ought to have a great deal of weight in this House when they enter upon the subject of appropriating $100,000 in a matter purely within the jurisdiction of the government of a State. Where shall we run next if this thing is going on? We are turning over a part of education to the supervision, to some extent, of the Federal Government. I will ask the Clerk to read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE COLUMBIA INSTITUTION FOR THE DEAF AND DUMB, KENDALL GREEN,
Washington, D. C., January 16, 1902.

Hon. DAVID B. HENDERSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The note from your private secretary inclosing a copy of what is called the Garrett bill is received.

I am leaving town in a couple of hours for Philadelphia to be gone for a day or two, and when I return will call upon you and speak fully with regard to this measure, but in the meantime I can say very earnestly that there is nothing to commend what is proposed in this bill.

The extravagant claims of Miss Garrett with regard to methods used in her school are not sustained by results. What she proposes to do at a great expense in the way of training teachers for the deaf is already done adequately in several places in this country.

There is really no reason why the bill should pass, and there are very many reasons why its passage would be regarded justly as a great misfortune.

I will explain these things fully to you in a very few days in a personal call.

Very respectfully and truly, yours,

E. M. GALLAUDET.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, after that letter was received by me I had an interview with the gentleman, the professor, and while he spoke kindly of the institution at Philadelphia he said that there was no public demand for any appropriation by Congress for any purpose of this kind, and he expressed to me the belief that the States of the Union were doing everything in their power with the latest information and discoveries that have been made to promote the interests of these unfortunate people.

This is opening a door admittedly new, because, as the gentleman from Indiana has very well said, the suggestion that we have legislated for Indian schools and for Porto Rican schools and for Filipino schools is no answer to the objection here; and surely the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not intend to argue to this House seriously that the duty of Congress toward the inhabitants of the States in this Union is exactly the same as its duty to the Territories of the nation and its dependencies in the islands of the seas. When the time comes, Mr. Chairman, the time will have arrived to abolish State lines, State authority, and State control of domestic affairs, and merge our system of States within the Union into a great nation, without States, without Territories, with one General Government, and these States mere provinces under one centralized power. I have been brought up in a different school of politics from that, and I will not consent that an appropriation of this kind shall be made without my protest. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Chairman, although this purports to be and is from the Committee on Education, yet it was understood when this bill was voted upon favorably for report to this House that that report was made entirely independent of any of the individual views which the members of the committee might have upon this question, and that, as the chairman of the committee stated to us at the time, each one and all of us, if we desired, could take such a position in regard to this bill as our own judgment and conscience should dictate.

As far as I am personally concerned, I can not favor the enactment of this bill, not only on account of the cogent reasons advanced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], but also on account of the phraseology of the bill itself. If you will look on the second page, at the seventh line, you will see that some four or five persons are combined as the trustees to hold this money and expend it for the purposes set forth in this bill. There is no provision here, in case of resignation or a declination to serve, as to who shall have the authority to appoint anybody else. Suppose every one of them should decline to serve, then there is no one authorized to appoint anyone else, and we should have enacted a law without any provision by which that law can hereafter be carried out.

I am opposed to it, in the second place, on account of another objection which occurs to my mind, namely, that there is no requirement in this bill that after a teacher has become qualified to give instruction in this way she shall ever be called upon or required to give it at all. It says that she shall be instructed for a period not exceeding one year, and then what? She can return to the State in which she lives, or wherever she sees fit, and is not required, Mr. Chairman, to do anything whatever. It does not say that she shall teach an hour; it does not say that she shall help organize any school; it does not say that she shall go into any home; it simply says that she shall receive an education set forth in this bill at the expense of the Government, at an average expense of $2,000, if we suppose it to be equally divided among the number that can be instructed.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. TIRRELL. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. May I ask the gentleman if the committee had any precedent of any instance where men had been hired to get an education such as this bill provides for—that is, where institutions had employed people to be educated?

Mr. TIRRELL. We had no evidence whatever.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Did the committee know of any precedent for such a proposition as employing people and paying them for their time to be educated; paying them $1,500, according to the gentleman from Ohio, and $500 for expenses? Did the committee have any such precedent before it of that kind.

Mr. TIRRELL. None whatever. The chairman of our committee, the eloquent gentleman from Pennsylvania, says that a precedent is established for the enactment of this law because we send teachers to the Indians and show them how to plow, and because we have sent teachers to the Philippines to instruct them. It seems to me there is no parallel at all in these illustrations. The Indians are the wards of the nation. They are the aborigines and owners of the soil; and as such, from time immemorial, they have been considered as under the care and protection and maintenance of the Government, at least in part.

Those teachers sent to the Philippines have all received their education at their own expense, or at the expense of the State in which they live. They are there in the same capacity that any teacher is appointed to a position. The only possible comparison that could be made is that the teachers are required by the Government to go into the schools established under the auspices of the United States.

I am opposed to this bill, Mr. Chairman, for the third reason that there has not be a scintilla of evidence shown, either before the committee or before this House, that there is any demand for anything of this kind. We have a small school, I am informed—so small that it is scarcely ever mentioned—in the city of Boston, known as the Horace Mann School, for the instruction of the deaf in this way. Its efforts have made so little impression upon the people of Massachusetts that I do not suppose there is one educator in fifty in the State that knows that such a school is in existence. And yet there are large institutions, not only in that State, but in other States throughout the Union, where instructions are given to the deaf, widely known, loyally supported, and extensively patronized.

It seems to me that if this scheme was practicable, if this scheme was feasible, if this could be carried out economically and with advantage to the people for that amount of money, that the great educational States of the nation would have heard something about it, and that many of these States, always ready to respond to the call of humanity, would have done something about it long before this.

Mr. Chairman, for these reasons, and for one additional reason which I am about to advance, I am opposed to this bill.

It appeared before the committee that in order to give instruction in articulate speech, such as is designed by this bill, it is necessary that you should take an infant at the age at which you ordinarily begin to teach an infant to speak, in order that this instruction may be effective or may amount to anything in the end; that if you take a child 4 or 5 years old it is too late to perform effectual work in this direction. Hence under this system of instruction you must take the mother with the infant a year old. You must provide a nursery and a home in which the mother and the family can be taken care of before you can accomplish anything under the provisions of this bill. The result, therefore, is simply this: You would educate these teachers to go into the several States, where they belong or where their homes may be, and they would have to go into the homes of the children—from home to home—to give this instruction. I do not believe that the United States has come down to being such a paternal Government that it is going to give individual instruction in all the millions of homes throughout the country in such a way as this.

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Chairman, I have the honor to be a member of the committee that favorably reported this bill, but I wish it distinctly understood that I was not one of the members of the committee who voted for its favorable report. It was distinctly understood that every member of the committee reserved the right to antagonize the bill in the House. In other words, I think there was scarcely anyone in favor of the bill except the distinguished chairman of the committee himself.

There is no man in this body for whose philanthropic and charitable feelings I have greater respect than for those of the distinguished and venerable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW]. It strikes me that this measure is paternalism run mad. Why should the Congress of the United States be donating $100,000 to a private school in Pennsylvania to assist in educating deaf and dumb children? Mr. Chairman, that is peculiarly the work of the States. Nearly every State of this Union to-day has a deaf and dumb asylum—one or more—where this system of teaching deaf mutes to utter articulate sounds is pursued. In the State that I have the honor to represent in part here we have two magnificent institutions engaged in this great work.

And even if it were not paternalism to grant this donation to the State of Pennsylvania or the city of Philadelphia, where this school is located, it would be discriminative, to say the least, to grant such an appropriation for one institution and not grant it to every similar institution in the land. I am most earnestly and emphatically opposed to the adoption of this bill. I do hope that the Committee of the Whole will vote it down.

Mr. Chairman, reserving the rest of my time, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL].

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill both as to its policy and on principle. If it were right for this Congress to adopt any measure of the kind, this bill would be wrong even as a matter of policy. We are asked here to appropriate $100,000 for the expenses and to pay for the time of not fewer than 50 persons, to be selected by the principal of this school from those recommended by the governors of the various States—$2,000 for each person, if only 50 persons are selected—for the payment of their expenses and time, not to exceed one year. Why, sir, the operation of the thing would be that these parties, selected from time to time, would be teachers in that school, yet paid by the Government of the United States! Why should there be such a discrimination in favor of that school? If it is our intention to establish a school of that kind, let it be done directly by the Government. I believe, however, no one would be in favor of so preposterous a measure. But that is just what this bill tends toward—the establishment of such schools, to be operated by the Government.

On principle, I would oppose a measure of this kind. To exercise such powers is contrary to the genius of our Government. Why should we say that we will take the dumb children as wards? Why not go further and include the blind? Why not proceed still further, on the same principle, and take the indigent children, who, although endowed with sight and hearing, are destitute of the means of procuring an education and need support while obtaining it? Pursuing the same idea, we would follow it up until the educational facilities of this country would be taken charge of by the National Government to the exclusion of the States.

Gentlemen, we can not afford to take the first step. This is simply an entering wedge. It may sound as though this were an eleemosynary or charitable measure for the benefit of unfortunate humanity; but it is vicious in its tendency; vicious in every respect. It will interfere with the exertions now being made in the various States in the direction of this kind of education. Every State in the Union is able to provide, and will provide, for all unfortunate people of this class. Let us not interfere with the States in the plans they have already undertaken. Let us not allow the entering wedge to be driven that will prove an interference with the educational systems in all the States and Territories.

I will not further occupy the time of the House, but only desire to record myself as opposed to this bill in every phase and from every standpoint.

Mr. BELLAMY. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

[Mr. GOLDFOGLE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, as I said in my first remarks——

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Chairman, the time remaining I desire to dispose of in part to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND]. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to occupy his time now or will he allow this side to proceed first?

Mr. GROW. I desire to occupy the floor in my own right, of course, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the remarks which have been made in opposition to the bill.

Mr. BELLAMY. I desire to yield also to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] such time as he may wish in the discussion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the time yielded to me, I do not desire to occupy the attention of the House. But my only wish in taking the floor at this time is to make a motion that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it lie upon the table. Of course, I will withhold that motion, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to be heard now, and will allow me to get the floor to submit the motion when he closes his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from North Carolina if he yielded the floor for this motion?

Mr. BELLAMY. I have yielded to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] for such motion as he wishes to make.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And I withheld the motion for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Pennsylvania to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Alabama withholds the motion pending the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW]?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to cut the gentleman off by a motion of that kind before he finishes his speech, if he will yield the floor back to me.

Mr. GROW. I propose to make a short reply to gentlemen who have spoken; but as I understood the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY] wanted to occupy his time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand there is another gentleman on this side of the House who desires to speak, so I yield back the floor.

Mr. GROW. I will move that the committee rise in time so that a vote may be taken.

Mr. BELLAMY. How many minutes have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina has forty-four minutes remaining.

Mr. BELLAMY. I yield such time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] as he may desire.

Mr. GROW. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] will yield for one moment, debate has not been closed, and the gentleman from Missouri would be entitled to the floor in his own right. There has been no allotment of time to the two sides, and I think the gentleman is entitled to the floor in his own time.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I only desire a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY], yielded time which he had remaining to the gentleman from Missouri, and the Chair so recognized the gentleman.

Mr. GROW. Exactly; but the gentleman from Missouri would be entitled to such time as he wants. Debate has not been closed, and there is no assignment of time between the two sides.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I desire but very little time, and only address the committee for the purpose of saying that, being a member of the Committee on Education, and the bill being before the House as it is, I might be understood as being in favor of the bill if I said nothing. I was not present at the meeting of the committee which determined to report the bill, and I am not for it, but opposed to it.

Of course, as to the general question of sympathy with the unfortunate, and of a desire to aid them in all proper ways, there is no room for discussion upon that; but as to the power of the Federal Government, and as to the duty of Congress to make any such appropriation as this, I might say that I think there is hardly any question about that. I think there is no power to do it, and therefore no duty to do it. Whatever ought to be done for these unfortunates ought to be done elsewhere and in another way. Certainly the Congress of the United States ought not to start in with this sort of legislation. The inevitable result would be the establishing of governmental institutions for the purpose of taking care of the deaf and dumb and teaching them speech.

This bill is objectionable in its particular terms and phraseology, if it were not objectionable on general principles. It provides for the recognition, advertisement, and exploitation of one institution devoted to this purpose. That is improper, however excellent that institution may be or however commendable the efforts of those who established it in the interests of this unfortunate class of the population.

Not to detain the House upon the subject, for I do not feel disposed to do so and think it entirely unnecessary, I merely wish to repeat what I said at the outset: That I did not help to report the bill; that I am not in favor of it; that I believe it ought not to pass.

I yield back to the gentleman from North Carolina the remainder of his time.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BELLAMY] desire to reserve his time?

Mr. BELLAMY. I reserve my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW], who addressed the Chair previous to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. GROW. I do not want to occupy the floor. I only call the attention of the Chair to the fact that debate has not been closed and no assignment of time has been made to the two sides. Therefore the gentleman who has asked recognition is entitled to it in his own right, not by the courtesy of anybody.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. VANDIVER. I think I can say all that I desire to say on this bill in two or three minutes. As a member of the committee having it in charge, I feel that it would hardly be proper for me to allow it to pass without saying that I can not give my consent to the passage of a measure of this kind, based, as I think it is, upon a false policy.

I have been under the impression that there is very little effort likely to be made really to pass such a measure, but that in the interests of those unfortunate people for whom it is intended to offer some relief we ought at least to allow the consideration and discussion of a method which seems to have been developed in late years for helping these people to learn to speak by sight instead of sound.

With that method I am in hearty sympathy, and my sympathies for those unfortunate people are so strong that I have scarcely felt it incumbent upon me to offer a minority report or a strong opposition to a consideration of the bill, although I am not able to give my consent to the appropriation by this Government of $100,000 for such a purpose. The truth is, if I thought the House in any danger of passing such a measure, or that it was really seriously considered by any great number of the members of the House, I should feel like offering as stubborn a resistance to it as in my power; for I am sure that neither the public——

Mr. CLAYTON. May I interrupt the gentleman from Missouri? Does the gentleman mean to say by that that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania has offered this measure merely for fun?

Mr. VANDIVER. Oh, no, sir; I do not mean to make such an insinuation as that. But I do mean to say that the general subject of this method of teaching deaf and dumb children appeals so much to my sympathy and to his sympathy that I could not find it in my heart to interpose an objection to allowing the measure to be brought to the attention of the House, because I think in the discussion there may be some light thrown upon this subject for the benefit of those people who are unfortunate by nature and not helped even by legislation in the States, and that it is a matter that belongs to the States to attend to. I was very glad that the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] found himself at least once on the right side of a question—on the Democratic side of it—and proposes to relegate the matter to the control of the States.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I ask the gentleman another question? Do you think that there is any power in the Federal Constitution authorizing Congress to go into the business generally of establishing eleemosynary institutions?

Mr. VANDIVER. I do not want to enter into a discussion of that particular question. It involves a constitutional question.

Mr. CLAYTON. Do you not think that power is lacking in Congress?

Mr. VANDIVER. I think it would be exceedingly bad policy to do so; but not being a constitutional lawyer, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to go into the question of the constitutionality of everything that comes up. I think, sir, it might possibly be constitutional for this Congress to pass a law that people should make grindstones out of green cheese, but I do not think it would help the grinding a bit. Suffice to say, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the wisdom and good sense of this body will find expression in a favorable vote on this bill. I now reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHOWALTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, on the constitutional question there is no doubt in my mind this Government can expend money for information. We are doing it all the time in publishing books and in distributing them. We sent a commission to Japan half a century ago to gain information useful to mankind, and books were published giving a record of it. We can expend money for a useful purpose in the discretion of Congress. This is not to establish a school nor to aid one already established. There is nothing in the bill of that kind. It simply provides that where there is any person so disposed the governor can recommend that he or she shall go to this school and see its processes for teaching this unfortunate class of children, and the expenses of such person shall be paid out of the donation made. It is not paying the school anything.

Supposing anybody in the city of Washington or in the State of Oregon wants to go there to gain information as to this method of teaching this class of unfortunates, their expenses are to be paid out of this appropriation.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] opposes this bill for the reason that the Government might just as well establish epileptic asylums and others for all the ills flesh is heir to. Physical ailments have nothing whatever to do with the principle of this bill and the question involved in it. This bill provides simply for education, by which good citizenship is finally secured in the training of the human intellect. It is not a question of physical endurance, or pain and misery to be relieved. If I had the power I would pass this bill. I would say, as Thaddeus Stevens said in the legislature of Pennsylvania in establishing by law our common school system, "If I owned the gold mines of Ophir I would scatter its yellow dust over the human intellect until men and women should grow to the stature of angels and archangels."

Can it be said that there is no power in the Republic to secure good citizenship by education? That would be a strict construction similar to that given by our hairsplitting constitutional lawyers in the last Congress, who insisted that an elected member could not be excluded from taking a seat by reason of an offense which would be sufficient for expelling him, which offense was well known by the House at the time of admission. A majority could exclude, and it required two-thirds to expel.

We have the right to donate $100,000, or other sum of money, for educating, so as to fit for good citizenship a class of intelligent beings subject to our control. Last Congress we voted $270,000 for garden seeds to send to the farmers of the country without a constitutional objection. The gentleman from Massachusetts referred to an institution in his State with a system something like this one in Philadelphia. But the gentleman admitted it was not much known.

It is for the reason that this home is well known that I have presented this bill. And if I had the power I would pass it, and pass it under the Constitution, for the same reason that we vote for books that are useful for the people; for the same reason that the Government sends scientific experts around the world to gather scientific knowledge. By this system of teaching in infancy a class now neglected are made able to discharge all the duties of American citizenship by thus overcoming the deficiencies of birth. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, by way of substitute, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania takes precedence.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Chairman, has the debate on the bill closed?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is pending the result of a motion by the gentlemen from Pennsylvania that the committee do now rise. The question before the House is, that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GROW. Does the gentleman from Missouri wish to make further remarks?

Mr. VANDIVER. No, I do not desire to make any further remarks, but I wish to yield a few minutes of time to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. GROW. Then I withdraw my motion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with very much interest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania—to the usual stock arguments about "hair splitting" on the subject of the Constitution of the United States. If a man can not "split hairs" on the subject of his oath, recorded in this body and made in the presence of his God, he can not "split hairs" on any subject. I have noticed that the men who have the most to say about "splitting hairs" on the subject of the Constitution are men who are very anxious to get through something that the Constitution of the United States does not authorize. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will make this assertion, that there is not a single underlying legal or constitutional principle involved in this bill that would not support the establishment, at the Federal expense, of a dancing school in the town of Bucatunna, in the State of Mississippi. [Laughter.] I say this bill is Federalism run mad—centralization on a "calathump" running amuck. What is this bill? It is a bill for the Federal Government to give $100,000 in toto or per annum, I have forgotten which, for the maintenance of a private, semi-State deaf and dumb normal institution in the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Is this proposition any more unconstitutional than the free distribution of worthless garden seeds?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Absolutely; a great deal more.

Mr. CLAYTON. The question assumes that the Republican Administration is distributing worthless garden seeds.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is not the question. I am arguing this bill, and I am not going to argue that question. The gentleman from Connecticut on his oath in this House has voted frequently in favor of the constitutionality of the distribution of garden seeds, and he needs no answer from me upon that question. He has again and again stood up and voted for the distribution of garden seeds, and if he had thought that they were not being distributed according to the Constitution, then the gentleman from Connecticut would have violated his oath, which I do not believe he is capable of doing.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the gentleman contend that it is not within the constitutional power of Congress to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a school for the education of the deaf and dumb or the blind?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. In the States?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. A school to be conducted under the supervision of the Federal Government?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Located in the States?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Located in any State.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Of course it is not, if in any particular State. Mr. Chairman, if there is a single principle familiar to any man who reads and loves the Constitution it is the principle that the powers not granted to the Federal Government are reserved to the States; and the power to make appropriation for education within the States was not reserved to the Federal Government.

Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania says that we have spent money educating people in the Philippines. Grant that the statement of fact is true—that the Federal Government has spent money out of the Federal Treasury for that purpose. I do not believe it is true; but if it were true he could not stand here and make that argument, because he belongs to a party that has publicly announced that when you go to the Philippine Islands you have got a state of things over which the Constitution does not and can not spread except by express Congressional enactment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania in the next place says that this legislation ought to be passed for the reason that this peculiar treatment of the deaf and dumb before school age exists only in that place in Pennsylvania and under this private management, which he hopes to encourage.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, I did not quite hear the gentleman from Mississippi, but if I did hear correctly, he is misstating my position.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I said I understood that the gentleman announced as a reason for this appropriation that this peculiar method of educating the deaf and dumb prior to the school age existed only in that particular institution. Otherwise you would extend the appropriation to other States.

Mr. GROW. If the gentleman will leave the word "only" out. I do not think I said that, because there are other small schools. I said that they did know about this school, but I did not say that this was the only school.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Very well; then the gentleman said it was because this peculiar method of teaching exists only in a few schools, one of which is situated in Philadelphia. Why, sir, some time ago I read an account of a new method of "curing hemorrhoids" by "homeopathic treatment," and I suppose the school practicing that method of treatment might come in at some time and claim a Federal appropriation on the ground that it has got a sort of peculiar patent right to pursue that peculiar method of treating that peculiar disease. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will wait until I get through I will yield.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is a most commendable one, but its purpose falls within the jurisdiction of the States, and is a purpose which a great many States are trying to carry out as best they can—some upon this theory, and some upon others. The State of Mississippi is taking care of its deaf and dumb with a remarkably efficient educational system. The State of New York is doing the same thing; the State of Illinois is doing the same thing; the State of Georgia is doing the same thing.

A MEMBER. And Alabama.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Where is the gentleman from Pennsylvania going to stop when he once launches out upon this sea by devoting the revenues of the United States Government not only to the education of the people in the States, not only for the assistance of the States in their systems of education, but for the assistance of private establishments, with or without partial aid from the States, for the education of the people? Why, sir, in this very bill I find the confession of the State of Pennsylvania that she has felt herself as a State chargeable with expenses of this kind, if any government can be, because in one of the paragraphs in the preamble it is stated that this very philanthropic lady, Miss Garrett, has been carrying on this business, "aided by small appropriations of money from the State of Pennsylvania." Thus it seems that the State of Pennsylvania confesses that it is within her jurisdiction as a State to carry on this business.

Mr. Chairman, there is a woeful difference between the title of this bill and its contents. The title reads:

A bill to aid in establishing homes in the States and Territories for teaching articulate speech and vocal language to children before they are of school age.

But by the contents of the bill it appears that the object is to maintain a school in the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania shakes his head. With due reverence do I regard that shake; but the bill does not bear out the shake, and it does bear out the statement I have made, because when I go into the bill a little further I find—but let me read the language of the bill, because I want no mistake about this matter—in the very first section I find it provided that the money which the bill appropriates is to be paid to certain trustees. And who are the trustees? Not people appointed by us, not people appointed by the President, but people named in the bill—Ex-Governor Daniel H. Hastings, Ex-Governor Robert E. Pattison, Frank K. Hipple, Charles C. Harrison, and Alfred C. Tevis. These are the men to dispense this fund. If they are appointees at all, they are Federal appointees, and if Federal appointees, they ought to be, like all Federal appointees, appointed by the President. What more do I find in the bill? In section 2 it is provided—

That persons who are to become teachers in such homes—

It is a sort of normal school—people are to come from various States. And how are they to come?

That persons who are to become teachers in such homes as may be established as aforesaid shall be selected, on the recommendation of the governor of each State and Territory and by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, by said Mary S. Garrett.

Why, sir, the private character of this establishment continues even after we agree to maintain it. This Miss Mary S. Garrett—a very philanthropic and worthy and estimable lady—is to continue to hold virtually a veto power over the governors of the States and the Territories and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia without any regard at all to the appointing power of the President. She is to appoint these persons "upon the recommendation" of these officers. If the recommendations first made do not suit her, she can, I suppose, call for other recommendations.

What further appears as to the private character of this institution?

All said persons so selected for teachers shall remain at Philadelphia and attend daily the exercises at said home as long as the said Mary S. Garrett or her successor shall deem advisable, not exceeding one year.

I said in the beginning that this bill was federalism run mad, and centralization on a "callathump" running amuck. What further centralization do you want than Federal appropriations for the maintenance of a private establishment controlled by ultimately private authority, though of a semi-State character—partially appropriated for by the State of Pennsylvania, but a private establishment in its character.

Now, there was some gentleman who wanted to ask me a question—the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I believe.

Mr. MANN. I wanted to ask the gentleman a constitutional question, because I value his opinion very highly. I wished to ask him how he could differentiate this proposition from a proposition such as has been before the House to vote money or public lands to schools of a semiprivate character? I think there is a colored school in the State of Mississippi in behalf of which there has been a proposition of that kind before the House. It may be that the gentleman can easily make the differentiation. I should like to hear his opinion on that point.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I never heard before of the colored-school proposition for the State of Mississippi. If there be such a proposition, it is racial, and therefore class legislation. If it be of a semiprivate character, then it violates all democratic principles. The United States Government has absolute power under the Constitution to do what it pleases with the public lands. It can give them away; it can sell them; it can exchange them; it can do what it pleases with them. This is not a proposition to appropriate public land. The Constitution of the United States would not prevent Congress from donating public lands to a township or to a private individual—to me or to the gentleman from Illinois—to-day, if Congress chose to do it; it has the power. It might not be sound public policy to do it, but it would not be unconstitutional, because the power to "dispose of" the public lands is absolute. It is a part of the private property of the United States, of which it may dispose only in accordance with law, but without any other restrictions.

Mr. MANN. But, if the gentleman will permit me a moment, I do not think he has answered my question. I agree with the gentleman in some respects, but I do not understand him sufficiently so as to enable me to differentiate between the money of the Government as an asset of the Government and the lands of the Government, so far as the Constitution applies, is concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But I can differentiate for the gentleman so clearly that neither he nor his youngest son, as I believe, can escape the conclusion which I shall submit to him.

Mr. MANN. I shall be very glad to have the gentleman make it so clear.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The public lands of the United States are vested in the Government as an absolute owner in fee simple, and have been from the beginning of the Government to the present time; whereas the money of the Government is received by taxation from the citizens of the Government, and that money is subject to appropriation by Congress for public and Federal purposes. That money does not belong to the Government as private property to dispose of in discretion, but to the people of the Republic as an increment from taxation. The Constitution provides expressly that the public lands or "territory" shall be "disposed of." The legal power and the legal right to do as Congress may choose with the public lands rests, of course, with the Government of the United States, subject always and under all circumstances to the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. MANN. I desire to thank the gentleman from Mississippi for the explanation, but I do not see that he fully explains the difference between the public money of the United States and the public lands of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does not the gentleman see the difference? Does not he see what the construction of the law and the Constitution would be with regard to these?

Mr. MANN. No, I do not. So far as the constitutional power of the Government is concerned, I am unable to see any difference or any distinction between the two. I think Congress has equal power over both.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Does not the gentleman from Illinois see how the Constitution in its express terms gives Congress the power to "dispose of" public lands and the power to raise and expend money for public and Federal purposes only? If he does not, I certainly can not make it plainer to him than the Constitution does.

Mr. GROW. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before that motion is considered, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate upon this bill be now considered as concluded.

Mr. GROW. I do not believe that we shall ever go into Committee of the Whole again for the consideration of this bill. I therefore submit the motion that the committee now rise.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent, then, that general debate on the bill be considered as closed.

Mr. MANN. I object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. GROW. I object myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is in order, that the committee now rise.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a motion, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me to do so at this time.

Mr. GROW. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. VANDIVER. I move to report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table.

Mr. GROW. I do not yield to the gentleman to submit that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. General debate not being closed, it would not be in order except by consent.

Mr. VANDIVER. I hope, then, we will vote down the motion of the gentleman and dispose of this matter at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the committee now rise.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. VANDIVER. Now I move that the committee rise and report this bill to the House with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule not having been proceeded with, such a motion is not in order.

Mr. VANDIVER. If the Chair thinks the motion is not in order, then let us proceed in the orderly way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the debate not having been proceeded with under the five-minute rule, that motion would not yet be in order. The committee must first determine to close the general debate.

Mr. VANDIVER. I thought that had been closed by consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Not yet.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Then I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, which is further debate on the bill. If there is no further desire for general debate, the Clerk will report the bill by paragraphs under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2041) to aid in establishing homes in the States and Territories for teaching articulate speech and vocal language to deaf children before they are of school age.

Whereas Mary S. Garrett and Emma Garrett (deceased, her sister) did on February 2, 1892, establish at the city of Philadelphia a home for the training in speech of deaf children before they are of school age, which home has been continued by said Mary S. Garrett by her own charitable contributions and contributions of other persons, aided by a small appropriation of money by the State of Pennsylvania; and

Whereas it has been clearly proven by such training in said home that deaf children can learn articulate speech and language by the use of the eye for all practical purposes as well as children who hear can learn through the ear, provided they have this training in infancy and early childhood: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves that the enacting clause of the bill be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAPRON, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2041) to aid in establishing homes in the States and Territories for teaching articulate speech and vocal language to deaf children before they are of school age, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee has had under consideration the bill H. R. 2041, and reports the same back with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out. The question is on agreeing to the recommendation of the committee.

The recommendation of the committee was agreed to.

Accordingly, the enacting clause of the bill was stricken out.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DAVIS of Florida, indefinitely, on account of death in his family.

COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS NO. 2.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections No. 2 be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House, and to have such printing and binding done as may be necessary in the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if that is a unanimous request from his committee; if the minority have joined in the request as well as the majority?

Mr. OLMSTED. It was understood at a meeting of the committee that I should ask for such a resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Were the minority represented at that meeting?

Mr. OLMSTED. I think they were all present, with the exception, perhaps, of one member of the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And no objection was made?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will state to the gentleman from Alabama that the minority were heard on that proposition.

Mr. OLMSTED. It is the usual resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House, in pursuance of the order heretofore made, adjourned until Wednesday, January 29, at 12 o'clock noon.

THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I offer a resolution for which I ask present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Committee on Printing be instructed to consider the expediency of printing a special edition of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for sale to the general public at $2 for the long session and $1 for the short session, and to report to the Senate their conclusions thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LODGE. Let it be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, just a word.

I think it will be agreed by all that there ought to be some action taken by Congress by which the reports of the debates in Congress can more fully and generally reach the public. This resolution, it will be noted, is simply one directing the Committee on Printing to make an examination into the subject, and if they should report favorably, of course, it would require a joint resolution to carry it into effect.

Mr. President, it is an impossibility for the general public to be informed as to what goes on in Congress either by the partial distribution of the RECORD such as we now have, even if it were very much enlarged, or by anything which the general press can do in that line. It is no reflection upon the press to say that it is thus impossible. No newspaper can afford to give even a very brief synopsis of the debates in Congress, and no newspaper does attempt it. It would be a greater burden than any newspaper could in justice to itself undertake to carry.

Mr. President, I know that there is a great deal of sport made on the subject of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as to its being waste paper, etc., and yet it is a fact that while it may have a great deal of rubbish in it there is more information to be had from a constant reading of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD than from any other source which is accessible to any person in this country. Anyone who is a constant reader of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will certainly be informed of all that relates to the affairs of the Government of the United States. It is true that there is much matter that it would be of advantage to the RECORD if it were not there, but that can not be avoided.

Under the present system the smallest fraction of our people ever have an opportunity to see the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Take my own State. For the two million and a quarter of people that there are, probably about 500 copies of the RECORD go to the entire State, and the larger the State the less the proportion of copies of the RECORD which the people get, because there are but two Senators from each State. I know that in the commercial centers people would not have time to read the RECORD, but if we put it within reach of the common people there would be a very general reading of it. It is astonishing when we consider the great interest the people in the country feel in these matters and the little opportunity that they have to be informed with reference to them.

I am told that while of course the RECORD as it is now printed could not be furnished at any such price without loss, if it were printed upon paper such as is ordinarily used in the printing of newspapers it could be printed for a great deal less than it is now priced at. The present price of the RECORD is prohibitory to any one who wishes to subscribe to it as he would to any newspaper. For instance, I have before me in to-day's RECORD a statement of the cost of it to the general public, which I read:

The daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress will be furnished by mail to subscribers, free of postage, for $1.50 per month, or $8 for the session, payable in advance.

That is more than any newspaper in the United States charges for its publication. There is not a publication of any kind in the United States—newspaper, magazine, or any other—that charges approximately what the Government of the United States charges the general public if it wishes to have the advantage of reading what goes on in Congress.

Mr. HOAR. What is the price?

Mr. BACON. A dollar and a half a month, or $8 for this particular session, not including the next session.

I have no doubt, Mr. President, that at the price indicated in the resolution there would be a loss to the Government. I do not suppose the RECORD can be furnished at that price with profit, but I think the Government ought to be willing to furnish it at a loss. It is important that the people of the United States should be informed as to our public affairs, and there is no way in which that can be so successfully accomplished as by putting it within the reach of the general public to subscribe for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at a price the people can afford to pay.

Suppose it be true, as I have no doubt it will prove to be true, that if furnished at this price it will be a loss to the Government, what does the Government do now in the way of incurring expense for the purpose of informing the general public as to the affairs of the Government in the publication of documents, in tons and tons and hundreds of tons of which the pages are never turned—perfect rubbish? Here the most important of all things so far as information to the public is concerned is permitted year after year to stand in a position which absolutely debars the general public from access to it.

I trust, Mr. President, that this much at least may be done. The resolution which I offer is one which simply directs the Committee on Printing to make inquiry into this matter and to report. I think it is an important matter, and I trust the committee may be charged with that duty.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words on the resolution.

My newspaper experience goes back forty or fifty years, and in that time there have been some changes worth noting. When I was a younger man the newspapers of almost all classes gave some reasonable attention, according to their means and space, to the proceedings of Congress. I remember well the old heading "Congress" in good large type, and then "House" was the next heading. An abstract of a quarter of a column, half a column, or a column, according to the importance of the subject and the public interest in it, followed. Then came another heading "Senate." If you will go back to the old newspapers of forty, fifty, and sixty years ago, not supposed to have a tenth of the enterprise of the modern journal, you will find what I say to be verified. I think the newspapers of the country that attempt, and with immense power and ability, to keep the people informed and to argue the great questions of the day, could improve the interest of their papers by returning, in a measure at any rate, to the old custom of having a heading "Congress," a heading "House," with a reasonable condensation, and another heading "Senate."

The resolution was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 569) to establish the department of commerce, and that it be considered without the limitation of Rule VIII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the department of commerce bill, and that the limitation of five minutes be removed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read to the Senate.

The SECRETARY. In lines 18 and 19, on page 3, it is proposed to strike out the words "the Department of Labor and."

Mr. McLAURIN of Mississippi. Mr. President, I do not rise to make a speech on this bill, and I do not intend to do so, but before we vote on the pending amendment I wish to submit a suggestion that occurs to me.

Preparatory to doing that, I will state what I understand to be the proposition of the Senator from Alabama. As I understand the bill, it embraces the Department of Labor in the department of commerce and makes it a bureau, and it is the purpose of the amendment to strike this out. I further understand from the discussion of this question that there is now an independent Department of Labor. It has been argued here, especially by the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] and the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] that the purpose of putting the Department of Labor in the department of commerce is to give it dignity. In other words, to give dignity to labor, to lift it up. It occurs to me that if it be true that labor and commerce are to go hand in hand, side by side, if they are of equal dignity, there being a Department of Labor already established, which is, according to the statement of Senators, an independent department, responsible to no head and responsible to nobody except to the President, it might be well to make that an executive department and to provide for a secretary of labor and to put a bureau of commerce in the Department of Labor.

In the selection of the secretary of commerce or secretary of labor, as the case might be, if it were a secretary of commerce, the President would naturally have reference to some one engaged in commerce. He would have reference to capital instead of to labor. But if we have a department of labor instead of a department of commerce and put a bureau of commerce in the department of labor, then the President in selecting the head of that department would have reference to some man who was engaged particularly in labor.

I desire to read a short extract from the speech of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. He said:

> I understand the Commissioner of Labor is responsible to nobody but the President. In the multifarious duties that rest upon the shoulders of the President he can not give these bureaus any attention whatever, and for this reason we believe that it is better to put them in the hands of a responsible Cabinet officer, notwithstanding the claim of the political complexion that might attach to the administration of the Labor Bureau.

The junior Senator from Wisconsin said, speaking of this side of the question:

> They propose that labor should dwell in a tent on the outside. We propose to bring the labor interests right into the mansion alongside of commerce, alongside of capital, where they belong, that they may dwell there harmoniously together; that the Labor Bureau shall not be an orphan, entirely discredited and unaffiliated.

Now, if you are going to make the Labor Bureau something besides an orphan it ought not to be subordinated to the department of commerce—that is, if we recognize labor as being of equal dignity to commerce. There is no more reason, as I said before, why the Labor Bureau should be put in the department of commerce than that a bureau of commerce should be put in the Department of Labor already established, and it seems to be the idea of the Senator from Wisconsin that the two are of equal dignity. Yet he wants to uplift and elevate and dignify labor by subordinating it to the department of commerce, or, rather, by subordinating it to commerce.

There is one other suggestion I wish to make, and that is in reference to what was said by the Senator from West Virginia. I quote from his language. He said:

> I am glad that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] has taken into his particular charge the labor of the South. This is a new departure. It is gratifying that we find that Southern statesmen are beginning to love and care for labor in the South as well as in the North and all over the country.

I can not see that there has been anything said by any man from the South that would justify making this a sectional issue. There has been no time in the history of this country where any man sent to this body or the House of Representatives by the people of the South has not been a friend to labor. They have not only been a friend to labor here, but they have been friends to labor everywhere; labor first in this country, and afterwards they have taken the labor of all the countries into their friendship, but especially have they been a friend to the laborer in the United States.

Mr. NELSON. I hope that we will have a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I desire to add a few words to what has been said in reference to this matter.

It has been asserted by the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA], and I believe by the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], that the laboring men of this country did not desire the Department of Labor to remain in its present condition; that they were not opposed to this provision in this bill. Mr. President, I have no doubt that if this were a question of capital, of commerce, of mines and mining, or any such question, the opinion of these distinguished gentlemen would be entitled to all the weight possible, for those are matters with which they no doubt are perfectly familiar, but it seems to me that the opinions of the leaders of these organizations of labor are really entitled to more weight on a question of their individual preference than are the opinions of these two distinguished Senators.

Mr. President, labor is afraid of capital. I do not suppose that any Senator would have the hardihood to say that either of the Senators I have named have any fear of capital whatever. Their opinion on the subject of capital, if it were capital alone, would be entitled to the utmost weight; but as to giving the opinions of laboring men, I do not think they are entitled to as much weight as to those who have charge of such organizations.

The opinion of Mr. Hayes has been published in the RECORD, it having been read yesterday. That gentleman, whatever may be his character and distinction and connection with labor—and I am told his connection is with one particular organization alone, and that not of the largest—in his own statement has discredited his evidence.

If any man has met the absolute approval of the United States Senate, so far as it has been spoken here, it is the distinguished individual from Massachusetts who now occupies the position of Commissioner of the Department of Labor. No man in this Senate has spoken one single word to his discredit. All Senators who have spoken on this subject have given him the utmost credit for his diligent, faithful, and untiring work, and have stated that it has been of great profit to the country. Just see what Mr. Hayes says about the Commissioner of Labor. In the first place, he says that the Department of Labor has been a personal asset of the Commissioner. Then he adds:

> It has been of little consequence or value to those whom it was organized to aid, and more than one-half of its reports are false and misleading.

A man who recklessly makes such a statement as that as to the work of so distinguished an officer, who has met the unqualified approval of the Senate, ought not to be credited in his statement on any other subject.

Mr. President, in offering this amendment, I had no idea of politics in my head, and I am sorry that the discussion has taken so broad a range as it has. I hope the amendment will be adopted for the good of the country, and especially for the good of those who caused this Department of Labor to be organized in its independent state. It was once connected with an executive department, but Congress in its wisdom chose to remove it and make it an independent organization, subject to the orders of the executive authority of the President and the rule of Congress. Congress passed on it deliberately, and it has since been an independent organization. I think if we go no further in establishing a real executive Department of Labor, that we should at least leave this fragment independent for the benefit of those it was especially designed to aid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS]. [Putting the question.] By sound the "noes" have it. [A pause.] The "noes" have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. BACON. That amendment being rejected, I offer an amendment, to insert the words "and labor" after the word "commerce"——

Mr. PETTUS. Do I understand that the vote just taken has been taken as in Committee of the Whole?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been.

Mr. PETTUS. And that a vote by yeas and nays can be had in the Senate on this question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; if the proposed amendment had been adopted and the words had been stricken out, then a separate vote could have been had in the Senate.

Mr. PETTUS. Then, if not too late, I ask for a vote by yeas and nays on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the request. The Senator from Alabama asks that the yeas and nays be ordered on the amendment offered by him.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BACON. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. BATE. Can we not have the amendment read, Mr. President, before voting upon it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment simply proposes to strike from the bill the Department of Labor.

Mr. BACON. As I understand, those who are in favor of retaining the Department of Labor as an independent bureau will vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]; but I take the liberty of transferring that pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and will vote "nay."

Mr. DEPEW (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY]. As he is not present, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. My colleague [Mr. MONEY] is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. DOLLIVER (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]; but having voted, I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. BATE. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. CARMACK] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. My colleague is necessarily absent this morning.

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bacon,	Cockrell,	Heitfeld,	Pettus,
Bate,	Dubois,	Jones, Ark.	Rawlins,

So the amendment of Mr. PETTUS was rejected.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that there is another amendment pending. Let us dispose of that before proceeding further.

Mr. BACON. If it is one that will lead to no debate, I have no objection.

Mr. NELSON. I do not think it will lead to any debate, but I do not know.

Mr. BACON. I will yield for that purpose, but I should like to get my amendment offered right in connection with the particular matter which has been pending, while Senators who are to vote upon it are still present.

Mr. NELSON. Very well.

Mr. BACON. I will offer the amendment, at any rate, and if the Senator shall then desire I will consent that it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no amendment pending. There was one amendment printed and laid on the table.

Mr. BACON. If there is no amendment pending, I now offer an amendment, after the words "department of commerce," in line 4 of section 1, on page 1, to insert the words "and labor," and also—I have not had the opportunity or the time to look through the entire bill—wherever the words "department of commerce" are found I ask that a similar amendment may be made, so that instead of "department of commerce" wherever it occurs in the bill it will read "the department of commerce and labor."

Mr. NELSON. I will make one suggestion to the Senator from Georgia, and I think that will be better still. This bill was entitled originally "a bill to establish a department of commerce and industry." I think it would be well to make the title "the department of commerce, industry, and labor." Will the Senator accept such an amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. That title is too long.

Mr. BACON. I have no objection in the world to it, if it is not thought to be too cumbersome.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is very cumbersome.

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia. I simply proposed the other as a suggestion to him.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will not agree to add another word to the title. Our invariable practice has been to have a single descriptive word. Each head of a department is the Secretary of the Department of that single name. We have not gone into the cumbrous fashion that other people have in creating their departments. I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will modify it by adding the words "and labor," so as to make it the department of commerce and labor; that he will not go further and encumber it by adding "industry."

Mr. NELSON. I will say to the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Georgia that I will agree to that, and will consent that these amendments be put into the bill.

Mr. HALE. While I am on the floor, Mr. President, I wish to withdraw the amendment I offered the other day, including the Interstate Commerce Commission and making it a part of this new department.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, do I understand that the amendments offered by me have been agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have not been.

Mr. BACON. I think they should be first agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. They should be agreed to. There is no objection to them.

Mr. HALE. I thought they had been agreed to.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] consented to them, but they have never been announced from the Chair as having been agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Maine allow the Chair to put the question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendments offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], inserting in the bill after the words "department of commerce," wherever they occur, the words "and labor."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HALE. When, the other day, I offered the amendment to which I have referred, several Senators very earnestly indicated their acceptance of it and desired to vote for it; but I was very much impressed by the suggestion which came in answer to a question by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] as to what would be the effect if the Interstate Commerce Commission were put into this new department as a bureau, as I proposed. The answer was that it would probably destroy its usefulness. I should not want to do that; and, reflecting upon the matter since then, I think it would be unsafe to disturb that Commission.

I do not recognize the Commission as a judicial tribunal with the right to promulgate decisions as a court; and I have so said; but it deals undoubtedly with commerce, the interstate commerce of the country, and in a way its acts are cognate to the purposes of this bill. I should not, however, want to be a party to anything that would impair its real efficiency, because it is undoubtedly doing some good. Rather than incur the risk of doing that, Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment which I proposed.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply want to say that I expected to take part in this discussion if the amendment remained in the bill or if the Interstate Commerce Commission was attempted to be put upon the bill, as I feel very sure that it would practically destroy the usefulness of the Commission.

I want to say to the Senator that it was placed in connection with the Interior Department when the bill creating it became a law, but it was found by the Secretary of the Interior, as well as by the Commission and some of us in Congress, that it worked very badly. Judge Cooley, who was then chairman of the Commission, and the Secretary of the Interior agreed that the Commission should not remain in that Department, and it was taken out so as to give the Commission opportunity to exercise the functions placed in its hands without the embarrassment of the Interior Department as a political organization.

The Commission has been run upon the theory, and I think in fact, of being a nonpartisan body. While it is not a judicial body in a technical sense, it is performing in a way judicial acts; that is to say, it passes upon and determines questions, subject, of course, to the decisions of the courts, if the parties involved see proper to take an appeal. As one of the Supreme Court judges said, the Commission is a sort of a referee of the circuit courts of the United States. But I do not care to take up the time of the Senate on this subject, as the Senator from Maine has withdrawn the amendment.

Mr. HALE. It was such considerations as have been stated which have induced me to withdraw the amendment. I hope I shall never be in a condition where, if I find I am wrong in anything I have proposed, I am not willing to recede. I think I was wrong in offering the amendment, and I withdraw it.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator is always desirous of doing right.

I wish to add a further word while I am upon the floor. I am very anxious that this bill shall pass and that the department of commerce shall be created. I think it ought to have been done earlier, but if it is done now I think it will be a very important thing for the commerce of the nation.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask if the amendment on page 5, line 17, striking out the words "upon the request of the secretary of commerce" has been adopted?

Mr. NELSON. The Senator's amendments were all adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts was adopted.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to suggest a further verbal amendment. In line 23, on page 5, section 5, after the word "compiled," I move to insert "such reports to be transmitted through the State Department."

Mr. NELSON. There is no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. VEST. I simply want to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understand now that the status of this bill is that the Patent Office, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Census Bureau are all taken out of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By votes of the Senate; that is true.

Mr. VEST. Are those all the bureaus that have been taken out of the bill?

Mr. NELSON. I think those are all—the Census Bureau, the Patent Office, and the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. VEST. Then, what are the bureaus which are left in the bill? Has the Geological Survey been taken out?

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. VEST. That makes four bureaus which have been taken out.

Mr. NELSON. Yes; the Patent Office, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Census Office, and the Geological Survey.

Mr. VEST. Now, how many bureaus are left in the bill?

Mr. NELSON. There are a great many left in the bill. There is the Life-Saving Service—does the Senator want me to call his attention to them. I can not give them all from memory, but I will read them if the Senator desires.

Mr. VEST. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. NELSON. The bureaus left in the bill are the Life-Saving Service, the Light-House Board, the Light-House Service, the Marine-Hospital Service, the Steamboat-Inspection Service, the Bureau of Navigation, the United States shipping commissioners, the Bureau of Immigration, the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department, Bureau of Foreign Commerce in the State Department, and the Labor Department.

Mr. BACON. And the Fish Commission also?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; the Fish Commission.

Mr. VEST. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] heretofore gave notice that he would move a reconsideration of the vote by which the Census Office was stricken out of the bill, or that he would call for a separate vote in the Senate upon that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, instead of prolonging the debate, I propose to ask for a separate vote in the Senate upon the adoption of the amendment by which the Census Bureau was stricken out of this bill.

Mr. VEST. I so understood.

Mr. QUARLES. That will answer the Senator's inquiry. The amendment has already been sufficiently debated, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. Is there any request for a separate vote on any amendment other than that relating to the Census Office? The Chair hears none. The question is, Will the Senate concur in gross in the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole? In the absence of objection, they are concurred in. The question now before the Senate is on concurring in the amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole striking out the Census Office from the bill.

Mr. QUARLES. Upon that proposition I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAY (when his name was called). I understand the question is on concurring in the amendment to strike out the Census Bureau from this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the motion.

Mr. CLAY. I am against striking it out, and I vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 5, nays 52; as follows:

YEAS—5.

Bate,	McLaurin, Miss.	Pettus,	Quay.
Cockrell,

NAYS—52.

Aldrich,	Fairbanks,	Kittredge,	Proctor,

NOT VOTING—30.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read "A bill to establish the department of commerce and labor."

STATUE OF HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent for consideration at this time of Order of Business 248, being Senate joint resolution 12, which was passed at the last session. It will take but a moment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 12) authorizing the selection of a site and the erection of a pedestal for a bronze statue in Washington, D. C., in honor of the late Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on the Library with an amendment, on page 1, section 1, line 8, before the word "commission," to strike out "that the Secretary of War, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, and the chairmen of the Senate and House Committees of the Library are hereby appointed as a," and insert "that the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library, the chairman of the House Committee on the Library, and the Secretary of War are hereby appointed a;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library, the chairman of the House Committee on the Library, and the Secretary of War are hereby appointed a commission to select a site upon property belonging to the United States in the city of Washington, other than the Capitol or Library grounds, for the erection of a statue in bronze of the late Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, to be provided by the Longfellow Memorial Association.

SEC. 2. That for the preparation of the site so selected and the erection of a pedestal upon which to place said statue, and the reasonable expense of superintendence and inspection of the same, under the direction of the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT CODE.

The bill (S. 493) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a code of laws for the District of Columbia" was announced as the first business in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let this case be passed temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks that the first bill on the Calendar may go over without prejudice.

Mr. GALLINGER. And also the second.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I hope the Senator from Missouri will withdraw his request. This bill undertakes to amend certain sections of the code in order to correct certain errors which have appeared in it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I made the suggestion because it will be a physical impossibility to complete the consideration of the bill by 2 o'clock, and the time will just be wasted. To-morrow morning, when we go to the Calendar, let it be taken up, and we can dispose of it, instead of commencing now and not getting halfway through it.

Mr. PRITCHARD. With that understanding——

Mr. COCKRELL. It will retain its place on the Calendar, and to-morrow morning probably there will be a small amount of morning business, and we can take up this bill and pass it before 2 o'clock.

Mr. McCOMAS. There are several matters of local importance embraced in the bill. It will lead to no debate, and it can be gotten out of the way pretty speedily. It ought to be passed, and without delay.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not object to it. I simply asked that it be passed over in order to facilitate the transaction of business.

Mr. McCOMAS. I trust the Senator from North Carolina will try to expedite the bill and get it out of the way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). If there be no objection to the consideration of the bill, it will be read. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Missouri to withdraw his objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly. I do not object to the consideration of the bill, but I do not want to waste the morning in reading the bill and not passing it.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that we have very little time left of the morning hour. We can pass several very small bills, while this contains 64 pages.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the first bill on the Calendar will be temporarily passed over without prejudice.

Mr. McCOMAS. Do I understand that the whole suggestion is adopted, that also by unanimous consent this bill will be taken up to-morrow morning after the close of the routine morning business?

Mr. LODGE. After the close of the routine morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that it will be in order in the morning hour when the Calendar is taken up.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say a word before any agreement is made. I wish to give notice that to-morrow, immediately after the morning business, I shall ask permission to address the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

TRANSFER OF CENSUS RECORDS.

The bill (S. 1833) providing for the transfer of census records and volumes to the Census Office, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Census with an amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the bill by inserting after the word "Interior," in line 8, the words "except such volumes as are to the credit of Senators and Representatives in the Fifty-seventh Congress." I do not think we have any right now to take away those allotted to Senators and to distribute them in this way. There was an allotment of so many of the census reports to every Senator and Representative. Some Senators and Representatives have copies yet to their credit and will want to distribute them to libraries and other places when it is ascertained that they have none. This measure proposes to take them away from the Senators and Representatives and to distribute them. I ask that those volumes may be excepted. I move to insert, "excepting such reports as may have been allotted to Senators and Representatives who are members of the present Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is a committee amendment which will first be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 2, page 2, after the word "requested," it is proposed to insert "at the discretion of the Director of the Census;" so as to read:

And the Director of the Census is hereby authorized, upon the request of a governor of any State or Territory, or the chief officer of any municipal government, to furnish such governor or municipal officer with copies of so much of said files or records as may be requested, at the discretion of the Director of the Census, upon payment of the actual cost of making such copies.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to have the title of the bill read. In the morning hour, when the Senate is on unobjected matters like this, very few of us pay any attention, and I was not observing what was being done. I should like to know, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who is the watchdog for all sides here, has called attention to something that he considers wrong, what the bill is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the title of the bill.

The Secretary again read the title of the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. My quota of the census reports has been exhausted because of special applications, and unless we are going to print some more of them, and give the people access to the information, it seems to me it was very useless for us ever to have gone to the millions of dollars' expense to obtain it. I think an amendment providing for additional copies, without taking from Senators those they already have had assigned to them, would be more in order; at least, it certainly would be more to the taste of some of us.

Mr. GALLINGER. This bill relates to the Eleventh Census, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. TILLMAN. To the old census?

Mr. GALLINGER. To the old census.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is rubbish. I do not care what becomes of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri if he thinks his proposed amendment is necessary. Does the bill authorize——

Mr. COCKRELL. I take it that the bill in its present language would take everything out of the Interior Department.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And put it in the Census Office?

Mr. COCKRELL. And put it in the Census Office.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But it does not authorize the Director of the Census to make any disposition of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It directs him to distribute it on the order of the governors.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator from Missouri is laboring under a misapprehension with respect to the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. I beg pardon.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understood that the difficulty in the mind of the Senator from Missouri was that this bill proposes to transfer from the Interior Department to the Census Office the published reports of the different censuses which have been taken, and that it gave authority to the Director of the Census to dispose of those reports. Now, I do not so read the bill. It provides for the transfer of the reports; that is, the taking of the reports from where they are stored in the Interior Department and putting them in the Census Office; and then it provides, as to the files and records, that he may furnish copies of them to governors on application. But I can find nothing in the bill which authorizes him to dispose of the reports, and I do not see why the reports would not be just as much at the disposal of the Senators and Members to whom they have been allotted after they have been taken from the Interior Department and placed in the Census Bureau. Perhaps I am mistaken about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It says:

The Director of the Census is hereby authorized, upon the request of a governor of any State or Territory, or the chief officer of any municipal government, to furnish such governor or municipal officer with copies of so much of said files or records as may be requested, at the discretion of the Director of the Census, upon payment of the actual cost of making such copies, and the amounts so received——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That can not refer to the reports. It refers to the copies which the Director is authorized to make of the files and the records, for which he is to be paid.

Mr. COCKRELL. If that is the intent, and it is not to change the status of the right to the reports, it is all right, and I have no objection to the transfer; but if this is to transfer and destroy the rights of Senators and Representatives to the documents which have already heretofore been allotted to them, I am opposed to it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I suppose under this bill the right of Senators and Members to the reports would be just as much recognized as if they were retained in the Interior Department.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, as I began to say a little while ago, I think the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] is under a misapprehension entirely as to the purpose of this bill. I introduced the bill. I had two specific objects in view in introducing it. First, I found that the records of the last census are now in the Census Office, while the records of the previous censuses are deposited in the Office of the Secretary of the Interior. I did not see any reason why the records of the different censuses should be thus divorced. My purpose and only purpose was to provide by the bill that the records which are now in the Interior Department should be transferred to the Census Office, without disturbing in any way whatever the right of Senators or anybody else in reference to the documents.

My second object, the main object, I confess, was this: In my State we are preparing colonial records, and we desire to incorporate in those records the heads of families as shown by the census of 1790. I applied to the Secretary of the Interior to copy that census at the expense of the State, and he informed me that there was no authority of law by which he could permit it to be done. I therefore introduced the bill for the second purpose of obtaining authority from Congress permitting not only my State, but any other State in the Union which might desire copies of the census of 1790 to make them at their cost. Those were the only objects of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is perfectly proper and right, and in order that there may be no question in regard to the effect of the transfer, I withdraw the amendment I offered and move to add after the word "Interior" the words "which transfer shall not change the allotment of such reports heretofore made to Senators and Representatives."

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think it does that.

Mr. GALLINGER. The amendment is all right.

Mr. COCKRELL. That makes it perfectly clear.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after the word "Interior," in line 8, page 1, the words:

Which transfer shall not change the allotment of such reports heretofore made to Senators and Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AFFAIRS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before passing to the next bill, I should like to make a statement in reference to some remarks made yesterday concerning General Wheaton, which I think do the General an injustice. My remarks will be very brief indeed.

I wish to call attention to a statement made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], published in yesterday's RECORD. It is as follows:

I do not know who General Wheaton is, particularly, but I imagine he was a charity boy who was appointed to West Point by some Senator or Representative and was educated by the Government. Those officers criticise the Senate in regard to legislation which is being proposed. It is outrageous and indecent, and I think, as I have said, General Wheaton ought to be reprimanded by the President of the United States.

Mr. President, I desire to correct the impression—a very wrong impression, I think—entertained by the Senator from Idaho concerning General Wheaton. General Wheaton was for some five years in command, while he was still captain, of the post at Fort Pembina in my State, and instead of being a charity boy, educated by the Government, and who now assumes to look into what Congress is doing, I am informed by those who know him that he enlisted as a private soldier from Illinois; that he served during the rebellion with distinction, rose from a private soldier to the rank of captain at the close of the war, and has been promoted since that time to the several positions which he has since held.

I know of his record while in the State of North Dakota. Speaking with one of our residents yesterday who knew him intimately for some five or six years there, he made the remark that General Wheaton was one of God's own noblemen. Instead of being of the character the Senator from Idaho supposes he is, I wish to give just one little incident of his life which will indicate his character.

He was generally beloved by every one of the privates under him while he was a captain in the State, having charge first at Fort Pembina and afterwards at Fort Buford. During this time one of the privates got into an altercation with one of the clerks, and some firing was done, in which one was shot. A trial was held. The private had no friends and no acquaintances in that entire section of the country. General Wheaton was then captain. He placed a hundred dollars in an envelope and gave it to one of our prominent citizens in the State to employ an attorney to defend him. There we have an officer looking after the special interests of a private soldier under him, carefully guarding his interests, even at his own expense. It but substantiates the claim I have made that he was generally beloved by all of those under him and that he is not the sort of an individual supposed by the Senator who made the remarks I have read. Instead of having been educated by the Government, all his education was self-acquired, and, as I am informed, he rose from the position of a mere private to that of general by his own endeavors. I say this knowing that the Senator from Idaho does not wish intentionally to misrepresent the General and so that he may have some information concerning the individual of whom he speaks.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This discussion is entirely out of order, and can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. GALLINGER. As the Philippine bill will come up at 2 o'clock, I hope the Senator from Idaho will let us pass a few of these little bills and he can then make his statement.

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator from North Dakota has referred to me personally, and it will take me but a minute or two to say what I desire to say.

Mr. GALLINGER. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to say that I asked consent to speak, and I understood it was given.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] stated that I was not properly informed, and that General Wheaton is not a graduate of West Point. I am glad to know it. That is all I charged, that he was a graduate of West Point.

The gentleme[n] on the other side of the Chamber are quite amusing to me. I do not know how they are to others. They are merely quibblin[g] over this dispatch which came from Manila and which is true. [T]here is not one of them who will rise in his seat and say that Ar[my] officers ought to be reprimanded if such language was used [by] them. They quibble and dodge, while not a clear-cut statem[ent] has come from the other side in regard to this dispatch and as [to] whether we are to submit to this eternal criticism from Arm[y] officers.

I do not want [to] disparage General Wheaton. I have as much respect and adm[iration] for him as has any gentleman on the other side of the Chan[mber]. He is a splendid officer and a gallant man, and certainly on[e] of the loveliest characters in the Army. I have no disposition t[o] criticise him, except when he criticises us; and I think he has n[o] right to do it. It is time, in my judgment, for the Senate so to [e]xpress itself; and if there are any more remarks to be made on th[e] other side of the Chamber I hope they will be addressed to the subject at issue—whether we are to sit here and read dispatches and statements from Army officers criticising proposed legislation by this body.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Mr. SCOTT. Order of Business No. 221 on the Calendar is a bill proposing to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Cleveland, Ohio. The contractor has there struck a quicksand, and there is trouble in regard to getting a foundation. I should like to have unanimous consent to call up the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. All right; I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to call up a bill which will be read.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 2735) to increase the limit of cost of the post-office, custom-house, and court-house building at Cleveland, Ohio; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 5, after the word "million," to strike out "two hundred thousand;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost of the post-office, custom-house, and court-house at Cleveland, Ohio, be increased from $2,500,000 to $3,000,000.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to introduce a joint resolution at this time?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the joint resolution will be received.

The joint resolution (S. R. 47) providing that the navigation laws relating to the coastwise trade shall not be applicable to foreign vessels engaging in trade between the Philippine Islands and the United States or between ports of the Philippine Islands and the United States, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That until otherwise provided by law, the provisions of law restricting to vessels of the United States the transportation of passengers and merchandise directly or indirectly from one port of the United States to another port of the United States shall not be applicable to foreign vessels engaging in trade between the Philippine Archipelago and the United States, or between ports in the Philippine Archipelago.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I will state, with the permission of the Senator from Massachusetts, that that is an extract from the pending bill. It relates to the matter of the regulation of ships in the Philippine trade. In other words, it is proposed by the joint resolution to now enact as law that which is contained upon the subject in the pending bill.

I will say to the Senator that our purpose in that is to give speedy relief, if such is required, and we understand it to be so from the report of the committee; and that we would be very glad to have present consideration of it in order that it may be passed immediately, and it can be passed through the other House immediately.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the bill contains, as the Senator has said, the joint resolution which he has introduced. The other clauses of the bill, in my judgment, are just as important for immediate action. I see no reason for passing this measure piecemeal when we have a House bill containing all the necessary provisions now before us, which has passed the other branch.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I wish to state that this is offered in the utmost good faith. The Senator well knows that there is no purpose to impede the progress of the pending bill toward its final enactment; that all we desire is that upon matters where we require information we may have time to get it before acting upon the other part of the bill. We do not conceive that we require any information as to this particular feature, which is the urgent feature of it. It is for the purpose of relieving the commerce of the country, if it is in such stress, of the difficulty which is presented by the present condition, owing to the inability to secure ships authorized under our navigation laws to enter into this trade and the status of the law which prohibits others from entering into it.

I wish to say to the Senator that what he says about the remainder of the bill is not, in my judgment, strictly correct, because there are reasons why the other provisions of the bill should have time for careful investigation and for debate. I can give the Senator an illustration of it. I hold in my hand the report of the Secretary of War relative to the Philippine business. [Exhibiting three volumes.] Two of these volumes, while coming to us in the shape of a report from the Secretary of War, form the report of the Taft Commission and make, together, over 1,100 printed pages. The other volume is one containing the enactments of the Philippine Commission, which, of course, it is important that we should examine, which, added to the other two volumes, make over 1,700 printed pages. The Senator will certainly not say that it is a matter of indifference or unconcern as to whether we are informed of the contents of these large volumes before we undertake to legislate relative to the Philippine Islands.

The Senator knows that these books were furnished to the Senate only last week. I say to the Senator in the utmost good faith I have not had the opportunity to examine them. There has been no time for that. We have a great many duties which constantly engage our attention, not only here when we are in session, but when we are not in session. For instance, the Senate adjourned over last Friday and Saturday, and, as the Senator knows, being a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, on one of those days a subcommittee, composed of a large portion of the committee, of which I happened to be a member by the appointment of the chairman, was engaged most of that day in the examination of important questions to be reported to that committee to-morrow morning. The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] knows that on the other day we were engaged the whole day in a session in the Judiciary Committee. Thus I might illustrate. Mr. President, by other cases. We have a great many things to do.

Here is this most important business with this mass of matter that I presume every Senator wants to familiarize himself with in the same degree that I certainly do and which we wish to have time to examine before we are pressed in the debate on the general features of the bill.

I will say to the Senator that, so far as I am concerned, by next week, by which time we shall have an opportunity to inform ourselves, I have not the slightest idea that there will be any disposition whatever on the part of any Senator on this side of the Chamber to do otherwise than to proceed in the most direct and expeditious manner in the debate of the bill and to come to a vote as early as that debate may be reasonably concluded.

I repeat, this joint resolution is introduced not for the purpose of any advantage of any kind whatsoever, but in the utmost good faith, to relieve the bill of that which seems to be the urgent feature, in order that the commerce of the country may not be obstructed or hindered in any way and that at the same time upon this most important question we may have the proper opportunity for an examination of the matter which has been submitted to us and which we ought to become familiar with before we are required to conclude debate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, so far as the joint resolution is concerned, I do not think that we would advance matters at all by passing that portion of the bill as a joint resolution. So far as the bill itself is concerned, I regard it as my duty, acting in behalf of the committee and representing on this bill, as I suppose I do, the majority in this Chamber, to press it to as early a vote as I can, and to keep it before the Senate from day to day. The bill passed the House before the holiday recess, more than six weeks ago. It was debated there and a report was presented in regard to it by the House Committee on Ways and Means containing——

Mr. TILLMAN. How long was it debated, may I ask the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. Always.

Mr. TILLMAN. How long was it debated?

Mr. LODGE. It was debated, I think, for two or three days. It passed the House. It came over here. Everybody had due notice that it was a bill which was considered to require immediate action. We did not hasten in taking it up in the committee. I postponed it from one week to another, after consultation with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS]. When we did take it up in the committee we discussed it at great length, and it went over again for several days with the general assent of the committee. I then reported it to the Senate and opened the debate upon it; the Senator from Utah replied; and I then allowed it to go over for another week.

In the meantime all documents relating to the bill had come in and been placed in the hands of Senators. The minority of the committee, who have the substitute in charge, will, I think, bear me out when I say I have endeavored to consult them at all points in this debate, and I think they will acquit me of any manifestation of a desire to press them unduly. I have tried to be as considerate as possible. We took the matter very deliberately in the committee. We have taken it very deliberately so far in the Senate. But I think the debate yesterday showed that the Senate is now perfectly able to go on with the debate on this bill. I want to have it considered from day to day. I have asked Senators again and again, and I repeat my request, that they should be ready to debate the bill.

If a time can be fixed for taking a vote upon any day on which the minority agree, I shall be very glad. Then they can take their own time as to when they shall speak within the limit fixed. With no limit of time fixed as to the bill, with other measures of great importance pressing behind it, I should be derelict in my own duty, and I should be very unfair to other measures, did I not press this bill with all reasonable urgency to a conclusion.

I have no time to hurry anybody unduly, but until a time is fixed for taking the vote I shall feel it to be my duty, from which I can not escape, to press the bill every day upon the attention of the Senate, and to urge that the Senators who desire to debate it and to be heard upon it shall speak from day to day as rapidly as they can prepare themselves for that purpose.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire, with the permission of the Senator from Massachusetts, to say that I do not think anything I said could possibly have been properly construed into any reflection upon him. But what the Senator has said, if taken alone, might be so construed.

It is true that the Senator, when the bill was first laid before the Senate by him, stated that he would not unduly press the bill, but that he would ask its consideration from day to day. The Senator then went on to give reasons why there was urgency. One of the reasons which he expressed with the most earnestness was the fact that there were not vessels authorized under the existing law in sufficient number to properly carry on the trade between the Philippine Islands and the United States or between different parts of the Philippine Islands, and that for that reason the bill ought to be hurried to a conclusion, but not unduly.

I thought, Mr. President, and other Senators on this side with whom I have had the opportunity to consult have thought that, recognizing the disposition of the Senator not to unduly press the bill, if possibly that which was the most urgent in the measure were eliminated from it, it might be proceeded with a little more with reference to the desire of Senators to inform themselves of this mass of matter which no single Senator has yet had the opportunity to examine.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think if we would pass the section which is included in the joint resolution we might contribute only to the further delay of the bill, and the other sections I regard as of equal importance with that covered by the joint resolution of the Senator from Georgia.

I know there is a mass of matter concerning affairs in the Philippines relating more or less to this bill. The Senator from Georgia, of course, is not alone in a pressure of work. We all have a great deal of work upon us at this time, with our committee hearings and other matters, and we in one way or another are obliged to find time to discuss the immediate business before the Senate.

I did not mean to imply that the Senator from Georgia had reflected in any way upon my conduct of the bill. I only wish to say that I have tried to conduct the bill as considerately as possible.

Mr. BACON. We all recognize that, I think.

Mr. LODGE. I had meant to consult the minority at all the stages; and I say again what I said the other day, that the minority members of the committee have been most considerate of me, and that I appreciate the manner in which they have dealt with the bill. They asked for a reasonable postponement in committee, and they were extremely reasonable about it there. I have received no complaint from them upon this floor, and I have talked with them every day in regard to it. They have manifested only a desire to carry the debate on as rapidly as possible.

Mr. SPOONER and Mr. RAWLINS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I only desire to say that so far as the minority of the committee is concerned, I do not think we have had any reason to complain of the conduct of the majority in regard to the management of this bill or this legislation. The Senator from Massachusetts has in his last remark recognized, however, what must be apparent to every member of the Senate who has considered this question.

There is a vast amount of information which it is very desirable that Senators who wish to do the best that they can in perfecting this legislation, whether on the theory of the majority or of the minority, should have. Those of us who have had our attention directed especially to this matter, perhaps, have been able to gain access to some of the facts, while many others have not been able to do so.

I suggest now to the Senator from Massachusetts that he continue the kindness which he has displayed up to the present time and give Senators a full opportunity to ascertain the facts, in order that they may present their views as they would desire to do on this question. That is the only suggestion I desire to make at this time.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask what was the pending question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution offered by the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia asked unanimous consent for its present consideration. To that I was forced to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What disposition does the Senator from Georgia wish to have made of the joint resolution?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. I yielded to the Senator from Utah [Mr.

RAWLINS], and I should be glad to be permitted to say a word, not by way of discussing the joint resolution, but in relation to the subject which has been under debate.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], who is my friend, who displays great ability and fairness almost always—he always intends to be fair—made a very impassioned speech here the other day upon this subject in one of its phases. He attacked very vigorously the Secretary of War.

Mr. BACON. Oh, no.

Mr. SPOONER. Am I wrong about that?

Mr. BACON. I do not know that I attacked the Secretary of War. I had no such consciousness at the time.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not mean you attacked him personally, but you commented severely upon his having made an order in violation of the statutes, as I recollect.

Mr. BACON. It was not on this particular phase of the subject.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator took issue with the Secretary of War, and declared he had violated the statutes.

Mr. BACON. I did take issue with the proposition that the Secretary of War or anyone else—not especially the Secretary of War, but anybody, even the President of the United States—had any right to make law, either by an original enactment or by an amendment enlarging a law or by an order annulling a law. That was the proposition. I did not make it as a personal matter against the Secretary of War at all.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood that; but I want to say to the Senator——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I inquire what is the date of the order of the Secretary of War which has been referred to?

Mr. SPOONER. There could not be any date to it, for there was no such order issued by the Secretary of War.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. There was an order made in 1899.

Mr. SPOONER. I was not referring to that order made in 1899. That was made by President McKinley. That is the only order that was made, and it was made in perfectly clear exercise of the war power.

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SPOONER. It was in relation to commerce and navigation in the Philippines.

Mr. FORAKER. The reason I made the inquiry I did was to bring out the statement which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] has made.

Mr. BACON. I am very glad to know that no such order was issued.

Mr. SPOONER. It was suggested that since the decision of the Supreme Court, I think, such an order had been made by the Secretary of War, which permitted the clearance of a foreign ship from one of our ports to a port in the Philippines. My friend from Georgia thought that that was a violation of our navigation laws relating to the coasting trade, and by way of illustrating the deterioration which war with its laxity brings upon a people he called attention to this suspension of the laws of the United States by an executive act.

The fact is, as I learned from the Secretary of War, of whom I inquired concerning this subject, that after the decision was made—the last decision, I think it was—the collector of the port of San Francisco felt constrained not to issue clearance papers to a foreign ship which desired to sail from that port to the Philippine Islands. That ship had a cargo of vegetables for our soldiers in the Philippines. It was very important to them, Mr. President, that that cargo should reach its destination at the earliest possible moment. The Secretary of War sent the Commissary-General to the Secretary of the Treasury to inquire about it and report to him the public necessity for the early transportation of those vegetables to our soldiers in the Philippines.

The Secretary of the Treasury directed the collector at San Francisco, as I recollect it, pending a more careful investigation of the status of the matter, to permit that vessel, under the circumstances, to clear. I think the Senator would have done that if he had been Secretary of the Treasury and if Congress had to be called together for the purpose of authorizing medicines or necessary food to be transported for the United States to its army in a distant possession it would amount to a prohibition to transport such things to our army. That is all there was to that. But the Senator raised a very important question——

Mr. BACON. Now, will the Senator please allow me just to say a word as to a matter of fact?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SPOONER. Always.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I had no information other than that enjoyed by the general public as to what order had or had not been issued. The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was on the floor and was urging the prompt consideration of this bill, among other things, upon the ground that there was this difficulty, that there was not a sufficient number of ships authorized under our navigation laws to engage in the trade and perform the transportation which was required. I then made an inquiry of him for the purpose of getting information which I did not before have.

I had seen statements in the newspapers, but I had never acted upon those statements at all, and I therefore asked the Senator a question. I will read the colloquy which occurred between the Senator from Massachusetts and myself, which was the basis of what my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] considers to have been an intemperate attack upon the Secretary of War, but which I did not so understand at the time.

Mr. SPOONER. What kind of an attack did the Senator say?

Mr. BACON. I said "an intemperate attack," but I believe the Senator said "impassioned attack."

Mr. SPOONER. It was all of that.

Mr. BACON. Here is the colloquy which occurred on Tuesday of last week. The Senator from Massachusetts being upon the floor, I interrupted him, and I asked this question:

> Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to ask him a question?
> Mr. LODGE. Certainly.
> Mr. BACON. Under what authority are vessels not now under American registry used in the prosecution of that trade?
> Mr. LODGE. They are under no authority. All trade that is going on there to-day, conducted by foreign vessels, is of necessity unlawful, if anybody chooses to raise the point and bring it to an issue.
> Mr. BACON. There has, however, been a formal order from the authorities of the War Department authorizing it, has there not?
> Mr. LODGE. Of that I am not informed.
> Mr. BACON. Has not the Senator seen the statement in the public prints that the War Department has issued an order authorizing those vessels not under American registry to engage in that trade?
> Mr. LODGE. The Senator is right. Yes; I have seen it. I remember it now. I did not remember it at the time the Senator asked the question.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. The Senator will please pardon me a moment. I am replying really to a question of fact, in order that I may not be put in an improper position.

Thereupon the Senator from Massachusetts himself, assuming that there had been such an order, proceeded to defend the propriety of it. The fact stated by the Senator from Wisconsin this morning that there was no such order, of course, is a very important fact. I am more than glad to know there was no such order, Mr. President; but I submit that that colloquy and the subsequent defense made by the Senator from Massachusetts of that order as a legitimate and proper order, justified me in the conclusion that there was such an order, and I acted upon the basis of it. If there was such an order, I would certainly adhere to the opinion I expressed then, that it was an unlawful order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is entitled to the floor. He yielded to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator except to say that I was mistaken about the date of the order. My memory played me false. Upon inquiry I find there was no such order issued since 1899, when there was an order issued by the President clearly under the war power, and I have nothing to retract in the defense I made. I think the collector was right in clearing the vessel and I think the Secretary of the Treasury was right.

Mr. SPOONER. The order which the Senator from Massachusetts evidently had in mind, was an order issued July 3, 1899, by the President, which related solely to navigation in the Philippines. Nobody, I take it, will question——

Mr. BACON. There is nothing I said which could have related to that order.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I am not saying what the Senator said. Nobody, I take it, will question the power of the President as Commander in Chief in the then situation to regulate commercial intercourse in an archipelago which was in whole or in part in insurrection. A blockade was maintained there of a qualified sort and is maintained to-day for wise purposes. So far as that order is concerned, I have no doubt whatever of its validity. I did not criticise my friend from Georgia. I am endeavoring now simply to set him right and to do justice to the Secretary of War, as I know the Senator always tries to do.

Mr. BACON. I am always gratified to do that.

Mr. SPOONER. The Secretary of War is a very able lawyer and, like all able lawyers, always manifests fidelity to the law.

The facts are, as I have stated, that the Secretary of War was confronted—and that is what led him to inquire of the Secretary of the Treasury, who administers the navigation laws—with an obstruction in the way of getting necessaries, absolute necessaries, from this country to our army in the Philippines. The result was that this vessel was cleared to the Philippine Islands with her cargo containing these supplies for the army.

I believe in obeying the law, but I am frank to say that if I were Secretary of War or Secretary of the Treasury, and our army of fifty-odd thousand men were in the Philippine Islands and it was necessary to get them supplies of any sort essential to ther comfort and their lives, I would take the liberty if I had the power of getting them there, and I would assume, as I think my friend from Georgia would in such a case, that if I committed any technical violation of the law, the people of the United States would forgive me and that Congress would ratify what I had done.

But I have myself very serious doubt whether there is a necessity growing out of this particular provision for immediate action. I do not intend to discuss it now, but I doubt if the situation be such to-day that the Philippines, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, are to be considered as domestic ports from the standpoint of the navigation laws. That is the question which my friend, if he will look into it, will consider open to debate on both sides, which is not at all frivolous.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I have a letter here which I think ought to go into the RECORD in connection with the remarks which have just been made. It is at least a coincidence that just as we are clearing up the difficulties we were in here a few days ago on account of an alleged order of the Secretary of War I should be able to send to the Secretary's desk, to be read, a letter from General Merritt in answer to the charges that were made against him in the debate here yesterday, which will clear up that matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read the letter referred to by the Senator from Ohio.

The Secretary read as follows:

1622 RHODE ISLAND AVENUE, WASHINGTON, D. C.,
January 28, 1902.

MY DEAR SENATOR FORAKER: I wish to deny most emphatically that in a speech which I made soon after my return from the Philippines, or at any other time, have I said that the Constitution of the United States was an antiquated document and should be abolished.

Very truly, yours,

WESLEY MERRITT.

To Senator J. B. FORAKER, United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution introduced by him.

Mr. LODGE. I objected, and the joint resolution went over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection was made.

Mr. BACON. But the debate proceeded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What does the Senator desire done with the joint resolution?

Mr. BACON. I desire that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] may continue his remarks upon it, in order that thereafter I may have a short time for a rejoinder.

Mr. LODGE. The whole subject is open in the bill; all of the joint resolution is in the bill.

Mr. BACON. With that understanding, I will simply ask that the joint resolution may lie upon the table subject to call. It is not necessary that it should go to the Committee on the Philippines, because it has already been considered by the committee, being part of the bill which they have reported favorably.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator's request, that the joint resolution lie upon the table? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I had finished all I cared to say at this time about this particular subject. I shall, perhaps, later express some views on the question which was propounded the other day by the Senator from Georgia, as to whether the navigation laws apply to the Philippine ports, and whether they have been violated at all. But I want to say a word, Mr. President, although not a member of the Philippine Committee, as to the course of this debate.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator let me say a word before he proceeds generally with the debate? I will not do so, of course, if the Senator is going to pursue that line of argument.

Mr. SPOONER. I yield to the Senator as a matter of course.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I will use an extreme term, and say the Senator from Wisconsin has less excuse than any other Senator in this Chamber for putting up a man of straw and pummeling him, because the Senator is fully able to deal with a live question and need not make an artificial one. The Senator, however, did put up artificial man and pummeled him pretty severely.

The remarks which I had the honor to submit to the Senate a few days ago were based upon the belief on my part that the Secretary of War had issued a certain order of a general character, authorizing vessels not licensed under the navigation laws to engage in the trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands. All that I had to say was based upon the belief that that order had been issued.

My belief was not confined solely to the fact that I had seen a statement of that kind in the newspapers, but to the fact that the well-informed junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], when his attention was called to it, said he had seen the order, and he so far recognized its authenticity as to come forward and defend it. It was upon the assumption, under those circumstances, of that general order having been issued that every word I said was predicated, and no word that I said was predicated upon the order which the Senator has read this morning.

Yet the Senator proceeded to discuss the question as to whether or not that particular order would justify what I said. While the Senator said he believed that I myself would disclaim it, yet he proceeded to argue it as if I had made a speech upon the order which was read, of which I had no knowledge whatever, and when what I did say had been based upon an understanding gathered from the junior Senator from Massachusetts as to that general order. Nobody can be more gratified than I am by a knowledge of the fact that no such order was issued, because I think the issuance of such an order, if it had been made, coming from a high officer of the Government, would have been pernicious in its influence, and I am more than gratified to know that no such order was issued.

I am delighted to know the fact, stated in the letter of General Merritt, which was presented by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], because, Mr. President, no man who loves the institutions of this country can be otherwise than disturbed if it be true that such orders are issued and such things are said. It was reported that such orders were issued and such things were said, and we had a right to be concerned about it. I am glad of the opportunity to express my extreme gratification that it is not so.

We are in times when it becomes us to be exceedingly careful about all those things which are essential to the preservation of our institutions, because in times of war there is unavoidably a disregard to some extent of the restrictions which are thrown around all officials when they exercise power which they do not have or enjoy at any other time.

It is perfectly natural, Mr. President, it is according to human nature, that when such a condition of affairs exists as exists in the Philippine Islands, when men have absolute and arbitrary power, when they are engaged every day in the exercise of absolute and arbitrary power, power over life, power over liberty, power over property, power over the making of law, power over the constitution of courts, power over the judgment of courts, it is perfectly natural when men have such unlimited and arbitrary power that they should come to regard with less respect and obedience than they should the mandates of law. And if our officials have been strong enough to rise superior to that temptation, a man would be less than a lover of his country who would not express gratification at the fact.

Mr. President, I have endeavored to do injustice to nobody since I have been in this Chamber. I have been possibly a little more outspoken than policy might have required; but, acting upon the information which I had, not only from the press, but from the junior Senator from Massachusetts, I think the remarks which I made were not without foundation. And while I say that I am glad of the opportunity to repeat for the third time that I am more than gratified that the junior Senator from Massachusetts was mistaken, as well as myself, as to the fact that such an order had been illegally issued by the Secretary of War, because if it had been issued it would have been illegal. I possibly ought to have asked for information from the Secretary of War before presuming to speak upon it; but I thought when one standing as near to the Administration as does the Senator from Massachusetts gave the authenticity of his assent to the extent of defending it I was certainly justified in presuming it was true.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I like to hear the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] speak. He speaks always with great earnestness. I liked his speech when he made it the first time. I liked it when he made it the second time. I got a little weary of it when he made it the third time, in my time. So far as anything I have said is concerned, there is no occasion for my friend to work himself into a passion. I made no attack upon the Senator from Georgia. I uttered no sentence which he could consider a harsh criticism upon him or a challenge of his sense of justice or his sincerity. On the contrary, I expressly disclaimed it. I stated that the Senator from Georgia under an assumption, the validity of which I could not challenge, had uttered here a criticism, somewhat impassioned, upon the Secretary of War, and that my only purpose was to set that official right. I knew the Senator would be glad to have that done. Did I do more than that?

I am not ready, Mr. President, as some Senators seem to be, to believe so quickly reports impeaching the patriotism of men. I never would have believed, without his denial, that General

Merritt had referred in such terms as were imputed to him to the Constitution of the United States, which he had taken an oath to support and under which and in defense of which on a hundred fields of battle he had offered his life. I will never make any speech in the Senate in animadversion upon a man—I speak only for myself—upon the assumption merely that he has done some dishonorable thing or said some vile thing.

The Senator says again that if an order was issued by the Secretary of War authorizing the clearance from our ports of foreign ships to the Philippine Archipelago it would be in violation of law, as I understood him.

Mr. BACON. You mean the particular one you read?

Mr. SPOONER. Any one.

Mr. BACON. The Senator complains of my making a speech three times, but I have not stated that once.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood the Senator to say that.

Mr. BACON. No; I did not say that. I made no allusion to that. I expressly limited what I said to the understanding which I had gathered from the Senator from Massachusetts, that a general order had been issued, and expressly disclaimed anything with reference to that particular case.

Mr. SPOONER. If a general order would violate a statute of the United States, a special order would violate it, so far as that is concerned, and all I suggested about that was that on a casual examination I had become satisfied that it was a serious question, which I thought my friend would admit, and which we might debate a little later, whether the law regulating the coasting trade applies to ports in the Philippine Archipelago. If that is a man of straw, Mr. President, it is the Senator who is the man of straw——

Mr. BACON. No, it is not a man of straw.

Mr. SPOONER. For I understood him to express a contrary opinion.

Mr. BACON. Not as to that.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, as to that, because, if it be true that the navigation laws, so far as they relate to the coastwise trade, do not apply to the Philippine Archipelago and the ports of the archipelago, then it is lawful, whether it is done by a general order or a special order, for vessels of foreign registry to clear from our ports to those ports.

Mr. BACON. The Senator misunderstands me.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, I will not speak long. I do not wish to misunderstand him. I have never been willing to do him or any other man here, so far as I know, any injustice. I think I do not misrepresent him in any way.

Now, as to this bill and the attack upon it, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] opened the debate upon this bill, and he confined his debate to the bill, and he is the only Senator who has debated it who has spoken upon it, except perhaps for a moment. What is this bill? Is it a bill to determine the ultimate policy of the United States as to the Philippines? No. It does not touch it. Is it a bill to establish a government in the Philippines, temporary or permanent? No. It does not touch it, impliedly or otherwise. Is it a bill to be permanent in its nature? It does not profess to be. What is it? It is a bill temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for certain other purposes, that is all.

The minority report which has been made here, accompanied by a minority bill favoring the withdrawal of the United States from the Philippine Archipelago, does not propose immediate withdrawal. It does not propose that incontinently the army shall be brought from the archipelago and that people unorganized be left to their fate, and that the Europeans who are there under our protection and under as solemn a pledge as ever emanated from a government that we will protect them shall be left to their fate. It does not propose that. It contemplates that it will take time.

Organization of a government must precede this proposed abandonment—not only organization of a government, but organization of a stable government, whatever that may be in the opinion of the minority. In the opinion, I think, of intelligent men, it means a government which will be able to discharge its international obligations, and to afford protection to life, liberty, and property. That that can not be organized in a day or a month or a year, I take it, this minority bill implies.

Now, Mr. President, upon what reasonable theory is it that weeks are to be spent here in debating this bill, the general Philippine proposition, and in thrashing over the old straw, so far as the general subject is concerned? It must be admitted, I take it, that pending the organization of a stable government over there the local government must be supported. It must have revenue.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. SPOONER. Not at this moment. I will yield to the Senator later. It must have revenue. It has schoolhouses to build. It has roads to construct. It has uses for revenues such as necessarily has a people just beginning to participate in a government.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator permit me, at this point?

Mr. SPOONER. Very well.

Mr. RAWLINS. The report of the Philippine Commission informs us that under the present system of taxation they, according to their estimate, will derive a revenue more than sufficient to cover their needs to the extent of over $700,000. If the Senator will examine the report in that regard he will find that this bill, temporarily to provide revenue, is not an exigent or urgent measure, because they do now collect revenue, all the revenue that they would collect under this bill, with the exception of that on the trade between the United States and the islands, which amounts in the aggregate to not more than $400,000 per annum.

So I think we of the minority were justified in the assumption that the title of this bill—temporarily to provide revenue—was in reality a misnomer, and that its purpose was to frame a definite policy of obstructing trade between the islands and the United States by way of protection to our industries, and that the alternative method proposed by the minority is the proper one—that if the territory was to be dealt with as foreign territory in respect to trade, they ought to be permitted to have their independence as soon as it could safely be accorded to them. It occurred to us that the one proposition was germane to the other, and that the title of the measure proposed by the majority was, in its nature, misleading, to use no stronger phrase, because there is no necessity now for revenue, and this bill is not proposed to be passed in order to put money into the hands of the Philippine government.

Mr. SPOONER. We were told in every paper in the United States before this bill was reported that it was to be the signal for party purposes of a general debate upon the Philippine question.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. RAWLINS. It is in order that we may have a correct basis for argument. I do not want to interrupt the Senator. I do not wish that we shall be put in a position which we ought not and can not be justly entitled to occupy. You put a measure in here without necessity, naming it a bill to provide revenue, but in reality to impose discriminating tax legislation upon the trade between the people of the islands and the people of the United States, and also refuse to apply to them our shipping laws, dealing with the islands in both those respects as if they were foreign territory.

We discover in that measure this principle, that you are unwilling and deem it to be unsafe to treat the islands as if domestic territory and to accord to their citizens the privileges which you accord to the inhabitants and citizens of the United States. Following your pathway a little farther, we step to the line of declaring that these islands shall be foreign territory, and then as soon as the procedure can be safely carried out we will turn over the government of the islands to their inhabitants and leave the sovereignty there where we think in justice and in accordance with the best interests of the people of the United States it ought to be.

Mr. SPOONER. If I have succeeded in nothing else, I have succeeded in evoking a few moments of discussion upon the part of the minority on this bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. Of course.

Mr. TILLMAN. Has this bill any principle in it? Does it rest on any principle of constitutional law? If so, why can we not debate it on that principle without being accused by the Senator of having ulterior motives?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator has not debated it at all upon any principle.

Mr. TILLMAN. I belong to that miserable, measly little minority you are forever sneering at.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not congratulate the Senator on that.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is not ashamed to belong to it. He is not ashamed to stand up and contend against the principle which underlies the bill, which he considers infamous.

Mr. SPOONER. The principle which underlies this bill, as I understand it, is this: That for the time being we will enact a law under which revenue will be provided for the local government in the Philippines.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator on the other side, and all Senators on the other side, have a right, if it is in conformity with their opinion, to attack the principle of the bill, to say that we ought not to levy any duties upon goods coming from the Philippines into the United States. That is a legitimate argument upon this bill. They have a right to say that there shall be free trade between this country and the Philippines, as they say there should be free trade between this country and every other country in the world.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator permit me?
Mr. SPOONER. How many at a time?
Mr. TILLMAN—

How happy could I be with either,
Were t'other dear charmer away!

Mr. SPOONER. That is what embarrasses me. There are too many.

Mr. TILLMAN. Just take that sweetheart for the present, and then let me in later. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. Well, then, I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. RAWLINS. I do not wish to come within the category of affection and sweetness to which the Senator from South Carolina alludes, but in order that we may arrive at an issue in this case which may be legitimately discussed, I invite the attention of the Senator, in all good faith, to this question, which occurs to me is presented in the pending bill as it has been reported by the majority of the committee, of which I have the honor to be a member.

There is no necessity to raise money to carry on any of the operations of the Government in the Philippine Islands, because we are officially informed that they have now a surplus and will for the next six months have a surplus ranging into many hundreds of thousands of dollars in excess of their needs; that that surplus will not be diminished by the operation of free trade between the islands and the United States to a greater extent, according to the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, than $400,000, so that there will be a surplus for the future of more than $300,000 for the short period. Now, as it seems to me, the question involved in this bill may be stated briefly, and I do not wish to take an unnecessary length of time to state my position.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Senator will not hurry, for another "charmer" is waiting.

Mr. RAWLINS. I hope I am not regarded by the Senator as a charmer in that sense. I know the Senator from Wisconsin is a charmer, and I do not use the word in any improper sense, but I use it in the highest and best sense, because he can always state a proposition clearly, and unless we are on guard against the casuistry which sometimes develops in the course of his speeches, we are all liable to be misled by his eloquence.

There being no necessity now to raise revenue, you of the majority have discovered that you are face to face with the question whether those islands can be treated as a part of American territory and their inhabitants dealt with as standing upon the same footing as American citizens in our form of government. You have concluded that it is dangerous to our welfare so to do. The Supreme Court having decided that in the normal operations of government there should be free trade between the islands and the people of the United States, this bill is an urgent bill for the purpose of precluding the possibility of that.

You intend to destroy the trade, that part of it which implies competition between the industries of the islands and the industries of the people of the United States. You propose, pro tanto, to put them outside the domains of our nation, to treat them as foreign territory, to deny to them the benefit of the equal operation of our tax laws and the operation of our shipping laws. You say that if these people carry on their industries as a part of the American nation in their own way it will lead to the detriment of or disaster to the people and the industries of the United States.

We of the minority concede a part of that argument—that it is unsafe to take the islands and to hold them. The people are unsuited to be admitted into participation in the affairs of our Government. They are so located in proximity to cheap labor that by and by, with the influx of cheap labor which is certain to come, their competition will be detrimental to the welfare of the people of the United States. We of the minority say: "You propose to deal with these people as aliens, and to govern them as subjects under a system of absolutism, which we say is contrary to the genius and institutions of our country."

We say we present the alternative to you. Let us have free trade with them temporarily only, because, while they are a part of us and we exact allegiance of them, that is due to them. It will tend to pacify them. It will put them in a humor in which we can treat with them. We say let them go as speedily as is practicable, but do not set them afloat in a chaotic condition—in a condition of anarchy. Give them an opportunity to organize some government which will be suited to their needs.

When those ends are accomplished we will withdraw from the islands. Then we will permit our tariff-tax laws to have their ordinary and usual operation, dealing with those people as we deal with other foreign countries. In this way we will put away this peril which you recognize as existing to-day. Our proposition is an alternative one and a germane one to the proposition which the majority have presented.

Mr. SPOONER. There is nothing germane about it—that is, there is nothing in this debate germane to the bill. That is only my opinion. Nor do I think there is anything in the bill reported by the minority germane to this bill. I can not see for myself what relation the ultimate disposal by the United States of the Philippine Archipelago has to the subject of raising temporarily revenue for the benefit of that people. As I said before, under this substitute they are not to take the sovereignty under the proposed surrender until they have established a stable government. Until that day comes they are to be supported. They have no adequate local system of taxation. They have no land tax, as we have in this country. I am told that 90 per cent of the titles to lands are in the United States. They are not accustomed to the assessment and collection of taxes locally, as we are.

Mr. RAWLINS. If I may be permitted——

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will confine himself to a question instead of to a speech, I will yield.

Mr. RAWLINS. You say there is no land tax.

Mr. SPOONER. Substantially none.

Mr. RAWLINS. I understand the contrary to be true. You say there is no tariff taxation. I understand that not to be true. There is a law under which they are collecting duties now.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say there were no tariff taxes.

Mr. RAWLINS. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say so.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, there is general land tax.

Mr. SPOONER. That is what I meant of course.

Mr. LODGE. There is of course local taxation.

Mr. RAWLINS. There is a local tax of one description and another upon property to the extent of about 1 per cent.

Mr. SPOONER. One per cent. I say there is no general system of land taxation in the Philippines, and there never has been any more than there was in Porto Rico.

When the Porto Rican bill was before the Senate we heard all this debate, or the substance of it, as to treating Porto Ricans differently from the people of our own country. There is nothing new about it. The Supreme Court of the United States has not decided, as the Senator from Utah says, that in normal conditions there should be free trade between the United States and territory belonging to the United States. The Supreme Court has decided that without a law imposing such a tariff there is no such tariff. The Supreme Court sustained the act of Congress imposing duties between Porto Rico and the United States for the benefit of Porto Rico; and we are proposing here by this bill to contribute to the Philippine treasury a large percentage, if not all——

Mr. LODGE. All.

Mr. SPOONER. All of the moneys which may be collected under the operation of this bill upon articles coming from the Philippines into the United States.

Mr. RAWLINS. What would it amount to?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know what it will amount to, but I do know that whatever it amounts to it is adequate to put into the treasury for the Philippine government money which would not go into that treasury if the Senator had his way and we had free trade. There is nothing selfish in levying tariff duties for the benefit of a people just being conducted out of the darkness of tyranny into the sunlight of a fair and honest government.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. I agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. We have got away from the point on which I wanted to interrupt the Senator. He will get back to it, perhaps. Just now I should like to ask the Senator if there is no difference between an income derived from a tariff charged between, we will say, countries both of which are under one flag and a tariff charged in the Philippines against imports from Great Britain, or Germany, or France, or some other foreign country? And that brings me back to the question I intended to ask when I rose before and my friend seemed to object.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I waited for another. That is all. I gave precedence to the first "charmer."

Mr. TILLMAN. It brings me back to the proposition which I should like the Senator to discuss from a legal standpoint, as to whether the Philippine Islands are a part of the United States or whether they are to be treated as foreign territory. We levy tariffs against foreigners. Do we levy them against our own people? That is the principle involved in this bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I recommend to the Senator that he read the decisions of the Supreme Court.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I have read some of those decisions, and a decision which is supported by four on one side and five on the other, and the fifth wabbling so that you do not know on which side he is going to drop, I must say does not command very much respect from me or from any lawyer whom I have heard discuss it.

Mr. SPOONER. Whatever may be said about the decisions——
Mr. TILLMAN. They are law. I understand that.
Mr. SPOONER. I do not think that the judges will be very sensitive to the Senator's criticism of them.
Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, not at all.
Mr. SPOONER. They settled one thing against the Democratic contention, and that is that there is a distinction between the "United States" and "territory belonging to the United States;" and in my judgment it is a happy thing for this people that they did; for if the contention on the other side had been sustained, that when the United States acquires inhabited territory it becomes a part of the United States in the sense in which the Senator uses that phrase, as contradistinguished from property belonging to the United States, and the Constitution ex proprio vigore extends over it, making citizens of its inhabitants, the Senators could not have introduced a bill proposing to surrender it. It would not have been a question, as it is to-day, not for partisanship or parties, but for the American people, when they get ready, to dispose of. The Congress is given the power "to dispose of and to make needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States;" and if the distinction had been obliterated between the United States as an owner and the property—the thing owned—I do not know where you would find in Congress the power to dispose of it.
Mr. TILLMAN. Now, right there, will the Senator——
Mr. SPOONER. No; excuse me. One can dispose of what belongs to him. He can not very well dispose of himself unless it be in marriage.
Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Or by suicide.
Mr. SPOONER. Yes, or by suicide; and some men who marry commit suicide.

But, Mr. President, I did not rise to make a speech on this subject. The Senator from Utah says that they have adequate revenue over there now. A part of the surplus came from the operation of the old tariff, as I understand it. I remember reading in the report of the Taft Commission—and if I am mistaken my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will correct me—that under this new tariff, by which the rates of duty were lowered, the income will be lowered. The Senator failed to take into account what the necessities of the islands are or the government in the future. We propose, if we can, before this session ends, I think, to make some provision for eliminating the "dead-hand" ownership by religious corporations of vast tracts of land in the Philippines, in order that those lands may be parceled out, not for exploitation by Americans, but as homes for the Filipinos.

That can only be done, Mr. President, by purchase. It will remove an element of long standing and an inevitably to be continued grievance and trouble in the Philippines. I am not speaking to this bill, however, when I say that, because that provision is not in this bill; it will probably be in another; but I am replying to the assumption by the Senator from Utah that they have abundant money now.
Mr. RAWLINS. If the Senator will permit me——
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?
Mr. SPOONER. Certainly; for a question.
Mr. RAWLINS. Yes; for a statement.
Mr. SPOONER. Yes; for a statement, if it is short.
Mr. RAWLINS. The report of the Taft Commission, if the Senator will examine it, shows that they have adopted what is known as the Taft tariff law with a view of the operation of that law, and it shows the estimate which the Commission itself put upon the amount of its receipts and expenditures under the operation of that law. The Senator will find, if he examines their report, the estimate that their surplus for the ensuing term will be between $700,000 and $800,000. I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] will agree that my statement in regard to that is correct.
Mr. LODGE. That there is a surplus left over this year.
Mr. RAWLINS. There is a surplus now of something like $5,000,000 in the treasury.
Mr. LODGE. The accumulations of three years. They have a surplus, undoubtedly.
Mr. RAWLINS. Yes; and it has been accumulating.
Mr. LODGE. But nine-tenths of their revenue comes from their customs duties under the returns which I handed the Senator from Wisconsin. Nine-tenths of their revenue, $9,000,000 out of $10,600,000, would simply leave them without resources.
Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——
Mr. RAWLINS. One moment, if the Senator from South Carolina will permit me in this connection.
Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from South Carolina can not permit you, but the Senator from Wisconsin will.
Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator from Wisconsin had already yielded to me.
Mr. TILLMAN. I was just going to ask the Senator from Wisconsin, having permitted the Senator from Massachusetts to come in, to let me in later.
Mr. SPOONER. Oh, I will let you in.
Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator says that I assume so and so. I make no assumption whatever, except as I find my statement based upon the report of the Taft Commission, that their surplus of revenues will be precisely what I have stated, and the report has reference to the very tariff legislation which they have enacted and which it is proposed to reenact by this bill.
Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] will allow me, what the Senator from Utah says is perfectly correct about the surplus, but he omits to state that the immediate and pressing improvements set forth by the Taft Commission will take up all that surplus which they have stated in their report.
Mr. RAWLINS. If I may be permitted in this connection, I will state as to the purchase of the friars' lands that it is proposed to issue bonds.
Mr. LODGE. It has nothing to do with the friars' lands. I refer to the improvements necessary in Manila for the health of the city.
Mr. RAWLINS. It is proposed that the friars' lands shall be dealt with in another way. It is true that perhaps nine-tenths of the revenues are derived from tariff taxation, but the trade between the United States and the islands which is now free is but one-tenth of the total trade, and the failure to pass this bill only operates to reduce their revenue to the extent of the tariff taxation derived on the trade between the islands and the United States. That amounts to less than $400,000. But their estimated surplus, after considering every expenditure which they propose to make, will be over $700,000, and they will still have a surplus, if this bill is not enacted in the ensuing time, after making provision for everything which they contemplate, of something like $400,000 or $500,000.
Mr. SPOONER. Now, Mr. President, I did not intend to get into this debate at all. I simply rose, in the first place, to say a few words in reply to the Senator from Georgia. What I really wanted to say was that this debate was general in its scope and has really nothing to do with this bill.

Senators have spoken about the tyranny over there in the Philippines, the laws which have been enacted by the Philippine Commission. It will be difficult to frame language more bitter in its condemnation than that which has been employed by Senators upon that subject. There is nothing in the committee bill which affirms any law which has been enacted in the Philippines except the tariff law. That question is all in the hands of Congress. It all pertains to the government bill, which, as I understand it, is later to come, and which I think ought to come.

The only bill before the Senate now which adopts the legislation, infamous as it is said to be, of the Philippine Commission is the bill reported by the minority, as I understand it. First it surrenders the sovereignty of the United States in the Philippine Archipelago. To whom? Congress has power to dispose of the territory belonging to the United States. Ordinarily where there is a grant there is a grantee.
Mr. RAWLINS. We did not think so, if the Senator will permit me, when we compelled Spain to relinquish Cuba.
Mr. SPOONER. Yes; we compelled Spain to relinquish Cuba. We were not willing to take a cession of Cuba ourselves, for wise and obvious reasons, and, as there was no Cuban government to be a grantee, as there was not an organized Cuban people, we took a general relinquishment of title to Cuba by Spain, knowing full well that when the time came we were strong enough and honest enough to see to it that that surrendered sovereignty vested in the people of Cuba or such government as they might organize.
Mr. TELLER. And you will not do it.
Mr. SPOONER. We are doing it now just as fast as we can. They have adopted a constitution.
Mr. TILLMAN. Under coercion.
Mr. SPOONER. Under coercion? What sort of coercion?
Mr. TILLMAN. The Platt amendment.
Mr. SPOONER. There it is again! Mr. President, I can defend, I think successfully, the Platt amendment. I think it was infinitely more in the interest of Cuba, as it will turn out to be, than it was in the interest of the United States. It did not destroy the independence of the proposed Cuban government. It will be in position to make a treaty with any government in the world, with one single limitation, and that is that no treaty shall be made which will destroy her independence.
Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——
Mr. SPOONER. But I do not wish to get into the Cuban question.
Mr. TELLER. I will not interrupt the Senator, then.
Mr. SPOONER. I will discuss that later.
Mr. TELLER. I challenge that proposition.
Mr. SPOONER. I am prepared, when the Senator challenges it, to meet his challenge feebly, probably, but in a straightforward way.

Mr. TELLER. I know you tried to meet it at the last session.
Mr. SPOONER. I made no speech on it at the last session.
Mr. TELLER. Somebody did on your side.
Mr. SPOONER. Nobody did on our side.
Mr. TELLER. Not on the Platt resolution?
Mr. SPOONER. No.
Mr. TELLER. Certainly.
Mr. SPOONER. Who made it?
Mr. TELLER. I heard it discussed in committee, at least.
Mr. SPOONER. On that side; oh, yes, and in committee.
Mr. TELLER. I heard it discussed by somebody on that side, although I wondered that you had a heart to do it.
Mr. SPOONER. We had the heart to do it. I do not think the Senator ought to say that. We had the heart to do it and we had the ability to do it, and when the Senator indicates otherwise he pays that side too much honor and this side too little.
Mr. TELLER. I will not discuss that now with the Senator. It was a plain and open violation of the plighted faith of the United States, as I said on the floor then, and I repeat it now.
Mr. SPOONER. I do not deny that the Senator discussed it. I know the Senator said that; but we made no speeches on it, nor did we make any speeches on the Philippine amendment. We sat here dumb. It was difficult to do so. We listened to diatribes and some language that ought not to have been uttered without replying, and we are not accustomed to doing that; but we all knew on this side of the Chamber that the session was limited by law and that one speech would make an extra session and bring about the defeat of measures which we thought of infinite consequence to the country.
Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me there to ask him if that Platt amendment had been defeated by debate until the end of the session, would not that side have had the courage to have gone forward in its philanthropy, humanity, Christianity, and liberty, and all that kind of thing, to have called an extra session?
Mr. SPOONER. We have courage enough on this side to do any right thing on earth.
Mr. TILLMAN. Except to defend an infamous thing.
Mr. SPOONER. We have not courage enough to lynch colored men or deprive them of their rights. [Applause in the galleries.]
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That must not be repeated in the galleries. If it is, the galleries will be cleared.
Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator desire to discuss the race question here and now? He seems to have left the proposition which he started on—to throw a personal bomb at me.
Mr. SPOONER. The Senator——
Mr. TILLMAN. I am ready to meet him here, in Wisconsin, or anywhere else, on the race question.
Mr. SPOONER. Wherever the Senator is willing to meet me on that question or any other he will find me there, so far as that is concerned. The Senator addressed to me an observation rather offensive in its character.
Mr. TILLMAN. What was it?
Mr. SPOONER. Rather taunting.
Mr. TILLMAN. In what way?
Mr. SPOONER. Read it and you will see.
Mr. TILLMAN. It certainly had no allusion to lynching.
Mr. SPOONER. No.
Mr. TILLMAN. And the Senator understands very well that I come from a section of country where lynching for a given crime and for a great many other crimes is very prevalent. Now, does the Senator wish to leave the Philippine proposition, in which he is dealing with a colored people in a most infamous and damnable and hypocritical way, to go to the South to hold them up as examples that we are dealing in a similar way with the colored people here at home? Are we to have two rules of conduct in regard to the colored people—one in the Philippines by which we butcher them and shoot Christianity into them, and another in the South where we are not allowed to protect our wives and children?
Mr. SPOONER. If we had the same rule for the colored people in the Philippines that the Senator refers to in the South, God help the colored man in the Philippines.
Mr. TILLMAN. God help him there, because the records show you have already butchered three times as many as the Spaniards did in three centuries, and you have done it in three years.
Mr. SPOONER. It is one thing to kill men with arms in their hands against the government and against the flag. It is another thing to burn them where the laws are in force and the courts are in session.
Mr. TILLMAN. You burned them in Kansas, sir.
Mr. SPOONER. Wherever it is done, it is a crime.
Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, it is a very easy thing, Mr. President, for a man who has not come in contact with them in close quarters to theorize and sentimentalize as to what other people ought to do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator must not interrupt a Senator when addressing the Senate without first obtaining leave.
Mr. TILLMAN. I beg the Chair's pardon, but I was taunted in a way that no white man from South Carolina can submit to.
Mr. SPOONER. I did not limit it to South Carolina.
Mr. TILLMAN. He threw it to me, and why?
Mr. SPOONER. I threw it to you because you happened to be in the way. Here it is again, Mr. President. That all comes of my permitting interruptions.
Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator permit me one moment, and then I will subside until he gets through?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?
Mr. SPOONER. Yes.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina.
Mr. TILLMAN. There is a point I tried to get in a moment ago to ask the Senator about, but I was waved aside. Now I know that for a farmer like me to discuss the legal points with a giant in the law courts like the Senator from Wisconsin, is a temerity that would lay me under the accusation of the old doggerel that "fools rush in where angels fear to tread." But I am fool enough to ask the Senator whether, when he quoted the Constitution a moment ago in regard to the power of Congress in dealing with the territory and other property of the Filipinos, he included men as other property whose liberty and lives and all rights are to be jeopardized or to be destroyed, and whether people are property? You bought them at $2 a head, it is true, but do you intend to give them their liberty, as we propose, or do you propose to hold them under the bayonet, under a carpetbag government more damable than you put on us in 1868?
Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, that is the old question. The power to occupy inhabited territory involves the power, I suppose, to change the allegiance. It is the will of the inhabitants. A government may own the territory, but not own the man. We acquired Louisiana. No one ever pretended that men and women were bought and sold in that transaction. We acquired Florida. We acquired California and New Mexico.
Mr. TILLMAN. All of them were a part of the United States and treated under similar laws, and were intended to become States.
Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I think all the property belongs to the United States. I think that if we were engaged in a successful war, and at the end of it we were obliged to surrender inhabited territory belonging to us, it would be competent for the President, in a treaty of peace ratified by the Senate, to cede New Mexico or to cede Alaska. I deny that it would be competent, even in that case, for the Government of the United States to make a treaty ceding a State. It could not do it, because the Constitution, which confers the treaty-making power, also provides that no State shall be divided without its consent. There is no power given to dispose of a State.
Moreover, a State is a constituent part of the treaty-making power itself. So my mind has reached a great and obvious distinction between the United States (made up of States) and the territory belonging to the United States. But that is aside——
Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to ask him a question?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?
Mr. SPOONER. I yield only for a question.
Mr. TILLMAN. Only for a question. Suppose we were contiguous, as we are, to a vast expanse of territory north of us, but that that territory, instead of a bleak and inhospitable region, was densely populated. Suppose that all the English-speaking race had belonged to England and fifty or one hundred million more were congregated there, and that in a war with this country we were helpless and at the mercy of that Government, would we, as the United States, or a nation, be barred from ceding Michigan, for instance, in order to preserve the life of the nation?
Mr. SPOONER. Of course, we would, in my opinion.
Mr. TILLMAN. Then we would have to die as a people rather than to surrender one individual State?
Mr. SPOONER. We would have to die as a people if we were killed——
Mr. TILLMAN. In other words——
Mr. SPOONER. But we could not make a treaty, Mr. President, I think, by command of any power on earth, whether we were whipped or not, by which we would cede away one of the States of this Union, a constituent part of the treaty-making power. If a conqueror demanded the State of Maine, we could not cede it. That conqueror could occupy that State, if they had the power, and they would have the absolute power so long as they occupied it and maintained possession, and no longer. They would fall, then, within the doctrine uti possidetis. You have title where you hold, but you can conceive of no circumstances, in my judgment, under which, in our form of government, a treaty could be made ceding away a State—in other words, dissolving the Union of States.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SPOONER. Now, if the Senator from Utah is not careful he will get me into making a speech, and I do not want to do that.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator is discussing the bill and I am glad to hear him, because on this side of the Senate we are prepared to receive any suggestion which the Senator makes in all seriousness. I agree with the Senator that a State may not be ceded away. But I ask the Senator if he considers that any proposition of that kind is involved in the position of the minority?

Mr. SPOONER. No; certainly not. Of course I do not.

Mr. RAWLINS. Does the Senator consider that there would be any legal or constitutional obstacle in that proposition of the minority if it were enacted into law?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator knows what my answer must be to the question whether I consider this power, the treaty-making power, as adequate to the surrender of a State. Of course not. He knows that that is not involved in this bill. He knows that my remarks upon that subject were simply in answer to a question put to me by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to ask the Senator a question, if he will permit me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will make a personal matter of it, I will yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have no personal feeling toward the Senator, except one of admiration and kindness and friendship. He could not tantalize me into any other sentiment, because I know his heart is in the right place, but his head is all full of tangles sometimes. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. Whenever I agree with the Senator from South Carolina, which is quite often, for he is an able and practical legislator, my head is perfectly straight; whenever I disagree with him, and that is generally, then it is awfully tangled. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. The point I wish to make is this: You made a declaration that Congress is omnipotent to deal with property and territory. A section of the Constitution, as I understand it, thrown in as a kind of final round-up, so as not to leave anything lying around loose that the United States could not deal with, gave Congress the right to "make all needful rules and regulations as to the territory and other property of the United States," and the Senator proceeds to go forward. For instance, he illustrates by saying that if this country was whipped and helpless it could surrender New Mexico, because New Mexico is a Territory.

Then when I asked him if this country were whipped and helpless if it could not make a treaty of peace to surrender Michigan, he said no; that we could not do that because the Constitution would not allow us to cede a sovereign State—to destroy the Union. Under one condition you would be helpless and have to do a thing, and under the other condition you would be helpless and have to do a thing, but it would not be lawful. That is all there is in it.

Mr. SPOONER. No. Under one condition you would be helpless and have to do a thing, and under the other you would be helpless and could not do a thing.

Mr. TILLMAN. After the thing was done vi et armis, I do not see the Senator's logic when he undertakes to say that we can not do what the God of battles has already done.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, if the Senator can not see the distinction——

Mr. TILLMAN. I can see the legal distinction, but it is one of those legal quibbles with which you gentlemen of the law always try to hammer a tyro into submission; and I do not believe you are always infallible in your law points.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think I am either. But if the Senator can not see the distinction between the cession of a State and the seizure and occupation of a country by a hostile army, if he will pardon me for returning the compliment, I think his head is badly tangled. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I was simply struck with the sophistry of the argument that we could cede New Mexico, but that we could not cede Michigan under identical conditions. I can not conceive of any possible situation that is ever likely to arise—I will say that in the course of time it can never arise—when this country will be too helpless to hold all of its territory that it ought to hold; that is, I mean the United States, the continental United States, not the insular United States, that we are now differentiated into, not the Asiatic United States.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, as I said before, this discussion has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am glad we have got the Senator back to the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. It was the Senator who drew me away from it. I was saying some time ago that, notwithstanding the fact that Senators on the other side denounced the legislation of the so-called Taft Commission and the rules and regulations which have been made by that Commission, this minority bill is the only legislative proposition which has been made here legalizing the acts of the Taft Commission and continuing them indefinitely in force over there. That is done in this section, as I understand:

That until the people of the islands shall establish a government, as hereinbefore provided—

all laws, rules, and regulations now in force for the government of the islands and the raising of revenue therefor shall be in force, except as the same may be in conflict with this act.

Mr. President, the Senator, in discussing the question whether we ought to pass this little temporary tariff bill, certainly does not wish the Senate to wait until every Senator can read the 1,100 pages of the Taft report. In the report submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] the portions of the Taft report relating to this subject are embodied—the sources of revenue, disbursements, and all that.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAWLINS. The Senator has read a clause of the minority report and seems to think that the legal effect of it is a ratification of all the acts passed by the Taft Commission. Of course the design of it was, as must be evident, I think, to the Senator, to maintain the present status quo until we can get out of the islands; but the only part of the laws of the Taft Commission which have been animadverted upon in this discussion, and to which attention has been called, was the law making it a crime to advocate the according of independence to the islands. Of course that provision would necessarily be "in conflict with this act," the purpose of which is to secure the islands their independence.

But I want to say to the Senator if he thinks that is the only objectionable feature of the minority proposition, and that this is the vicious part of it, I think we can easily accommodate ourselves to the situation and come to an agreement. The Senator is opposed to that clause. I think we of the minority will not seriously insist upon it if that is the only obstacle to the Senator's supporting the proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. That is a charming bit of humor, I suppose, Mr. President. I have not said that is the only provision of this amendment to which I am opposed. I am opposed to all of it; and when the appropriate time comes I shall attempt to give the Senate the reasons why I am opposed to it.

I conclude as I started, Mr. President, with the simple observation that, in my opinion—and it is only my opinion—on a measure to provide revenue for that government over there, which has relatively just begun, and which we all admit must indefinitely continue, some think for a shorter period and others for a longer, our first duty is to attend to the emergency matters which do not in any wise commit the Congress or the people to any permanent policy in the Philippine Archipelago, leaving to the incoming of the government bill—and it will come in—the debate of these larger questions at a time when it will be appropriate, and when the discussion of them and the consequent delay can do no harm.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to this bill, to be added as a new section. I ask that it may be read and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado offers an amendment to the pending bill, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That the Constitution and all laws of the United States which are not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within the said Philippine Archipelago as elsewhere within the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend at this time of the day to take up the general discussion of this question. I think our friends who have brought this bill into the Senate have no right to complain if the main question touching our relations with the Philippine Islands shall be thoroughly discussed. Whether they do complain or whether they do not, I want to assure them that it will be so discussed, and discussed upon this bill, which is just as appropriate a place for such a discussion as any other bill that can be presented. I know there is another bill pending which proposes general legislation for the islands, but that is not now before the Senate, and may never come before the Senate.

There is a very important principle in this bill; that is, if those people belong to us and if they are a part of the United States, as to our right, both legally and morally, to tax them.

Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that he must have overlooked a very important part of our early history. When Great Britain proposed to tax us and when we objected to it, she answered, "I am going to let you have the proceeds of that taxation." When later she provided that the tax on tea might by way of rebate be refunded to the tea companies, she thought that we were very much out of reason when we could not see that, as the money came back into our pockets, we were not being improperly taxed. There was not a man, or a woman, or a boy in this country who did not know that the fact that Great Britain turned the money over to us did not bear in the slightest degree on the question whether she had the right to tax us without representation. If she had doubled the money and put back twice as much as she took out of our pockets, it would not have made any difference with the fathers of the Republic.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. TELLER. I will.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand the Senator to refer to the duties we collect on the Philippine imports and then rebate to them?

Mr. TELLER. That is what we are going to do, is it not?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but I understand the Senator to refer to the duties levied in the ports of this country and refunded to them.

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Then I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact——

Mr. TELLER. If those people are part of our people and that is our country, it is a question—I do not say how it is to be decided, but it is a fair question of debate—is not that a taxation of those people when they send their goods here as much as it was when Great Britain sent her tea here and made us pay a tax on it?

Mr. LODGE. It is undoubtedly a tax on those people, if it is held by the Senator, as I should hold, that those duties come out of the Philippine importers.

Mr. TELLER. Well, Mr. President, we will not stop for that at this time.

Mr. LODGE. No, I do not believe we will.

Mr. TELLER. Our fathers thought the tax came out of them when they paid it. They may have been mistaken. It may be that it came out of the exporter of the tea, and not out of the consumer, but they did not so believe. They said it was a tax, and they said "we are a part of the English people and you have no right to tax us without representation." So the Filipino has a right to say to-day that he is a part of the American people. He may not be right about it, but there is enough for him to stand on in the decision of the Supreme Court that those islands are part of the United States, and to say, "I do not think you have a right to tax us." The relations of those people to us may not be exactly those of New Mexico, because we have extended to New Mexico privileges which we have denied to those people over there.

But what I want to say to the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Massachusetts who is leading off in this debate, is that these are fair questions for discussion; and I can not understand how questions which involve great principles, questions which must be decided, if they can be decided, by the Supreme Court, are not still within the province of the political department of the Government. If the court says that we may tax those people, it does not follow that we must tax them. It is a fair question for political consideration on this bill, and it is more appropriate on this bill than it will be upon the bill the Senator has introduced and which is now in the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator does not understand that I have made any objection to general debate on this bill? I have not indicated any such disposition. I think we might as well have the Philippine debate on this bill as on any other. We are bound to have it at some time.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] took us to task for indulging in debate on the Philippine question on this bill. I am at a loss to know whether the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is in the lead or the Senator from Wisconsin, or which we shall regard as the special representative of the Administration on this question. Either, or both of them, perhaps, should be treated by us as representing practically the Administration so far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that this question is not one for special technical debate. If it ever is a proper thing in the Senate of the United States to have a technical debate, it does not seem to me that this is one of the occasions for indulging in it. It does seem to me that this question involving so much, not only to the eight or ten million people over there, but infinitely more to us, might be debated as American Senators ought to debate, without any recrimination or unpleasant words.

I do not intend, as I said before, to debate this question to-night, but I am going to debate it, and I am going to debate a cognate question on this bill before you get through with it, for under the rules of the Senate I have a right to debate it, and that is the question of our relations with Cuba. I am going to take the liberty of debating that question, especially after the suggestion made here to-day.

Mr. President, I confess that I was somewhat surprised at the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts on the introduction of this debate. I had myself expected that there would be some indication of what the policy of the Government is to be. For three years we have wanted to know what is the policy of the Administration. After practically three years of war—a war never ordered by the Congress of the United States, the war-making power—after nearly three years of war we do not know what the policy of the Administration is to be, except, as the Senator from Massachusetts tell us, that there is one thing he will not do—I suppose by that he means that the Administration will not do it—they will not say to those 10,000,000 people what the policy of the Government of the United States is to be, only that the President says, "By what we have done you may determine what we are going to do."

Then, by the fact that he has had 75,000 men there with bayonets and has been putting that army in every hamlet and every town in those islands where he dared to go, where they have committed outrages and tortures which would have disgraced the Spanish people when they were in possession, and we have increased them, as the Anglo-Saxon will whenever he attempts to do the same thing that the languid Latin attempts. But my heart sank within me when the Senator said, "I will not make a promise; I do not know whether we can fulfill the promises we make." If ever there was an admission of an unhappy and uncertain condition, the Senator made it when he said that.

I say to the Senator, the Philippine civil commissioner, who has just returned to this country—for whom I have great respect and the kindest of feelings, as I had for his father before him—may say the war is over, but not a military man of the 50,000 there will say it; not a single one of them will pretend that the war is not as rife to-day as it ever was. It is true, sir, there is not a great army in the field against us; it is true that the Filipino soldiers are scattered all over the islands. The Adjutant-General of the Army of the United States declares that the Filipinos adopted this policy deliberately; that they were not forced to it by the United States.

They abandoned their great organization and their large army and went into small detachments because it was better for them and more difficult for us. It is not a sign of weakness to-day that those people are not in an army of 10,000 or 20,000, but that they are in bands of 100 and 200. I say here, if the Senator from Massachusetts will call the men who know—as I am sure he will not—if he will call the men who know before his committee, call them from the islands, call them from the Army, call them from the civil service, he will find that there is a condition there of absolute insurrection, if you can call it such, of absolute opposition to the Government of the United States, as General Chaffee says.

There is not a mile square in the Philippine Islands, except in the city of Manila, where an American citizen dares walk out unprotected by a bayonet. Yet the Senator says he can not make any promises. He does not know what we are going to do. Great God! is it not time we should know after three years of wicked war—after three years of violation of the pledges we made in this Senate that we did not intend to subjugate those people against their will, pledges made by what is called the McEnery resolution, a resolution which we were told should become not the resolution merely of this Senate, but the joint resolution of both Houses?

We who voted for it—some of us at least—supposed it was to be a national declaration, and we who voted against the Bacon resolution believed that we saved the opportunity, because we did not believe the Bacon resolution could pass the House. Yet here we are, the civil branch of the Government, denying that there is war, the Army united in saying 50,000 men are not enough, calling for more troops, calling for more vigorous measures, taking steps that would disgrace savages, as I mean to show before we get through with this bill, applying the torch, making the Filipino people practically outlaws, pursuing them from their homes, burning their houses, destroying their property, and attempting to starve them into subjection.

Mr. President, leaving out the question of decency and morality, is it to our interest to carry on such a war? It is incumbent upon this Administration to-day, after three years of war, after more than $300,000,000 of American money have been poured into that country for no good, to tell us when they propose to make an effort to bring peace there outside of force.

There is not a man on the other side of the Chamber who does not know that what the Army officers say is true, that you have got to keep this army there for years; and the Philippine Commission, after looking it all over, with all their optimism, with all their hopes belied by every condition around them, say to us, "We will bring these people up to self-government in one generation perhaps; no, hardly in one generation, we think, but we hope we may in two." If this Administration has no policy except to drift, we ought to know it.

I am going to put into the RECORD some things before I quit for the purpose of using them in a subsequent debate, and I want to say to the Senators who do not sit on this side of the Chamber you need not be oversensitive now, you are going to hear God's truth, and it will be better for you to not sneer at it. If what we say is not true, then meet it like men. Do not say, "Oh, that is silly." Meet it. I say to you now that if you will call here the men from there I will prove to you that no sensible man can hope to secure peace by force in ten years. I will prove to you that you are doing things in the Philippine Islands that you are here denying that you are doing there, and that you dare not have a free press; that you will keep the censorship there, as you have kept it for two straight years.

Not a dispatch has come out of Manila that was not scissored and marked and blotted and changed for more than three years; and now we will be told that my speech and the report of the minority of the committee will be used to incite further war! Then you have got to have a censorship here, and you must not let what we say here go out to the people of those islands. If a speech saying that the people of those islands are by nature entitled to have a government of their own, and by every principle of American law entitled to govern themselves, will incite insurrection, Mr. President, insurrection would be daily incited.

We in this country are not going to quit reading the Declaration of Independence, nor cease declaring that the rights of men exist now as they did a hundred and twenty-five years ago. I assert as a principle of international law that every country belongs to the people who inhabit it. I assert as an American principle and as an American doctrine, which never was questioned until recently, that the people who inhabit a country have a right to govern it. You deny that now. You say they are in insurrection. They are rebels.

As I said yesterday, one class are called war rebels and another are called war traitors. I have not been able to find the distinguishing feature between the two, except, I suppose, those who are the most vigorous and the most active may perhaps be called the war rebels. I do not know whether it would be that way or the reverse.

Mr. President, it is difficult for an American ever to see with composure his flag assailed or to know that there is an attack upon American troops. I believe that these people are capable of self-government. I would not believe it if they submitted to the dictation of the so-called Commission which you sent over there. No self-respecting people, no people capable of self-government, would submit to it; and if that makes me a war rebel, make the most of it.

I here have an article written by one of the most prominent and best-known newspaper men in the United States, a man whom most of us know, and a man whom everybody who does know will agree is a fair writer. He has made his statements carefully, and I say they strike terror to me. He has not attempted to depict the cruelties and the wickedness over there as they are given to me by the letters of men who are there and who dare not while they stay there speak above their bated breath. They are the class of men that General Wheaton referred to when he said they sent men to jail for less than that. Yesterday the whole Republican side were in arms at the great outrage we were perpetrating upon an officer of the Army when we said that he had criticised our conduct here and criticised the conduct of a distinguished Republican professor who went over there and saw for himself, and comes back and is so foolish as to say he wants to see those people have independence.

Mr. President, I have here an article written and published in the Philippine Islands; and if this is not true, or if anybody doubts it, then I now challenge the Committee on the Philippines to call before them the man who edited the paper, and to call any man from those islands—anybody whom he wants called.

Mr. LODGE. Who is the writer and what is the paper?

Mr. TELLER. It is the Manila Freedom.

Mr. LODGE. Who is the writer?

Mr. TELLER. It is an editorial.

Mr. LODGE. You said it was a writer whom we all knew.

Mr. TELLER. No; that is the other. I am going to produce it later. The Manila Freedom is published in Manila by Mr. O'Brien, the editor. This is a copy. I have verified this by reading the paper. I am not going to stop to read it, but I want to put it in the RECORD, and I wish every Senator would read it.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will read it.

Mr. TELLER. Very well; I will read it. I might as well do so.

Mr. BACON. We may not have time to read it in the RECORD.

Mr. TELLER. I will read it:

[The Manila Freedom, Edward F. O'Brien, editor.]

EDITORIAL.

WEDNESDAY, December 18, 1901.

Nothing can be accomplished in the Philippines until force has defeated permanently the enemy. It is useless to fool ourselves. We have tried civil government; we have placed prominent Filipinos in high places; we have prated of Americanism and progress, and with what result? Batangas, Samar, Tayabas, Laguna—and the list might be extended to cover the entire archipelago—all show the results. There is as much insurrection fomenting here as there was three years ago, and there will be as much three years from now.

There is only one remedy. The military must be supreme—must be given absolute control of the situation. There must be an army of at least 75,000 men here, and the desired end will be accomplished sooner with 100,000. The Filipinos must be defeated, absolutely and unconditionally defeated. They must be swept aside at no matter what cost.

Mr. President, it will be at great cost of life, but infinitely greater cost to the honor and reputation of this nation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is that what the writer says?

Mr. TELLER. No; that is my remark.

Reconcentration—the same reconcentration which we deplored in Cuba—must be used. Those who evidence a desire to be peaceful must be gathered in camps or towns and protected by American troops. America, unlike Spain in Cuba, must furnish, if necessary, to these people the means of life when their supplies run out. In return they must be made to assist in the erection of trenches and military works.

I do not think that needs any comment from me.

All source of livelihood—

I ask the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to this:

All source of livelihood must be cut off from the enemy in the field. The Navy must furnish sufficient vessels to patrol the island and prevent filibustering, for we are blind when we deny that the enemy is receiving encouragement from the exterior.

Americans must occupy the positions of responsibility. There are places for but few Filipinos in the government until all armed resistance is put down once for all.

That is undoubtedly true. There does not seem to be much place for them.

The results of a policy of this sort must be severe. Thousands of lives will pay the forfeit, but it is the only way to accomplish the desired end. The captures or death of Lukban and Malvar will not end the insurrection—no more than the capture of a hundred others has ended it. For every leader who falls there are a dozen ready to fill his shoes.

Mr. TILLMAN. What is the date of that?

Mr. TELLER. The 18th of December, 1901.

Mr. TILLMAN. About forty days ago.

Mr. TELLER. The article continues:

The time has come when the matter must be viewed from the front. We have fooled ourselves, and we have made ourselves the dupes of those whom we have trusted. The money we pay, supposedly for peace, is going to strengthen insurrection. It is time to admit that we have made a grand mistake and undo the skein we have tangled. We must go back to the crossroads and take the other path.

They tell us that capital will conquer the islands. But when is capital coming? Will it come when it is as much as life itself is worth to go through the islands without a bodyguard? The answer is "No!" Capital will come to these islands only when peace reigns, and according to our present procedure we will never have peace.

We are only fostering a spirit which will eventually defeat us. This may not come about through force of arms, but it is bound to come about through the taxpayers of the United States who will refuse to sanction an unending and eminently costly warfare.

Let us have peace, and as a sure means to peace let us have warfare unconditional, and warfare in the sense in which warfare is really meant.

Mr. President, the writer undoubtedly speaks the sentiment of the American army there, for if he did not he would have been treated as was the citizen of Minnesota last year who criticised a public officer and was deported at once and his press practically destroyed; and although he was a citizen of one of the States of this Union, of high character, there has been no protest on this floor save that made by myself, a citizen of another State.

I want to call attention to this concentration. I do not believe it has been carried on with the cruelty with which it was carried on in Cuba, and I doubt very much whether it has been carried on with the cruelty with which it has been carried on in South Africa. This writer I speak of, Mr. Bonsal, declares it has not been carried on with extreme cruelty, and I am glad to have somebody say so, for if there is a blot upon humanity anywhere it is the blot upon Spain for her conduct in Cuba and on Great Britain for her treatment of the concentrados in South Africa in the twentieth century. It is a crime that would shame the Dark Ages, and I felt, when I saw that we had gone into it, that we were publicly disgraced, whether it was a peaceful concentration or any other. I quote from the message of the late President McKinley:

The cruel policy of concentration was initiated—

In Cuba—

The cruel policy of concentration was initiated February 16, 1896. The productive districts controlled by the Spanish armies were depopulated.

The agricultural inhabitants were herded in and about the garrison towns, their lands laid waste, and their dwellings destroyed. This policy the late cabinet of Spain justified as a necessary measure of war and as a means of cutting off supplies from the insurgents. It has utterly failed as a war measure. It was not civilized warfare. It was extermination.

Against this abuse of the right of war I have felt constrained on repeated occasions to enter the firm and earnest protest of this Government.

That concentration has been practiced in the Philippines nobody will deny it. That it may not have extended to the cruelty of Cuba or the cruelty of South Africa is probably true. I hope it is. But it has been practiced, and the papers have been full of the feats of our army burning towns and burning property, and the declaration has been made over there that it was the policy to starve out the people and compel them to submit to our rule.

Mr. President, there is a letter in the city of Washington which can be produced—I have not seen it, but I hear of it from those who are reliable—reciting that some American officers, with the feeling that any American ought to have, were criticising the concentration, when one of them said, "if this thing continues, I am going to apologize to Weyler;" and another one said, "the time has come when I am ready to apologize to him now."

Mr. FORAKER. May I ask the Senator to repeat his statement. I did not hear the first part of it. Who made that statement?

Mr. TELLER. It was written here by an officer.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is his name?

Mr. TELLER. I would not give it if I had it, and I have not got it. I know very well it is not safe for any Army officer, and so do they, to write anything of that kind.

Mr. FORAKER. What I wanted to understand, without waiting to consult the RECORD in the morning, was whether the Senator had stated that an officer in the Army now engaged in service in the Philippines had made that kind of a statement.

Mr. TELLER. I stated that I had been informed, upon what I regard as perfectly proper and reliable authority, that an officer writing a private letter here had stated what occurred in a conversation between other officers and himself.

Mr. President, let that go. Suppose it is not true. Do you believe you can concentrate the people of any community anywhere away from their homes for the purpose of preventing them from raising food and taking it where they can supply the insurrectionists, as they are called, or where it can be taken by them, without there being extreme cruelty and wickedness? You know you can not, and so does everybody else.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I direct it to the chairman of the committee and to the other members on that side of the Chamber. A resolution was introduced by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] some days ago asking for the appointment of a committee to examine, or that the Philippine Committee be instructed to examine, into the conduct of the war. I notice that the chairman of the Philippines Committee yesterday introduced a resolution which did not embrace that feature.

Mr. LODGE. The resolution I introduced was more sweeping. It embraced everything connected with affairs in the Philippines.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then we are to understand that the chairman of the committee will report back his resolution by which we can get at the facts of this business?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator does not follow what happens in the Senate. The resolution was passed this morning.

Mr. TILLMAN. A Senator can not always keep up with things of that kind, but I generally keep within hearing of what is going on. If it is passed and the Senator means under it to have these officers and these witnesses either come here or have the committee go there, then I am satisfied. That is all I want to know.

Mr. LODGE. The committee means to have everybody before it—everybody who will put a name to his statement.

Mr. TELLER. To do that the Senator must——

Mr. LODGE. To anonymous communications, repeated on hearsay, we shall give very little attention. Witnesses, names, places, dates, participants we will investigate to the bottom.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will call for some of the soldiers over there, he will find out some things that he has not heard.

Mr. LODGE. Send in the names.

Mr. TELLER. Or if he will do the other thing, if he will see that the censorship over the press there is taken off, he will get some news that has been kept from the American people for the last three years.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON in the chair). Will the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know to whom to yield.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment? I will not long interrupt him, but I happen to hold in my hand an article which I cut out of this morning's paper, to which I wish to call the Senator's attention in this connection. He has spoken of the censorship of the press in the Philippine Islands, and he has also spoken of our attempt to rival Weyler in the establishment of concentration camps. What I refer to is an interview published only this morning with Judge Taft, who is fresh from the Philippines. He speaks on both of those points. He denies that there is any censorship of the press in the Philippines. I will not stop to read it, unless the Senate so desires, but I will ask that it be printed in full in the RECORD. He says there was a time when the military necessity was such that a censorship was maintained, but that for a long time past there has been no censorship of the press; no censorship of dispatches in the Philippines.

Then in regard to the matter of concentration I want to speak just a little bit explicitly.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator can put that interview anywhere else in the RECORD that he wants to.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will bear with me, I will not unduly trespass on his time or his remarks or his place in the RECORD. If there is anything more barbarous than another in modern times in connection with warfare it was the concentration policy practiced by Weyler in Cuba, and to say that we have inaugurated any such policy in the Philippines is to state a most serious fact and to make a most serious charge. I do not understand that any such thing has been done. Here is what Judge Taft says about it, if the Senator will allow me to read it:

"As a matter of fact," he said, "the embers of distrust are being kept alive by sensationalists, who seize on every petty point and seek to twist it into some horrible barbarity of our Government in the islands. Take, for instance, the talk about concentration camps. Although I am not sufficiently well acquainted with the full military plans to speak with absolute authority, I can say that the whole subject is much misunderstood by our people.

"As a matter of fact there has never been any thought of establishing 'concentration camps' in the ordinary acceptation of the term. All that has been proposed is an insurgent cordon, the establishment of a dead line, into which will gradually be drawn all the remnants of insurrection that exist."

Then he goes on further, the upshot of it all being that there is no starvation whatever, such as characterized the concentration practices of Weyler, but ample provision is made for the care of and to relieve the suffering, if there be any suffering, of all who are brought within the concentration limits. It is simply a military necessity which is resorted to there, as it is resorted to in all civilized warfare where such conditions exist. It is not carried on in an unmerciful way, and certainly there is no result of starvation and nothing that resembles the concentration camps as complained of in Cuba.

Mr. TELLER. That is an admission that there is concentration.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask, if the Senator from Colorado will not object, that this interview may be printed in the RECORD after his remarks.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; I do not like to have it put in the middle of mine, though I do not care where you put it. Put it in, as I do not want to do an injustice to anybody.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that it may be put in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The interview referred to is as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., January 26.

William H. Taft, civil governor of the Philippine Islands, arrived in Chicago this afternoon from San Francisco. He was met at the depot by President S. M. Felton, of the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company, and went at once to Mr. Felton's residence, where he spent the day.

"The only answer I have to make to the ideas of individual observers, which declare the true condition in the Philippines has been concealed, or that we are hugging delusions of peace that can never be brought about, is that the Government is concealing nothing, and that its conclusions are not based on wild theories, but substantial facts."

This was the reply Governor Taft made to a statement published by Stephen Bonsal, declaring that desperate opposition was still being encountered in the field and that the natives are irreconcilable and better organized than before the capture of Aguinaldo.

Governor Taft said that, although there was a time when, for military reasons, it had not been advisable to make public everything occurring in the Philippines, the necessity for such secrecy is over, and that no effort is now being made to conceal any part of the truth from the people of this country.

"The noncombatants on the islands have never, even at the hardest period of the war, received anything but the utmost kindness and consideration at our hands, and it is hardly probable that this policy will be reversed now that the opposition is fast drawing to a close."

The governor believes that the only existing opposition to the authority of the United States is being fomented by the men who form the Hongkong junta, most of whom were formerly residents of the rich coffee-growing province of Batangas.

"It is in this province," he went on, "that we are now meeting with our only difficulty. My statements concerning the close of the rebellion are not 'optimistic' in the sense that they are overdrawn. They are based on nothing but plain facts.

"The natives are rapidly developing an affection for our institutions, and a large number of former insurgents have become valuable members of the community, fully worthy of any trust that may be reposed in them. The coming elections will develop the real progress in this direction, and I am certain that the result will be gratifying.

"The restrictions placed on the privilege of ballot are principally of an educational character, a fact that will of course cut out numbers of Filipinos. But this is a condition that will be bettered rapidly. The progress of education is satisfactory, and our policy in this direction is liberal.

"No obstacle of any character is put in the way of the parish schools; indeed, it is now generally understood throughout the islands that the government will eargerly welcome the establishment of additional institutions of this character, as long as they conform to the educational standard demanded in our public schools and instruct pupils in the English language. It is utterly immaterial to us what the character of the school is; all factors that will aid in the work of education are welcomed."

Governor Taft refuses to discuss the future of Aguinaldo. He says that the deposed leader's fate is in the hands of the military branch of the service entirely, and that the civil arm has the responsibility of neither his custody nor his behavior.

Mr. TELLER. The papers have been full of statements that this officer or the other has been destroying food products and burning houses for the purpose of compelling the people to get where they could be watched, and later, if it is necessary, I can produce them. I do not believe that any of the officers will deny that they have attempted concentration of these people. I have not charged that they practice the cruelties which Spain did. I do not think they could or would, and, as I said, Mr. Bonsal says they did not. I gave them the benefit of that when I first spoke of it.

Mr. President, I have myself no desire to say anything about these people that is not true. The American officers over there are gentlemen. Most of them are there under the command of officers who are their superiors, and they obey.

I desire to say a word or two about the censorship of the press. I have not seen that article. There may not now be any censorship of the press, but I understand that the Associated Press people still believe there is a censorship of the press. Last year, on January 11 and 15——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It was stated here yesterday, under the guise of a discussion of this bill, that there was a censorship existing at Manila and throughout the Philippines, and a discussion of the general policy of censorship was entered into under the guise of discussing an emergency tariff bill. It was then stated by the Senator from Wisconsin, who gave his authority as myself, that there was nothing of the kind there.

It has been stated now upon this floor, in the answer to what the Senator has said, from Judge Taft, that there is nothing of the kind there. In the flattest and broadest way and from personal observation I can state to the Senator that there is nothing of the kind there. I am acquainted with the Associated Press representative at that point. I have met him many times, and he never said anything of the kind to me. From personal observation, from talks with commanding officers, with governors of islands, with the chief of the insular division in the War Department here, I know that not to be the case; and why the Senator persists, in the discussion of an emergency tariff bill, in discussing a censorship which does not exist is not clear, Mr. President.

Mr. TELLER. The course of a Senator who asks permission to ask me a question and then proceeds to lecture me is such that I leave it without any further remark.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not ask the Senator to permit a question.

Mr. TELLER. I allowed the Senator——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to say in this connection——

Mr. TELLER. I have the floor. I allowed the Senator from Indiana, as I always do, to ask a question.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; to make a correction.

Mr. TELLER. And he proceeds to charge me with misrepresenting.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not at all. I beg to say that I did not charge the Senator with misrepresenting. I did not ask the Senator for permission to ask a question, but I asked his permission, in the ordinary and courteous way, to make a statement.

Mr. TELLER. But you did not stop at that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did make a statement refuting the fact that the Senator had charged, after the explanation had been read by the Senator from Ohio, that there was no censorship there, as I understood it.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly, and——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And I was proceeding to discuss it when it seemed to have been sufficiently refuted in the plainest and most unequivocal terms. There was no intention on my part to lecture the Senator nor any other Senator, and there never is. But it is the intention on my part, Mr. President, as it will be the intention of other Senators upon this side, to correct a misstatement which is persisted in after having been denied.

Mr. TELLER. It is possible that the Senator did not intend any discourtesy.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator knows that I did not.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I will drop the matter.

Now, Mr. President, a few words about this censorship of the press. Last year there was read in the Senate the testimony of a Mr. Collins, that no man ever questioned here, who detailed the particulars of the censorship of the press, and nobody has ever denied it, and it has existed, Judge Taft says. I believe it exists to-day. I believe Judge Taft means to tell the truth about it, but I do not believe that he has been properly informed.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to call his attention to exactly what Judge Taft says?

Mr. TELLER. I will.

Mr. HOAR. Judge Taft does not say whether there is a censorship of the press at all. I suppose what he refers to in this interview is the dispatches, and in regard to that he does not deny a censorship, whatever he may have said elsewhere. What he says here is this:

Although there was a time when, for military reasons, it had not been advisable to make public everything occurring in the Philippines, the necessity for such secrecy is over, and no effort is now being made to conceal any part of the truth from the people of this country.

There is no statement here whether there is a censorship, and I am sure that is all. He passes to another point. There is no statement here as to whether the authorities there prevent things from being sent to this country that they do not admit to be true, and there is no statement as to whether there is any censorship of the press in the Philippine Islands.

I may state in this connection that I have myself, though discussing this matter pretty warmly, never made any complaint or discussion in regard to this subject of the censorship. I do not know enough about it to warrant me in saying whether there has been one or is one. That is one of the inquiries my colleague's committee will probably make, among other things. I rose only to call attention to what Judge Taft says.

Mr. LODGE. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from Colorado, but as my colleague has referred to me, I will say that I have made the inquiry. I stated on this floor yesterday that I had authority of the highest, as I supposed, from the War Department that there was no censorship now; that the military censorship had been removed; that there was no censorship on the press. I made that statement yesterday, and I think I made it on Thursday. I make it now. The statement will be made that there is a military censorship there, and it will be no earthly use for me to say that there is not.

Mr. HOAR. I did not reflect at all on my colleague in what I said.

Mr. LODGE. No; I said my colleague referred to me as making an inquiry into it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I think it is due to me to take a moment in answer to the interpretation put on this language by the Senator from Massachusetts and to save the time of the Senate. I did not stop to read that part.

Mr. HOAR. I have read it all.

Mr. FORAKER. I was putting it in reference more particularly to the other matter spoken of.

Mr. HOAR. I read it all. The Senator has read it in full, and he has reached the conclusion in respect to it that he has announced. But I want to say, with all due deference to his interpretation of Judge Taft's language, that I adhere to the statement I made a while ago.

Mr. FORAKER. He says there was a time when there was a censorship, but now there is no attempt at concealment or withholding news.

Mr. HOAR. He says there was a time when the military authorities did not deem it necessary or expedient to have the truth known, which I think is very likely, and that there is now no attempt to prevent the truth from being known to the people of this country, but he does not say whether there is a censorship of the press or whether the authorities allow things to come that they do not admit to be true.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator from Colorado will bear with me for just a moment, I want to say, by way of finishing what was in my mind, that, I think, this bears no interpretation except only that which I put upon it, namely, that there was a time, as stated by Judge Taft, when there was a censorship, when there was a withholding of a part of the news on account of military necessity, or supposed necessity, but that now there is no attempt at anything of that kind; in other words, there is no authority for it; there is no censorship of the press.

I submit that that is the only interpretation which can be fairly put upon that language, unless we should draw the conclusion that Judge Taft was trying to speak in some evasive or mysterious or misleading way.

I thank the Senator from Colorado for yielding to me.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say to the junior Senator from Massachusetts that I was not present when he made his statement yesterday or on Thursday, nor did I hear anybody else deny the censorship of the press. I supposed that it was kept up, and I believe that now you will find it is kept up. At all events, Mr. President, it is quite apparent that there was a time when there was censorship, because here is the testimony, which I can read, of a respectable correspondent of the press, who says that he himself had his dispatches cut up and words put in that he had not put in. That statement is on record in the Senate, and it has been here for more than a year. Neither the Senator from Indiana nor anybody else ever denied his statements or questioned them in the slightest degree.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There was a censorship there. There is none now. That is the statement.

Mr. TELLER. Yesterday we had a debate here upon a question concerning General Wheaton's interview, and Senators here stood up and questioned it. Mr. President, there was not a Senator on the other side of the Chamber who did not know that that interview was true.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator has no right to say that.

Mr. LODGE. That is a deliberate charge that Senators stood on this floor and said what they knew was not true.

Mr. TELLER. I will change it.

Mr. LODGE. I call the Senator to order for saying such a thing.

Mr. TELLER. I will say there was not a Senator on the other side but who ought to have known it and would have known it if he had tried. Mr. President, I do not intend to be bullied or to be bullyragged by anybody.

Mr. LODGE. And I do not propose to have a Senator get up here and impugn anyone's truth on the floor.

Mr. TELLER. We have just had that very thing on your side, and you did not get very indignant over it.

Mr. LODGE. Because he did not do it, in my judgment.

Mr. TELLER. I thought otherwise.

Mr. LODGE. He addressed the Senator with a courtesy which might well be imitated here by others.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I will try and take care of myself on these questions. I tell the truth, and I mean to tell it, of things I know. I challenge the Senator to get up his investigation and let us have a fair swing at it. Now, I know how it will be done, Mr. President. I want him to call on men to come here who are not afraid to come and testify—the volunteer officers, who are not afraid of the strong hand of the Administration being put upon them, and that they shall be denied the promotion that they are entitled to if they are not in accord with the sentiment of the War Department.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Colorado, before he passes from it, state, so that we may distinctly understand it, what is his last statement about the Wheaton telegram?

Mr. TELLER. I say it was a truthful statement of what General Wheaton said.

Mr. FORAKER. Has the Senator any further information in regard to it?

Mr. TELLER. I have evidence satisfactory to me. If that is not satisfactory, call your witnesses and find out the truth.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask not in a controversial way, but for information. I judge from the remark the Senator has made that he must have additional information beyond what he had yesterday. Is that true or not?

Mr. TELLER. I had it yesterday. I was just as confident of it then as I am now.

Mr. FORAKER. Has the Senator obtained any information since yesterday?

Mr. TELLER. No, I have not. I have what I stated yesterday.

Mr. FORAKER. So I understand all the information the Senator has is the telegram appearing in the papers as quoted in the Senate yesterday.

Mr. TELLER. I did not say any such thing. The Senator need not put any words in my mouth. I said I had satisfactory evidence to my mind that that was a correct statement. That is enough for me. There is no necessity to go any further. If the Senator wants to find out whether that is true or not, let him call General Wheaton before his committee.

Mr. FORAKER. I think the Senator will agree, if he will stop to think for a moment, that I, in the politest way imaginable, asked him if he had any further information. He has made a statement that every Senator on this side yesterday ought to have known that the dispatch was absolutely true, just as it was published. Now, I inferred from that that when the Senator made the statement he must have had something since yesterday to confirm the truthfulness of that telegram. I saw it in a paper and I attached to it as much importance as I attach to telegrams appearing in the papers, but it was said here yesterday, nobody knew exactly what General Wheaton was commenting on, and I think we are still of that same opinion.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, Mr. President, everybody knew what he was commenting on.

Mr. FORAKER. What I call attention to, if the Senator will allow me a moment, is that the telegram from Manila announced what General Wheaton should have said in criticism of Dr. Schurman, and did not say what it was that Dr. Schurman had said that he was commenting upon.

Mr. TELLER. We knew what Dr. Schurman had said.

Mr. FORAKER. But how do we know?

Mr. TELLER. Dr. Schurman made a speech in Boston.

Mr. FORAKER. How do we know that that was correctly reported in Manila?

Mr. TELLER. Of course we presume it was correctly reported.

Mr. FORAKER. I will state the reason why I call attention to this, if the Senator will bear with me for a moment.

Mr. TELLER. Go on.

Mr. FORAKER. It is not to interrupt him or to be impolite, for I have for the Senator, as he knows, the most profound respect. I have just had an experience with respect to newspaper statements. I think in the main the newspaper men undertake to send what they understand to be the truth, but they sometimes make a mistake. Yesterday General Merritt was criticised for what he should have said in a public speech.

To-day I had the pleasure of submitting here to be read and put in the RECORD his emphatic denial of ever having made any such statement. Now, how do we know that when General Wheaton's attention is called to this it may not elicit a denial such as General Merritt has sent to the Senate to-day? Why I made the inquiry was not to interrupt the Senator, certainly not to give him any offense, but to learn whether General Wheaton has confirmed what was published of him yesterday, as I thought the way the Senator spoke he might be intending to tell us.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I am rather patient about those things. I think, though, that the Senate has fallen into a way that is not very creditable. When a Senator is trying to make a speech everybody else insists on making one at the same time. I do not care to go any further into that, Mr. President.

If General Wheaton made the statement it is said he did, he is just doing what the public press of this country is doing. I have seen in the newspapers of this country a statement that this minority report of the committee was encouraging rebellion. As I said the other day, I have seen speeches of Senators commented upon as encouraging rebellion.

I was complaining yesterday, Mr. President, that this was one of the fruits of an attempt to subjugate a people contrary to American law; that you can not do those things and maintain free speech; that if you undertake to hold a people in subjection who have proper spirit you will have war.

Then when a Senator or anybody else talks about the rights of man it will be inciting to rebellion. Why, Mr. President, we have got where we are afraid, I think. I said yesterday that nobody would dare to read the Declaration of Independence. You can not get a more incendiary speech possibly than the Declaration of Independence and the Bill of Rights.

I said to-day that it was a fundamental principle of international law that the people of a country were the owners of it. In 1859, in this Chamber, a speech was made on the Cuban question. I want to read what a Senator from one of the States said, and I declare now that nobody questioned it then. I do not know whether anybody will question it now. I do not think they would if it was not for the fact that it might in some way reflect upon our conduct in the Philippine Islands.

> The fundamental theory of our Government is that the people of all countries are the true and only owners; that governments are established for their benefit, and whenever governments become subversive of the true ends of their institutions it is their right to alter and abolish them.

You can find that in the Declaration of Independence, but not in the same words. You can find it in every bill of rights that has been published for many years.

> The island of Cuba does not belong to Queen Isabella.

Now, Mr. President, when I get up here and say what I do say, that when we took sovereignty over the Philippine Islands we did not buy the people nor did we buy the right to oppress them, the Senators who are so sensitive about the conditions over there will undoubtedly consider that out of place. I do say it, Mr. President. I say when we took sovereignty there we took it subject to the great underlying American principle that a government there must be a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, and I do say now that there is not and has never been since we went there a government of that character.

Senators talk about a civil government over there. Mr. President, you have an autocracy there that has not its equal under the sun—an absolute government. It has no prototype anywhere except perhaps in Cuba, not even in Turkey, not even in Russia.

And yet we are told in the President's message, and we are told elsewhere, that these people are participating in that so-called self-government over there, as autocratic as it is possible to be made. It is true some man may hold an office; it is true, Mr.

President, that somebody by the favor of the Commission may get pay from our Treasury. There were men in our revolutionary times who were getting pay from the English treasury. Were they participating in the Government of the United States or the government of the people of the States where they lived?

Mr. President, we have got a great way from true principles if because a man gets a stipend for acting as a constable over there in the Philippine Islands he is a participant in the affairs of government. Does he shape it? Does he direct it? Does he have any part in it? Can he object in a legislative way when things do not suit him? If he can not, he does not participate. He must have a voice in the creation of what he likes and in the destruction of those things that he does not like. You have not had for an hour a civil government over there, and you do not propose to have it, in my judgment.

Mr. President, I did not get up to speak on this subject in extenso. I ask now that I may put this newspaper article in the RECORD. I put it in the RECORD because I think the American people, and especially the American Senate, ought to know the truth. I think they ought to know how futile and how useless this effort over there is to destroy this people and compel them to come into subjection to us, and under the lying pretense that we are doing God's service, under the pretense that Providence has put upon us a duty or a burden.

Has the Filipino asked you to say what kind of a government he shall live under? Has he asked you to take taxes out of him without his having a voice in it? Has he asked you to send as rulers over him men who are not responsible to him, who know not the language he speaks, nor the aspiration of his mind? Then, because here and there a worthless creature will take a stipend at our hand can you make the American people believe that you are giving to the Filipino a free government?

Mr. President, I have been led into saying more than I intended, but I am not prepared to make any apology for what I have said. I mean to say more on this subject. I reserve to myself the right of an American Senator to say what I think, and I will not be disturbed by criticisms nor attacks that may be made by anybody. You will hear more of this before you get through, and you will hear it on this bill, which is the proper bill to debate it on. When you get a bill here that shall give to those people any modicum of free government you will find us standing with you; but you can not, under the pretense of an autocracy or an absolutism, get us to support what we know is not a concession to them and is not a participation on their part in the government under which they are to live.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Herald, Sunday, January 26, 1902.]

STEPHEN BONSAL, AFTER THREE MONTHS' CAREFUL STUDY OF THE SITUATION, DECLARES THE PACIFICATION OF THE PROVINCES IS A FICTION—CIVILIANS HAVE SPREAD IDEA IN IGNORANCE—ARMY IS BEING SLOWLY DEMORALIZED, HE SAYS, WHILE THE NATIVES' ORGANIZATION CONTINUES STRONG AND THEIR DETERMINATION DOES NOT WANE.

A calm, dispassionate view of the actual conditions in the Philippines is here presented by Mr. Stephen Bonsal, who spent three months in careful study of the situation. From civilian and from soldier, from officer and from private, from the common native and from the erstwhile head of the republic he has sought light on this great problem, which is perplexing not only the authorities at Washington, but all thoughtful citizens throughout the country.

Optimists have said that peace is already hovering over the Philippines, that the islands are pacified except in a few provinces, and that within a year the United States forces can be reduced to a quarter of their present number.

Pessimists declared that pacification of the Filipinos is only a seeming; that the opposition in the field is still desperate; that enemies lurk within the lines, and that disaster is certain whenever vigilance is relaxed.

Mr. Bonsal takes a view more pessimistic than optimistic. He thinks Governor Taft is honestly mistaken in believing that the end of the insurrection is near. He regards the natives as virtually irreconcilable and as well, if not better, organized than before the capture of Aguinaldo. Even in the much-praised native constabulary, he asserts, there exists a danger akin to that which sprang from the Sepoys of 1857.

Civil and military officials have not been in accord, he declares, and cites several instances in illustration. The Army is slowly being demoralized, according to his view, at the same time that the insurgents are growing in determination. He throws doubt on the final success of American arms and believes a Congressional investigation should be made at once.

PEACE IS STILL FAR FROM ASSURED IN AMERICA'S EASTERN POSSESSIONS—INSURGENTS, MORE DETERMINED AND BETTER ORGANIZED THAN EVER, ARE BITTERLY OPPOSED TO CONTROL OF THEIR DESTINIES BY THE UNITED STATES.

[By Stephen Bonsal.]

Now that Congress is approaching a consideration of the Philippine question, for the first time since our flag was raised over the islands, and now that Judge Taft, the civil governor, has just arrived and brought again, as have, alas! so many of his forerunners, the comforting assurance that the islands are "almost" pacified, it is only fair to present the other side of the picture, the situation as it appeared to me during a three months' journey, in which I visited all the islands and talked with all classes, both natives and foreigners.

Judge Taft preaches the gospel of a government for the people and by the people, and he makes no distinction between Malays and Americans. He seems to think that representative institutions are as well understood and as beneficent in their workings among a people who paint and tattoo to-day as they are for Anglo-Saxons who have been working up from that point of departure for the last two thousand years.

He is ready to rest his government on the consent of the governed, and yet 99 per cent of all Americans, whether civilians or soldiers, in the archipelago are confident that if the civil government was not supported by the rifles of our soldiers its officials would very soon be holding sweet converse with the mermaids, though only on constitutional questions, of course, at the bottom of the deep blue sea.

STATEMENT PURELY PERSONAL.

Judge Taft says that the Filipinos are very much elated at the prospect of becoming attached in some capacity, as an unorganized satellite or territory, to the United States, but he produces not a shred of evidence in support of his statement, which can only be regarded as personal. Consequently it should carry no greater weight than his striking and very sympathetic personality inspires.

Those who know the islands best, and in this list I do not include Judge Taft (his immediate duties have been too unremitting, the time too short to permit him to become thoroughly acquainted with the people), all agree that the American idea has not a single disinterested friend in the whole archipelago. Three months ago we thought we had one. There was a man there, a judge of the highest court, whom all the American officials, from Merritt down to the present day, had delighted to honor.

He shone like a bright, particular star in the firmament where twinkle so many of the native and half-caste officials who are drawing their pay from the United States and paying it into the insurgent treasury. He was our undisputed friend, this justice (no matter about his name). He it was who understood the Anglo-Saxon mind, as General MacArthur said. Perhaps this was true. He understood us and found us "easy."

But he, too, has fallen from his pinnacle and is placed now in the category of those whom we could prosecute and imprison for sedition if it were thought advisable. If we did, everyone would know at home, as they do abroad, especially along the east coast of Asia, that the Philippine Islands are very far from being pacified—that after three years of war the supremacy of our arms is contested.

FALL OF FILIPINO JUSTICE.

The fall of this Filipino justice of a United States Federal court happened in this wise: His nephew and his niece had taken a trip to Hongkong for a change of air. A sea voyage might prove beneficial, the doctor had said, and he asked the official world that the courtesy of the port might be shown them on their return.

An order to this effect was immediately issued by the collector; nothing was too good for the judge. But in some way that is not yet explained this order did not reach the inspector on duty, or, for reasons of his own, he disobeyed the order. The trunks were opened and found to contain 1,800 insurgent badges, 50 Mauser pistols, and an indefinite number of cartridges.

Tableaux! The justice hopped away to the palace and was closeted with the governor for an hour, and then the order came to confiscate the trunk, release the smugglers of contraband of war, and not to say a word, upon pain of dismissal.

For reasons of state or political expediency there has been for the last two years a conspiracy of silence in regard to Philippine conditions. The situation has been painted not as it is, but as we should hope to see it. This period of self-deception is over, or should be. I break no promises or pledges. I describe the situation as I saw it, and surely no one will have the right to complain.

I always protested against being called a "good fellow" of the kind that has been so useful in suppressing the facts and confusing the public mind as to the situation in our trans-Pacific possessions.

OFFICIALS DISCLOSE NOTHING.

When officials are so discreet the private individual feels justified in running risks in an endeavor to present the situation (which is so nearly affecting our prestige and our well-being) to the people who, after all is said and done, will have to pay the piper.

Symptomatic and illustrative is the case of an important member of the civil government who is about to return to the United States on leave. This gentleman is a college man, a lawyer, and former volunteer officer.

I had many talks with him, and was much interested in hearing what he had seen during his three years in the Philippines as commander of troops, and latterly as governor of a province, and I was sorry that a man who talked so intelligently, who evidently based his conclusions upon facts shrewdly observed and astutely weighed, should take such pessimistic views of the situation.

"Every day the conditions are becoming worse," he said. "They are threatening to become chronic. Unless we can let light in from above, unless there is a change of policy very soon, this guerrilla warfare will not end for fifty or one hundred years, and then only when we have 'rubbed out' the present inhabitants of the islands.

"And of course this rubbing-out process will take even more time out here than it did on the plains, because the climate is against us and because the army and police will not have behind them a stalwart frontier population backing them up and taking part in the fight when necessary. Something must be done soon to avoid the possibility of a hundred years' war—it is almost too late now, but yet something might be done."

"What would you suggest?" I asked him.

CIVIL AUTHORITIES VERSUS MILITARY.

"Oh, well, you see that is not my business. It is a very pretty fight as it is between the civil and military authorities, and I should be a fool to get mixed up in it; besides, I have troubles of my own.

"What I will say, and even this must be confidential, is that we are confronted with a situation which, in my opinion, is not to be met with the panacea of the civil commission—which is invariably to open a new bureau, man it with a chief and three or four score of clerks, equip it with swivel chairs and several batteries of typewriters—nor yet by the military recipe which seems to be a coax from the War Department 5,000 more fresh troops and send them hiking through the country for months at a time after an evasive foe, until worn-out and diseased, anæmic and disgusted, they begin to die like flies in a frost, and are put on transports and sent home again, dead or alive, but always, as far as this life is concerned, finished—used up in useless service."

"When you get to Washington," I said, "you will doubtless see the President and the authorities. You will tell them what you have seen as an officer in the field and as an administrator. You have had such exceptional opportunities that your testimony will have especial weight attached to it."

"When I get off the steamer," answered the discreet official, "the very first thing I do is to purchase a padlock. I will clap that on my mouth and throw the key down the deepest well I can find. No; it is a very pretty fight as it is, and I am not looking for more trouble."

Undoubtedly the cautious, if unpatriotic, behavior of this official is typical of the conduct of many other officials, military as well as civil, in the islands. They talk very freely and frankly about the situation among themselves, but seem averse to allowing any of the information which they possess to pass the Pacific. The excuse for this trans-Pacific reticence, generally given me when I pressed for explanation, is that the poor narrow-minded folk at home are so apt to misunderstand that it is better to say nothing.

ON RETURNING TRANSPORT.

One of the most amusing scenes in the human comedy which I have witnessed since I began to go behind the scenes takes place when in due process of time, and despite four or five captains apiece, an American transport arrives at San Francisco from Manila.

All the revelations of the voyage are over, and when the representatives of the press come on board a veil is drawn over everything unpleasant. The crippled soldiers must keep out of sight, the metallic boxes are covered with tarpaulins, and the consumptives are admonished by the hospital stewards to "shut up their barking." An era of good feeling is inaugurated which almost bridges the chasm between the civil and military factions.

All agree that everything is over except the shouting. Only when the local press representatives become precise and ask for whom they should shout longest and loudest do the voices become at all discordant. Some say, "Old Wheaton;" others are for Funston, "the only general the soldiers can not keep up with." And then there are praises for Merritt, who first sized up the situation; for Otis, who crushed the rebellion; for MacArthur, who pacified the Philippines, and for "Old Chaffee," for whom there is really nothing left to do, but who does it so well.

Patted on the back, pleased with themselves and all the world, the press representatives are being escorted over the side when the captain-quartermaster appears. He was a dentist three years ago, but now his duties are both military and naval.

You can see him any clear day on the bridge, and any smooth day, when the ports are open and you can breathe, he ventures for thirty seconds at a time into the dormitories of the men down below and says how sweet and clean they are.

"You know, boys, how I hate newspaper notoriety," he begins. "Still, I think the time has come when something ought to be said about the transport service. Why, only last month we wrecked seven of our ships without losing a single man. Now, tell me, boys, what other transport service in the world, or commercial line, for that matter, can point to such a record?"

And the press representatives, speechless, go over the side promising the desired paragraph. Then the consumptives resume their coughing. And I am impressed with the fact that in a sense Lincoln was wrong—you can fool all the people all the time, especially when they take no interest in the subject under consideration, as is unhappily the case with the Philippine question.

VISIT TO AGUINALDO.

I went to see Aguinaldo the day before I left Manila, moved thereto by a lurid picture of the insurgent leader with which a California Representative in Congress had favored his home paper. He denounced the prisoner as the most revolting looking monster in human shape known to history. Cruelty, rapacity, a cold, calculating bloodthirstiness were all mirrored upon his countenance as they never have been mirrored since the days of the Borgias, according to the California Representative.

I was naturally somewhat disappointed when a spruce, dapper little man, clad in patent-leather pumps and immaculate white clothes, came tripping into the reception room and asked me to be seated. The California Representative says that the former dictator "can not speak Spanish, even." I am afraid he must have interviewed the prisoner's muchacho.

Aguinaldo, as I found, speaks Spanish, as very few people in the islands do, with literary correctness, and in his conversation he gave further evidence of culture and wide reading. How he obtained these advantages it would be difficult to say, but that he has them there can be no doubt.

The brothers of the Jesuit College in Manila, San Juan de Letran, told me that he studied with them only a year and did not leave a very good record for scholarship. On the other hand, Lucban, who rules Samar for the insurgents, studied eight years at the Jesuit Ateneo, and when he graduated did so with all the honors.

Aguinaldo began his remarks by saying that he did not care to discuss politics. He added, "Everything is so confused at present I would prefer to wait." He asked me about various wars that I have witnessed, and I mentioned that none of the wars I knew about had ever settled any of the questions by which they were caused. I praised the forum, but not the tented field.

THE LITTLE MAN AROUSED.

The little man, with his stiff hair and brosse and his dreamy, melancholy eyes, sat listening for a long time. Then suddenly he sprang to his feet.

"Ah," he cried; "what you say is true, too true. There is no right in this world, only might. It is the fault of the most powerful that no questions are settled. The weak have no rights that the powerful are bound to respect."

I hardly knew him as he gave way to this irrepressible paroxysm. He seemed a different man, but I understood all at once his power, how he gained and how he kept it, in spite of his lowly origin and poor schooling, by his own personal magnetism. Then all at once his whole appearance underwent another change, his voice grew soft and pleading.

"You will forgive me," he said. "We are not talking politics, that was agreed, and of course my corazonada (cry of the heart) had no reference to the relations between our two countries. Only I have been reading history much, very much, since I was brought to Manila, and modern history is so like ancient history, and it seems to me all so sad."

SITUATION IN SAMAR.

The situation in Samar has attracted much attention in the islands and here because of the terrible massacre at Balangiga.

General Taft, when I visited him in the hospital at Manila, showed some natural indignation that American papers, many of them so ill informed of the situation and not a few only too much inclined to take no interest in the problem except to make party capital out of it, should advance the argument that civil government was a failure and that persons are unsafe in Manila because of the massacre at Balangiga.

This is quite unfair and not to the point. To begin with, Samar has never been under civil government either during the Spanish or the American régime, and I can not imagine its being ripe for its benefactions for many years to come, if ever. Again, Samar, or rather Balangiga, is 500 miles from Manila.

Still, these ferocious outbreaks are by no means local or peculiar to this province. Samar I am willing, for the sake of argument, to put quite on one side, but there are hundreds of incidents occurring every month in the provinces for which an unrestricted and unsupported civil government is asked by the Commission which can not be so easily explained away.

If the Filipinos are reconciled to American rule and appreciate the advantages we are giving them, why should the villagers of Tay Tay have buried alive, in the presence of the village elders and selectmen and with the blessing of the village priest, four of their number whose only fault was that they had rallied to the American cause to the extent of accepting 50 cents (Mexican) a day in return for their labor?

Now, Tay Tay is not very remote. Governor Taft must know that almost any clear day he could, if he would, see the unsavory spot or the hills behind it from the cupola of his palace in Manila.

WAGON TRAINS ATTACKED.

Again, if armed resistance is over and there are only a few ladrones here and there, how is that our wagon trains, heavily escorted by twenty or thirty men, are so often attacked and sometimes captured almost in sight of Manila?

To cite but one instance of this, the one freshest in my memory, could a few ladrones have attacked a wagon train and killing, capturing, or putting to flight the entire detachment of the Eighth Infantry that was performing escort duty, make off with the wagons and arms, as happened in Maddalena, 25 miles from Manila, early in December?

Such attacks are of weekly occurrence all through the Batangas country, though they are not often so successful. I have no means of knowing what Judge Taft's information is on the subject, but in my trip through Batangas Province I met and talked with many of the soldiers and teamsters, who on various occasions had been bushwhacked in this way.

They were of the impression that these attacks were made by well-equipped detachments of Malvar's evasive army, which at the most conservative estimate comprises 3,000 riflemen and as many bolomen in the Batangas country alone.

To my mind the whole archipelago presents itself as a volcano, of which Samar and Batangas are the active craters. Should we close them up it is quite certain that the forces of savagery and slaughter would find vent elsewhere.

WITH RELIEF EXPEDITION.

I reached Samar with the first relief expedition, which was dispatched thither under General Smith as soon as the news of the massacre reached Manila. Before our arrival a swift gunboat had informed the garrisons of what had taken place, and warned them against possible attacks which might be made in the exultation of victory and with the rifles and ammunition that were the spoils of Balangiga.

As usual in the Philippines, everything, including a series of typhoons, conspired to make the dispatch of troops impossible or tardy. It was a month before the garrisons scattered along the seashore and the rivers of Samar were reenforced, though General Smith, with the first available troops, reached Catbalogan, the capital and military headquarters of the island, within ten days of the disaster.

General Smith, in order to have his knowledge first hand and to report upon the situation, while troops were being got together, visited each and every one of the 31 posts held by the men of the Ninth and First infantry, garrisoning the island. I traveled with General Smith for ten days, and during this time we visited about a dozen posts.

The conditions revealed by these visits were shocking. I do not know where the facts were suppressed, whether at the headquarters of the department in Iloilo or in Manila, but they were suppressed somewhere, and whoever did it certainly shares with the savages of Samar the blame of the Balangiga massacre. Incidentally may I ask why should not the reports of General Smith on what he found and saw on reaching Samar be placed before Congress and the people? Such a state of affairs could not possibly be suppressed in Russia or Germany, though one is tempted to believe that they can be in the United States.

MORE KILLED BY BOLOMEN.

In the worst plight of all was the garrison of Pambouhan, on the Pacific coast of Samar, which consisted of 40 men under a first and second lieutenant. In July the commanding officer, Lieutenant Downs, was ordered by General Hughes to find his way to Balangiga and to open land communications between the two posts.

Downs found no trail of any kind, but plenty of savages. He was constantly fighting and could make but little progress. On the third day he gave up the attempt and was returning when the bolomen made a rush with their crooked knives, an onslaught which it would seem the small Krag bullet can not stop, and before they were beaten back Downs and four of his men were killed.

The survivors of the little party, carrying their wounded and followed and hacked at by their dogged pursuers, made their way back to Pambouhan, where they found that the rest of the company, 15 men, were closely besieged.

They beat their way in, and from that day in July until we visited them in October the siege had continued. Hardly a day had passed without an attack. It had proved impossible to hold the town, so the men had moved out into the open, dug a trench, and built a stockade, and here they had stood the siege.

What they had endured we got some idea from their haggard faces, long beards, and unshod feet. Apparently no one in Iloilo or Manila knew what was going on and that our men and flag were in a position absolutely incompatible with the dignity of our arms.

For four months the people of Samar had had before them an object lesson of how little formidable was the American army in their province, how few and isolated and deserted the little garrisons were. Small wonder they should have concluded that with one more attack the invaders could be driven into the sea.

GUNBOAT TO THE RESCUE.

There was a lull one day and a concentration of the savages. Something was evidently brewing, when in the very nick of time Lieutenant Shoemaker, commanding the cranky little gunboat Aryat, a capture from the Spaniards, providentially turned up.

After taking in the situation and consulting with the leaguered garrison, Shoemaker, under cover of night, landed a field piece and all the men he could spare and joined his fortunes and his forces with the worn-out men of the First Infantry.

It was a warm reception the savages met when on the very next morning they came dashing up to the stockade with triumphant shouts and cries. When all the enemy were done for Shoemaker continued his beneficent cruise, leaving the precious field piece behind him.

"And he never asked us for nothing," said one of the doughboys. "Only, he said, if you have any old campaign hats you can spare, let me have them." They come in so handy for stopping leaks."

We shall hear again of these young beardless captains—Shoemaker, Yates, Sterling, MacCarthy, and a dozen others, who sail the treacherous, uncharted seas of the archipelago in their cranky little craft. The admiral can get them to do anything except come to Cavite, where they are afraid their beloved boats, upon which nothing could induce me to "ride," as the soldiers say, not even in Central Park duck pond, would be condemned and dismantled.

It is useless to generalize upon what I saw in the posts I visited. In each one the circumstances were a little different, but in none were our men in a position to inspire savages with a high regard for our military force or heighten the prestige of our arms.

FIRING UPON CATBALOGAN.

Two days before we reached Catbalogan, the capital, the insurgents fired several volleys from a hill commanding the town, breaking nearly all the windows and killing a little Spanish child at play under our flag pole.

In the military headquarters it was forbidden to keep lights burning on the side of the building facing the interior, as whenever this had been done the light had attracted fire and there had been casualties.

Since I left Samar the marines whom Admiral Rodgers placed at General Chaffee's disposal to make up the quota of troops necessary to maintain our position there have made many gallant hikes and added the storming of Sorsagon, up a precipice 200 feet high, to the record of the corps, which will never be complete without mention of Major Waller, of Alexandria and Pekin fame; of Captain Porter, "a chip of the old block," and of Sergeant Quigg, whose gallantry at Guantanamo Stephen Crane immortalized, and who are all with the marines in southern Samar.

But despite the excellent dispositions General Smith has made, and his tireless and reckless activity in the field, I do not expect to hear of complete military success in Samar very soon, and as for turning the people there from their savage ways and teaching them the virtues of peace and civil government, that is a question of a generation or two, or even three.

POLICY OF CONCENTRATION.

While in the Philippines I thought this policy of concentration was merely the flippant view of the cynical newspaper paragraphers. On my return, however, I find that many believe that the United States Government is enforcing in the Philippines a policy of concentration which is on all fours with the diabolical scheme of extermination by which General Weyler reduced the noncombatant population of Cuba by several hundred thousand.

It seems curious that such a misconception should arise. The facts about the Weyler scheme form a dark chapter of history which can not be disputed. By him thousands of people were driven into huge corrals, 14 of which I visited for the Herald during that period when the mortality among the penned-up prisoners was greatest.

His plan was to pen the noncombatants—men, women, and children—in unsanitary places, not to permit them to bring food into their appointed pen or to allow food to be given them; finally, to force them to attempt escape from starvation and disease, and then shoot them down.

The facts of the so-called system of concentration in the Philippines, or rather in small sections of some of the provinces which came under my observation, differ from this picture as strikingly as day does from night.

ON THE ISLAND OF MARINDUQUE.

Maj. Frederick Smith, now inspector-general of the Department of the Southern Philippines, was placed last summer in command of the small and beautiful but hitherto refractory island of Marinduque, just south of Luzon. The population of this garden spot is not over 10,000, and the inhabitants, principally of Tagal stock, are remarkable for their education, industry, and wealth.

Shortly before Major Smith took this command the insurgents in the little island had obtained one of the most signal and least costly victories that they have scored during the war. I refer to the surrender of the survivors of Captain Shields's company, belonging to one of the volunteer regiments.

In consequence the insurgents of Marinduque were highly elated and asked nothing better, so they said, than that the "Americanos" should come on. For several weeks Smith contented himself with having a cordon of gunboats drawn about the island, which, in this fortunate instance, owing to the nature and extent of the surrounding water, was easily possible.

Then he began to put into operation the usual plan of heart-breaking hikes on the trail of an elusive enemy. Major Smith, however, being an able officer, soon saw that he could not bring his little war to an end by any number of rear-guard engagements, from which the enemy would always escape and scatter. He consequently called a halt to all active operations, and allowed himself time to think, which often brings good results, even if you are in the field.

It soon became clear to him that by this process of wearing out the insurgents, 10,000 at least of our men would be used up before the insurgents came to the end of their tether. And Smith had the best of reasons for knowing that not only could the commanding general not give him more than the 600 or 700 men he then had, but that in two or three months these would have to be withdrawn for service elsewhere.

EVERY VILLAGE A SUPPLY DEPOT.

During the period of active operations Major Smith saw that every village and every ranch in the island was a commissary store and supply station for the furtive insurgent bands. They did not have to bother about their trains of supplies. They could always find what they wanted, and we never could.

Of course the inhabitants protested that these supplies were not given willingly, but levied by force, and if the "Americanos" would only protect them by garrisoning every hamlet and guarding every ranch it would never occur again.

Major Smith could not do this, but he hit upon a better plan. He ordered the concentration of all the inhabitants of the interior into the several seashore towns, which he permanently garrisoned. Those of the noncombatants who were without means were given free transportation in bullock carts for themselves and their effects to the appointed station.

They were made to bring all the food they had, but those who were without provisions were assured of support during the time of their enforced residence on the coast. Having accumulated enough rice and other necessaries to support his noncombatant prisoners for several months Major Smith divided his little force in three columns.

One was detailed to guard the concentration camps and the other two began a relentless pursuit of the insurgent bands skulking in their mountain fastnesses or jungle depths.

Now, after the goats had been separated from the sheep, there could be no mistake as to which houses and which supplies belonged to the insurgents and which to the noncombatants. All the former were destroyed. Even the little patches of growing crops here and there discovered, and the nutritious roots were all dug up.

SUCCESS OF CONCENTRATION.

In ten weeks the desired result was achieved—all the insurgents threw up the sponge and surrendered, and immediately the concentration camps were dissolved. Peace returned and not a hostile shot has been fired on the island since. The plan was a triumph of common sense and of true humanity.

To compare such a policy as this to that of Weyler is an absurdity. The combatants suffered as they should, only in this exceptional instance it was the Tagal warriors who suffered and not the Americans, and the noncombatants merely suffered some temporary inconvenience.

The sanitary reports from these camps, signed by both the native and army physicians, show that, owing to the sanitary rules, which are enforced, the health of the prisoners is better and the mortality 50 per cent less than it is on the average when they were living in their own homes.

It is just as absurd to call Major Smith the American Weyler as to compare any judge who may send a prisoner to a model jail with Nana Sahib, who put his prisoners in the black hole of Calcutta.

In Batangas, also, it has been decided to inaugurate this policy; also in part in Laguna, and perhaps in Tayabas—in one word, the whole of Malvar's country, as this section of Luzon is called, and not improperly so, as he has a much more effective control over the country and its inhabitants than have our military and civil authorities, or both combined.

This plan was drawn up, and the necessary orders were issued by General Bell in the middle of December, and since January 1 concentration has begun, and the noncombatants are being brought in to their appointed stations by transportation and under the escort furnished by our military authorities.

The difficulty in the way of success here are certainly tremendous. Malvar's country is inhabited by 2,000,000, all pure Tagals and all Malvar's men. He was the last man to yield in the revolution against Spain and he will be the last to surrender to us.

He fights fair, does not murder prisoners like Lukban, and the American officers have a high opinion of him. They only seek a better acquaintance and at closer range.

Simultaneous with this announcement in regard to concentration another was made which should have been issued long since. It is to the effect that the United States will no longer pay rent for houses to the representatives of men who are out with the insurgents.

It was high time to take this step. For two years Malvar's immediate family have been reaping a golden harvest by renting their houses to the Army.

That this policy was not welcome was shown by the action of the insurgents on the day the new dispositions became known. Every American garrison in Malvar's country, every army post in the two provinces, including the towns of Batangas, Lipa, Santa Tomas, and San Jose, were attacked, or at least fired upon, the same hour and in much the same manner everywhere.

Do facts like these lend any support to those who maintain that the few men still out are simply ladrones, whose only object is booty, who have neither discipline nor leadership? In my opinion, they go to show that the open insurgents, as well as those who are concealed within our lines, pay to their leaders the same obedience as the American soldiers do to General Chaffee.

There is abundant evidence to show that the directing junta, or board of national defense, has the situation as well in hand as did Aguinaldo when he was at liberty. In my opinion, the insurgents are acting more harmoniously now, as no man could exercise the dictatorial powers that Aguinaldo did without making enemies.

THE NATIVE CONSTABULARY.

I do not think a dissenting voice will be raised at the praise which Judge Taft pours upon Major Allen and Captains Baker and Goldsborough, his assistants, who in a few short months have recruited the native constabulary and raised it to its present high state of efficiency.

The rank and file of this force is composed exclusively of Filipinos raised in the immediate vicinity of the country in which they operate. The force is officered partly by Americans and partly by Filipinos. It is undeniable that they are doing splendid police work and are cleaning up the ladrones in certain provinces, but praise for their police work is a very different thing indeed from accepting this body of natives as a substitute in part, if not wholly, for the army composed of American soldiers, and this is what Judge Taft in his interview upon landing at San Francisco this week would seem to favor.

He states in an unequivocal manner that by December 15, 1902, when the constabulary, which at present numbers only 3,000 men, will doubtless have been recruited up to its quota of 5,000, he will be able to carry on the government in the Philippines without the assistance of the Army, except for a small supporting force of 17,000 men.

It should be remembered, in this connection, that the force in the islands to-day is nearly 50,000 men; that General Chaffee finds this force far from sufficient, for he is constantly compelled to borrow assistance from the Navy, and that the date which Judge Taft sets for the Philippine millennium is only eleven months away.

I, for one, can not accept these conclusions, and I believe that this policy, if pursued, will lead to great disasters. Furthermore, I do not believe that Judge Taft is followed in this matter by more than 2 per cent of his own appointees, the members of the civil government.

One must ever bear in mind that the constabulary is composed in a large measure of the insurgents who have come in, not because they are convinced that the American government is a good thing for the island, but because they have learned by experience that for the present it is better to carry an American rifle with a salary attached to it than to stand up against an American firing line.

These men are the brothers in blood and in sentiment of the insurgents in the field, and when the propitious moment comes they will show it, I have no doubt.

CONSTABULARY WOULD LEAD.

No sensible man doubts for a moment that when the next general uprising comes that the constabulary and the native police, if taught to shoot, will be at the head of the movement. Some pessimists there are indeed who are inclined to think that the insurgents are only postponing the hour of the next general uprising until we shall have thoroughly equipped and taught their army, which will be recruited in a mass from the police and the constabulary, now so profuse in protestations of attachment to the United States.

In this connection, I may say I have seen a letter, which is preserved in a district headquarters of our army in Luzon, which, in my judgment, sheds a world of light upon the reason why so many insurgents fresh from the field are joining the constabulary.

Unfortunately, in the shape in which it was intercepted, there is no key to whom the letter was addressed, but it was signed by one of Malvar's ablest lieutenants, and it reads:

"Tell Tinio that I am indeed glad he has secured such a good billet in the American police. He needed rest, and I have felt for a long time, ever since the rheumatism got such a hold upon him, that he could do us more service in town by supplying information than in the field. Tell him to be at ease in his mind and to rest assured that his position is not misunderstood. Indeed, his comrades here authorize me to say that they fully appreciate the highly patriotic motive which underlay his act of apparent treason."

It is well to weigh carefully this letter and other evidence which a Congressional committee might obtain before setting too high a value upon the constabulary as a substitute for the American army in the Philippines.

Nobody knows how many troops we will require there on December 15, 1902. General Chaffee does not know, the Secretary of War does not know.

ARMY MUST BE STRONG ENOUGH.

It is, however, certain that American sovereignty over the islands will not be assured unless we have there an army that is strong enough to thrash any force that the insurgents may put in the field, plus the constabulary and the police trained by ourselves.

In the meantime, and until the uprising comes, the constabulary can be very useful in minor matters and in sparing the army the marching which so decimates its ranks.

There are possibly 50,000 soldiers in the Philippines to-day, but among them, owing to faulty preparations, fatiguing marches, and climatic conditions to which they are exposed, not more than 12,000 are effective men, in the military acceptation of the term.

With the constabulary hiking about the country and the army concentrated in healthy garrison posts, the quota of effective men would soon greatly increase, and possibly another 10,000 men might be brought home in time, but certain it is that all public discussion of this question is encouraging to the insurgents.

They see very clearly what the war is costing us, how irksome it is growing, and they know better than we do how little it has hurt them, how very few of their jungle patriots have fallen, and of where they get their sinews of war, which we can only shrewdly surmise come from the salaries of the Filipinos who are in the civil employ of the United States Government.

CONDITION OF THE ARMY.

Of course the army has done and is doing great work in the Philippines, but it is undeniable that the new army is not as effective a fighting machine as was the old army that was mobilized in Tampa in 1898 for the Santiago campaign. There are many reasons why this falling off in morale and effectiveness should have taken place. Fortunately they can be remedied.

In enlarging the army it has been found necessary to let down the bars as to physique and character to some extent. I don't mean that there is any lack of the same sort of men that carried our flag triumphantly through the Santiago campaign—there are plenty of them—but you can't get them at short notice.

Again, the four or five hundred officers who have been commissioned from civil life since 1898 have not invariably justified the choice. A minority have proved excellent men and are being molded into capable officers, but the majority are unsatisfactory.

When one remembers that years of study at West Point and years of service with troops do not always make a capable officer, it is not surprising that sometimes the possession of a parchment commission which an obliging Congressman has obtained should also fail to achieve this result.

OFFICERS AND MEN DISGUSTED.

The work of the army is not as effective as it might be, because both officers and men are very much disgusted with the prospect that opens before them, and to which there seems to be no end. The moment a province is superficially pacified it is put under a form of government whose corner stone rests upon the consent of the governed.

Now, every one in the islands, with the exception of Judge Taft, General Wright, and a very few others, is convinced that the Filipinos have not yet consented to be governed by us. There was some reason to think they had about a year ago, but it now turns out to have been merely a change of plan and not a cessation of hostilities.

There is much friction between the civil and the military authorities, and this is more marked and works more harm the lower down we go in the military and civil list.

General Chaffee and Governor Taft are very good friends apparently, though each has very decided views as to the work of the other; but when you get out into the provinces you very often see a civil governor and the army officer in command of the district who do not speak as they pass by.

Of course the insurgents in the field profit by this state of affairs, and the insurgents who are within our lines, the plausible peace talkers that surround every headquarters, military or civil, lose no opportunity of pouring oil upon the flames of discord.

Ninety-five per cent of the army officers and men are breathing prayers day and night, and also pulling wires, to return to what they call God's country, and there is absolutely no foundation in the charge which is so frequently made that the army is intriguing because jealous of the civil authorities.

There have occurred recently several incidents which have brought the already strained relations between the civil and the military authorities almost to the breaking point. One of these is the case of Lieut. Preston Brown, who was recently sentenced by court-martial for shooting a prisoner who was, as Lieutenant Brown maintained, attempting to make his escape.

The evidence submitted was conflicting, and the sentence, five years' imprisonment and dismissal from the army, has created widespread indignation and exerted a paralyzing influence upon the younger officers.

The majority of the army seems to be convinced that Brown is a victim of the civil government.

This does not apply to Judge Taft, who is convinced that Brown has been most harshly and unjustly treated, and is working in his behalf.

Whatever may be the result of this case, as far as it affects the personal fortunes of Lieutenant Brown, the harm to the army and the relations between the two administrations, which should work harmoniously together, has been done almost beyond recall, I fear.

The younger officers will in the future take no action of any kind unless they have written orders in their pockets from their superiors, clearing them of all responsibility. This, of course, kills all initiative, checks all enterprise, and is not the way to suppress rebellion.

Another incident of the war between the civil and the military government is the Sweet case.

Lieutenant Sweet is an officer who served with distinction in the Rough Riders, did excellent service in the volunteer regiment with which he went to the Philippines, and when his regiment was mustered out was made chief of the secret police.

EVIDENCE OF A CONSPIRACY.

In Manila, acting in this capacity, he came upon evidence of a conspiracy to burn down the city and murder the Americans. After examining the first prisoner that was caught, who of course maintained a stolid silence, either Sweet or one of his native assistants ordered the man to be whipped, and he was whipped to the extent of three lashes. The man confessed, the conspiracy was laid bare, and of course frustrated. It was the silly plan of a fanatic, but it might have been serious.

The unanimous feeling in Manila was that the white people of the capital owed Sweet a debt of gratitude. However, charges were filed against him, and he was tried and sentenced in the civil court to a period of arrest. It was proved by medical evidence that the skin of the conspirator had not even been broken by the lashes as they were applied.

However, the case went against Sweet. He served out his period of detention and has now come home. A week after he left they wanted a man like Sweet in Manila very much, but he had gone, and no substitute presented himself.

Toward the end of November documents and other evidence fell into the hands of the authorities which went far to show that there was a very widespread movement at this time to burn Manila, overpower the exceedingly small garrison, and massacre all whites—men, women, and children—irrespective of nationality.

Those charged with this duty sought for evidence in the matter coolly, calmly, and leisurely, as one might look for a pocketbook, but the promoters of this movement were never discovered.

ALARM IN MANILA.

I have never seen the evidence upon which this "scare" that prevailed in Manila all through November was founded, but it changed the life of the capital city of our pacified and tranquil possessions for something over a month.

During this time every man of the slim garrison, composed of the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-second Infantry, was on duty and under arms from eighteen to twenty hours a day, and civilians went out to dinner with their ammunition belts about them and at least a brace of revolvers.

There are some who think, as the uprising never came off, that the whole thing was a false alarm, and some minor officials of the civil government have even suggested that General Chaffee, General Wheaton, commanding the department, and General McKibbin, the military governor of Manila, were stampeded.

If Congress wants to know, and certainly Congress has the right to know, what are the actual conditions in the Philippines, why does not some one demand upon what information the authorities acted as they did during the month of November?

If Manila is completely pacified and ripe for government which rests upon the consent of the governed, as Governor Taft maintains, is it not outrageous that the public money should be squandered in the way it was during this month?

What justification had General Chaffee to request Admiral Rogers, commanding our fleet, to bring up his flagship, the New York, and any other available ship from Cavite across the bay to Manila and to remain anchored off the breakwater for two weeks, to the serious detriment of the naval programme as Admiral Rogers had outlined it?

Why were land drills practiced by day and night? Why was every officer of the Army and Navy concerned furnished with a chart of the city? Why was the system of night signals arranged, at great expense and much trouble, which could only be useful in case the insurgents cut all the wires? Why does not Congress demand that this evidence be placed before it?

NOW TIME FOR ACTION.

The time has come when we can no longer fool ourselves. It is many months since we were able to fool the world at large about the Philippines. It was all very far away, but it is coming very near to us all now. We can not afford to be "sick" of the Philippines any longer. It has become a question which seriously affects our national health. We had better pay attention now than later on when it may be too late; when we shall have more Balangigas to deplore.

No one has a greater admiration that I have for the personal qualities of Governor Taft. He is a constructive statesman of the highest order. However, he was sent to the Philippines, not to devise a form of government suitable for the islands and the conditions there, but he was directed to form a civil government, and he has done it, working wonders with pretty poor material.

The flaw in the whole construction is that the civil government edifice is built upon the quicksand of sedition and treason. No matter how cleverly he may build, the whole structure will be overturned some day, and not the day of our choosing. The Filipinos are solidly against American supremacy in any shape or form. If we do not wish to govern them rigidly and by force for ten or twenty or thirty years we had better hit upon a scheme to "scuttle," saving appearances as much as possible.

How Governor Taft could have spent last November in Manila and yet state that all the provinces are pacified, with the exception of Batangas and Samar, passes my comprehension. It is only fair to say of Governor Taft that he spent this month in the hospital, and so could not be as well informed of what was in progress as under other circumstances he probably would have been.

I regard the armed forces in the field in Batangas and Samar as the least serious features of the situation. There, indeed, we have them where we want them—where some day we may catch up with them.

My opinion as to the precarious hold we have upon the Philippines would not be greatly affected were I to hear to-morrow that both Lukban and Malvar had surrendered It might only mean that these leaders in the field had at last been convinced by the directors of the whole revolutionary movement, who live under our flag in the city of Manila, that the underground policy is the best.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the Senator from Colorado has concluded, I wish to move an executive session at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Chair for one moment?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The experience of to-day leads the Chair to call the attention of Senators to a rule which is constantly violated. It is this:

When a Senator desires to speak, he shall rise and address the Presiding Officer, and shall not proceed until he is recognized. * * *

No Senator shall interrupt another Senator in debate without his consent, and to obtain such consent he shall first address the Presiding Officer.

It is not a compliance with that rule for a Senator to address the Presiding Officer and immediately proceed to interrupt the Senator who has the floor. This is a very important rule for conducting debates with decorum, and the Chair sincerely hopes that Senators will observe it in the debate which we have now entered upon. The Senator from Connecticut.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 29, 1902, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 28, 1902.

PENSION AGENT.

John W. Nesbit, of Pennsylvania, to be pension agent at Pittsburg, Pa., his term having expired. (Reappointment.)

required by such naval service, and such royalties and compensation as may be equitably due such officer, considering all the circumstances connected with the making of the invention or discovery, and especially all facilities in originating, working out, or perfecting the invention which the officer may have enjoyed by reason of his official position, may be recovered by suit brought by the officer in the Court of Claims. THE TREATY-MAKING POWER.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I gave notice yesterday that I would desire to address the Senate for a little while this morning, immediately after the morning business. I was not in at the moment when the routine business was closed, and if I may be allowed I will take the floor at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I have expected for some time to talk upon the subject of treaties. When I determined to do so, I did not occupy the position as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I wish to say that there is no purpose on my part that anything I may submit shall have any special bearing in foreclosing the committee or anyone else upon the subject of treaties; but I thought that something of a historical statement of the action of the Congress of the United States in dealing with treaties might not be amiss at this time.

Mr. President, since the passage of the Dingley Act a number of reciprocity treaties have been negotiated by the President and submitted to the Senate. Most of those treaties have been made public, and their provisions are pretty well known throughout the country; but this is not the proper time for me to argue their merits, or to refer to them at all, except in the most general way. There are, however, a number of general questions involved under the reciprocity sections of the Dingley Act which it may not be improper for me now to discuss.

Has Congress any power or authority, under the Constitution, over treaties? This subject has been discussed at different times during our entire constitutional history. It is now a very complicated question, not only because the authority of the House on the subject of treaties has been disputed and argued almost from the very adoption of the Constitution, but the fourth section of the Dingley Act specifically provides how and when such treaties shall be made.

THE DINGLEY ACT.

That section "authorizes" the President to reduce by treaties to the extent of not more than 20 per cent the duties upon such goods, etc., as are enumerated in the act, in return for reciprocal concessions by other nations. It also provides that when any such treaty shall have been duly ratified by the Senate and approved by Congress then and thereafter the duties which shall be collected by the United States upon any of the designated goods, etc., from the foreign country with which such treaty has been made shall, during the period provided for by the treaty, be the duties specified in such treaty and none other.

The wording of that section is peculiar and mixed, but it seems plain (if the Senate is to be bound by its inconsistent terms) that all treaties negotiated under the act must be made and ratified within two years after its passage.

The act was approved July 24, 1897, and the two years mentioned therein expired July 24, 1899. If the fourth section of the Dingley Act is to control, it would be useless for us to now ratify a reciprocity treaty, supposed to be authorized by that section, because the time for the making and ratifying of such a treaty has long since expired.

In my opinion, the fourth section of the Dingley Act, so far as it attempts to confer, limit, or define the treaty-making power, is not only an interference with the powers of the President and Senate, but is unconstitutional, because it comes in conflict with that clause of the Constitution which says that the President "shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties." We do not, therefore, derive our treaty-making powers from a law of Congress, and no law of Congress can in any way modify or limit those powers. The Dingley Act can not limit the time in which we shall be allowed to make a treaty. It can not give to Congress any powers on the subject of treaties not given to it by the Constitution; and under the Constitution Congress as a legislative body is not a part of the treaty-making power.

Mr. Justice Field, in Geofroy vs. Riggs (133 U. S., 266), says:

The treaty-making power, as expressed in the Constitution, is in terms unlimited except by those restrictions which are found in that instrument against the action of the Government or of its departments, and those arising from the nature of the Government itself, and that of the States. It would not be contended that it extends so far as to authorize that which the Constitution forbids, or a change in the character of the Government, or in that of one of the States, or a cession of any portion of the territory of the latter without its consent. But with these exceptions, it is not perceived that there is any limit to the questions which can be adjusted touching any matter which is properly the subject of negotiations with a foreign nation.

Mr. Justice Story has said:

The power to make treaties is by the Constitution general, and of course it embraces all sorts of treaties, for peace or war, for commerce or territory, for alliance or succors, for indemnity for injuries or payment of debts, for recognition and enforcement of principles of public law, and for any other purpose which the policy or interests of independent sovereigns may dictate in their intercourse with each other. * * * But though the power is thus general and unrestricted it is not to be so construed as to destroy the fundamental laws of the State. A power given by the Constitution can not be construed to authorize a destruction of other powers given in the same instrument. It must be construed therefore in subordination of it and can not supersede or interfere with any other of its fundamental provisions. Each is equally obligatory and of paramount authority within its scope, and no one embraces a right to annihilate any other.

Justice Story then gives certain limitations of this power:

A treaty to change the organization of the government, or annihilate its sovereignty, to overturn its republican form, or to deprive it of its constitutional powers, would be void, because it would destroy what it was designed merely to fulfill—the will of the people.

This general definition of the treaty-making power and these imitations have generally been cited approvingly by writers on the subject—Duer and others.

The fourth section of the Dingley Act should be taken by the Executive (if considered at all) as a mere expression of the views of Congress in the adjustment of the specific terms of each treaty, because under the Constitution he did not need the authority to make these treaties which the fourth section sought to confer upon him. (See President's Annual Message, December 5, 1899.)

The question to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate is, whether a reciprocity treaty which by its terms provides that the duties to be collected, after its ratification, shall be those specified in the treaty (and which makes no reference to further Congressional action), will of its own force operate to repeal so much of a tariff act as may come in conflict with it, or whether it will be necessary for Congress to act on the treaty before those duties are reduced, and before the treaty shall become the supreme law of the land.

I propose, in this connection, to give a sketch of the constitutional conventions and the different acts of Congress where the treaty-making clause was under consideration.

THE ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION.

The Articles of Confederation gave to the United States in Congress assembled the sole and exclusive power of entering into treaties and alliances, and it then restricted that power by providing that no treaty of commerce shall be made whereby the legislative power of the respective States shall be restrained from imposing such imports and duties on foreigners as their own people are subjected to, or from prohibiting the exportation and importation of any species of goods or commodities whatsoever.

It soon became apparent that the people of the United States needed a better and stronger government, and not the least of the defects in the Articles of Confederation was the defective treaty-making power of the Confederation.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTIONS.

The result was a constitutional convention for the purpose of revising the Federal system of government, was called, and met on May 14, 1787. It is needless for me to describe this convention, or the men who composed it; suffice it to say that it was presided over by George Washington, and that its members were the ablest and foremost men in the infant Republic.

Among the plans proposed in this convention either for revising the articles or for making an entirely new constitution were the Randolph resolutions, the Pinckney plan, the Patterson plan, and the plan proposed by Alexander Hamilton.

The Randolph resolutions contained no provision on the subject of treaties. The Pinckney plan, which was the first draft of a complete Federal Constitution proposed, gave to the Senate the sole and exclusive power to declare war and to make treaties, to appoint ambassadors and other ministers and judges of the Supreme Court.

The Patterson plan was the first which proposed that treaties should be made a part of the supreme law of the "respective States."

It was Alexander Hamilton who first suggested, early in the convention, practically the clause which was afterwards adopted on the subject of treaties. He proposed: "That the Executive, with the advice and approbation of the Senate, should have power to make all treaties and that the Senate should have the power of advising and approving all treaties."

An examination of the debates in this convention clearly shows that its members fully realized the great powers conferred upon the Executive and the Senate by giving to them the power to make and ratify treaties, and that those treaties should be a part of the supreme law of the land.

An examination of the proceedings in that convention will show that its members did not desire to give to the House of Representatives any agency in reference to treaties. It was twice proposed in the convention to unite the House of Representatives with the Senate in the approval of treaties, but both times it was rejected almost unanimously, Pennsylvania, of all the States represented, alone voting in the affirmative. Mr. Gouverneur Morris proposed one amendment, providing, "But no treaty shall be binding on the United States which is not ratified by law," which amendment was opposed by Madison and others and lost. Later in the convention, when the clause giving to the President and the Senate power to make and ratify treaties was under discussion, Mr. Wilson moved to add after the word "Senate" "and House of Representatives," which was lost.

In this convention this treaty-making clause was discussed, and I will quote a few expressions of its members, showing the construction then placed upon it.

Colonel Mason contended that the power was so vast that the Senate could sell the whole country by means of treaties.

Mr. Madison was against the House being a party to a treaty, and suggested the inconvenience of requiring a legal ratification of treaties.

Mr. Wilson, recognizing the great power, sought to restrict it by uniting the House in the ratification of treaties. He said, "Treaties are to have the operation of laws, and they ought to have the same sanction as laws."

Mr. Sherman thought the only question that could be made was whether the power could be safely trusted in the Senate. He thought it could, and that the necessity of secrecy in the case of treaties forbade a reference of them to the whole legislature.

The treaty-making clause of the Constitution, as it stands to-day, was finally adopted, but not until after a most vigorous fight against it by those who claimed that the authority was too great.

I might refer also to the proceedings of the several State conventions to which the Constitution was sent for ratification, showing that in those conventions one of the principal objections to the Constitution was this clause giving to the President and Senate power to make and ratify treaties.

I will quote only from the proceedings in the Virginia convention, which was the most notable one, not only because of the thoroughness with which every clause was discussed, but because of the great men who participated in the debates.

It was affirmed in this convention, on the one part, that the President and Senate would have power to form treaties on all subjects, and that such treaties would at once become the supreme law of the land. The extent of the power was not denied by the friends of the Constitution, but they contended that it was so guarded that no harm could come from it.

Patrick Henry stated that if the Constitution was ratified as it stood two-thirds of a quorum would be empowered to make treaties that might relinquish and alienate territorial rights and our most valuable commercial advantages. "In short, should anything be left it would be because the President and Senators were pleased to admit it; that the power of making treaties under this Constitution extended farther than it did in any country in the world. Treaties were to have more force here than in any part of Christendom, for he defied any gentleman to show anything so extensive in any strong government of Europe. Gentlemen are going on a fatal career, but I hope they will stop before they concede this power unguarded and unaltered."

I may remark here that the power was conceded "unguarded and unaltered" when the Constitution was finally adopted.

Governor Randolph said: "It is said there is no limitation of treaties. I defy the wisdom of that gentleman to show how they ought to be limited."

Mr. Mason stated that the power to make such treaties must rest somewhere, but he claimed it was not sufficiently guarded in this Constitution, and that the President and Senate could make any treaty whatsoever, and he desired an explicit declaration that the power which can make other treaties can not, without the consent of the national parliament, dismember the Union.

But what showed as clearly as anything else can, the construction placed upon this clause was the amendment which the Virginia convention proposed, namely:

> That no commercial treaty shall be ratified without the concurrence of two-thirds of the whole number of the Senate, and no treaty controlling, restraining, or suspending the territorial rights or claims of the United States or any of them or their or any of their rights or claims to fish in American rivers shall be made but in case of the utmost necessity; nor shall any such treaty be ratified without the concurrence of three-fourths of the whole number of the members of both Houses, respectively.

If those able men who participated in the debates in the Virginia convention had so construed the Constitution that before a commercial treaty should become binding an act of Congress would be necessary, they certainly would never have sought to amend the Constitution by providing "that no commercial treaty shall be binding without the concurrence of two-thirds of the whole number of the Senate."

THE JAY TREATY, 1796.

Just seven years after the adoption of the Constitution the powers of the House of Representatives on the subject of treaties was raised in the House when an appropriation of $80,000 was called for under the so-called Jay treaty, negotiated on the part of the United States by John Jay and proclaimed by President Washington February 29, 1796. This was a treaty of commerce, amity, and navigation. It is a lengthy and important document, containing twenty-eight articles, in which it was provided, among other things, for a firm and universal peace between the two nations; for the withdrawal of the British troops from all posts within the boundary lines assigned to the United States; for a freedom of commerce and navigation to the citizens of each to pass and repass the said boundary lines, and that there shall be no discriminating duties. It provided further for the indemnification by the United States of British subjects, and the adjustment of such claims by commissioners, etc. It provided that there should be no discrimination in land tenures. It regulated the East and West Indian trade, and provided that no higher duties shall be paid by the ships or merchandise of the one party in the ports of the other than are paid by the like vessels and merchandise of other nations.

The Jay treaty was a most unpopular one in the United States, and excited the most bitter opposition in all parts of the country.

After the treaty had been ratified and proclaimed on March 1, 1796, the President sent it to Congress "for its information," as expressed in his message.

At that time the Senate was controlled by the Federalists, while the anti-Federalists had a majority in the House, there being 46 Federalists in the House as against 50 Democrats.

On March 2, 1796, Mr. Livingston introduced a resolution requesting the President to lay before the House copies of the correspondence and other papers relating to the treaty.

Upon this resolution a debate took place which was one of the most noteworthy debates ever held in the House of Representatives. It occupied the time of the House from the 7th of March to the 7th of April, a long time when we remember that there were but 96 members in the House in 1796.

The debate took a wide range, and covered the whole subject of the powers of Congress. It was argued on the one part that a treaty made by the President and ratified by the Senate, containing regulations touching objects delegated to Congress, can not be considered binding without Congress passes a law carrying it into effect. The opponents of the resolution insisted that a treaty negotiated by the President and ratified by the Senate was the supreme law of the land, and needed no action by the House for the purpose of carrying it into effect, and that the House was absolutely bound to make the necessary appropriations under it; and the debates in the various State conventions to which the Federal Constitution had been submitted for approval were cited to show that it was admitted and argued by many of those who made the Constitution that the treaty-making power was almost unlimited.

Mr. Livingston, in opening the debate, stated that the reason the resolution was offered was because the House was vested with a discretionary power of carrying the treaty into effect, or refusing its sanction, and that to guide them in an enlightened determination as to that point the papers are necessary; they would certainly throw light upon the subject, and enable the House to determine whether the treaty was such as that it ought to be carried into effect.

Mr. Griswold, the floor leader, argued that treaties may repeal laws. Congress by law declares war; the President by treaty makes peace and so repeals the law. The people have the same right to repeal statutes through the treaty-making power which they have to enact them through the legislative power. A treaty is a law with which the House has nothing to do except to provide for its execution. It is said that the President and the Senate might repeal half the laws, but such is the Constitution. All power is liable to abuse. It has been said that a law can only be repealed by the consent of the parties, but the House is not a party to a law. The people are parties and may make a law by one set of agents and repeal them by another. There is no check on the treaty-making power. The duty of Congress to appropriate is the same whether the debt springs from the Constitution, from a law, or from a treaty.

Mr. Smith, a prominent member of Congress of that day, in opposing the resolution referred to the discussions which took place at the time of the adoption of the Constitution and to the discussions in the several State conventions, which proved beyond a doubt that the treaty-making power was well understood. He showed that the practice of Congress had from the commencement of its existence been conformable to his opinion. Several treaties had been concluded with the Indian tribes under the present Constitution, and these treaties embraced all the points which were now made a subject of contest—settlement of boundaries, grants of money—and when ratified by the President and Senate they had been proclaimed, and had not been communicated to the House, but the House considered them as laws and made the necessary appropriations as a matter of course and without discussion.

Mr. Smith also cited the attempt by the Virginia legislature to amend the Constitution in this very respect:

Much has been said of the power of the House in originating money bills. This House alone, it was true, could, by the Constitution, originate bills for raising revenue, but the Senate could originate bills for appropriating money; the necessary appropriations for carrying a treaty into effect may originate in the Senate.

It must be remembered that in March, 1794, a law passed laying a general embargo on all vessels. After the law had taken effect and all vessels had been detained in pursuance of it, our treaty with Sweden was construed by the Executive to exempt the vessels of that nation from the embargo, and they were suffered to depart notwithstanding the act of Congress prohibiting it.

Mr. Smith continued, that in the year 1789 it was proposed to discriminate in the imposition of our duties between the nations with whom we had and those with whom we had not treaties of commerce. The proposition was renewed in 1794. This was a virtual acknowledgment of the validity of the treaties which did exist, and inviting all those nations with whom we did not have treaties to make them.

Mr. Madison and Mr. Gallatin were both in favor of the resolution, and they both claimed that the treaty-making powers of the President and the Senate were very restricted, and that Congress was not bound to fulfill the pledges made by a treaty; and that if the President and Senate can by treaty regulate trade they can also declare war, raise money, etc. No line can be drawn.

After more than fifty speeches on the resolution it was passed, there being 62 ayes and 37 nays.

The resolution was presented to the President, and on March 30 President Washington submitted his reply to the House, in which he declined to furnish the information, and said, in part:

The nature of foreign negotiations requires caution; and their success must often depend on secrecy; and even when brought to a conclusion a full disclosure of all the measures, demands, or eventual concessions would be extremely impolitic, for this might have a pernicious influence on future negotiations, or produce immediate inconveniences, perhaps danger and mischief, in relation to other powers. The necessity of such caution and secrecy were one cogent reason for vesting the power of making treaties in the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, the principle on which the body was formed confining it to a small number of members. To admit then a right in the House to demand and to have, as a matter of course, all the papers respecting a negotiation with a foreign power would be to establish a dangerous precedent. * * *

The course which the debate has taken on the resolutions of the House leads to some observations on the mode of making treaties under the Constitution.

Having been a member of the general convention, and knowing the principles on which the Constitution was formed, I have ever entertained but one opinion on the subject, and from the first establishment of the Government to this moment my conduct has exemplified that opinion, that the power of making treaties is exclusively vested in the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur, and that every treaty so made and promulgated thenceforward becomes the law of the land.

It is thus that the treaty-making power has been understood by foreign nations; and in all treaties made with them we have declared and they have believed that when ratified by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, they become obligatory. In this construction of the Constitution every House of Representatives has heretofore acquiesced, and until the present time not a doubt or suspicion has appeared to my knowledge that this construction was not the true one. Nay, they have more than acquiesced, for, until now, without controverting the obligation of such treaties, they have made all the requisite provisions for carrying them into effect.

There is also reason to believe that this construction agrees with the opinions entertained by the State conventions when they were deliberating on the Constitution, especially by those who objected to it, because there was not required in commercial treaties the consent of two-thirds of the whole number of the members of the Senate, instead of two-thirds of the Senators present, and because in treaties respecting Territorial and certain other rights and claims, the concurrence of three-fourths of the whole number of the members of both Houses, respectively, was not made necessary.

It is a fact, declared by the general convention, and universally understood, that the Constitution of the United States was the result of a spirit of amity and mutual concessions. And it is well known that, under this influence, the smaller States were admitted to an equal representation in the Senate with the larger States; and that this branch of the Government was invested with great powers, for, on the equal participation of those powers, the sovereignty and political safety of the smaller States were deemed essentially to depend.

If other proofs than these and the plain letter of the Constitution itself be necessary to ascertain the point under consideration, they may be found in the journals of the general convention. In those journals it will appear that a proposition was made "that no treaty should be binding on the United States which was not ratified by law," and that this proposition was explicitly rejected.

As, therefore, it is perfectly clear to my understanding that the assent of the House of Representatives is not necessary to the validity of a treaty; as the treaty with Great Britain exhibits in itself all the objects requiring legislative provision, and on these the papers called for can throw no light, and as it is essential to the due administration of the Government that the boundaries fixed by the Constitution between the different departments should be preserved, a just regard to the Constitution and to the duty of my office, under all the circumstances of this case, forbid a compliance with your request.

Mr. Madison then proceeded to answer, in a very able manner, from his standpoint the message of President Washington, insisting on the position which he had taken and denouncing the treaty.

The House passed a resolution, in answer to the President's message, defining what it insisted were its powers:

Resolved, That it being declared by the second section of the second article of the Constitution that the President shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, the House do not claim any agency in making treaties, but that when a treaty stipulates regulations on any of the subjects submitted by the Constitution to the power of Congress, it must depend for its execution, as to such stipulations, on a law or laws to be passed by Congress. And it is the constitutional right and duty of the House, in all such cases, to deliberate on the expediency or inexpediency of carrying such treaty into effect, and to determine and act thereon, as in their judgment may be most conducive to the public good. * * *

This resolution passed by a vote of 57 ayes and 35 noes, and finally the House passed the bill making the necessary appropriation.

It will thus be seen that the question was by no means settled on this the first occasion when it was discussed, but the same arguments have been used many times since that day down to the present as will be hereafter shown, and it is doubtful whether it is any nearer a final settlement to-day, at least so far as the contending opinions in Congress are concerned, than it was at the close of the discussion on the Jay treaty in 1796.

TREATY FOR PURCHASE OF LOUISIANA, 1803.

In 1803 the question was again argued in the House on the treaty for the purchase of Louisiana. Jefferson was President. The Democrats had control of both branches of Congress, there being in the House 103 Democrats as against 38 Federalists. Congress was in harmony with the President, and a resolution was introduced calling upon the President to furnish certain papers in connection with the treaty, but the resolution was lost by a vote of 57 ayes and 59 noes.

Wharton says in reference to this proceeding that Mr. Jefferson, who was then President, had maintained, as was well known, the position that whenever Congress in its legislative action is called upon to make appropriations to carry out a treaty, it has full constitutional right to refuse its assent. He took care not to appear in any way, when asking for action on the Louisiana treaty, to invade the prerogatives he had so fully recognized in 1796. He sent in a special message, communicating the requisite papers "for the purpose of the consideration of Congress in its legislative capacity," or "for the exercise of their functions as to those conditions which are within the power vested by the Constitution in Congress;" and so far from assuming that the power was to be exercised as a matter of course he said, "You will observe that some important conditions can not be carried into execution but with the aid of legislation." The measures proper for the execution of the treaty were voted without any reassertions of the principle of independent responsibility laid down by the House in 1796.

COMMERCIAL TREATY WITH GREAT BRITAIN, 1816.

In 1796 and 1803, while the whole question of the powers of the House was discussed, still the particular question in issue in both of those cases was whether Congress was bound to pass an appropriation provided for in a treaty. But in 1816 the same question which confronts us here was under consideration, namely, whether an act of Congress is necessary in case a treaty conflicts with a law, in order to repeal the law with which it conflicts, or does the treaty by its own force repeal the law.

A convention to regulate commerce and navigation was made between the United States and Great Britain, signed on behalf of the United States by John Quincy Adams, Henry Clay, and Albert Gallatin, on July 3, 1815, and was duly ratified by the Senate.

That treaty provided, that the inhabitants and ships of each country shall have the same rights to enter into the ports of the other as the citizens and ships of any foreign country; that there shall be reciprocally no discriminating duties on imports and exports to and from each of the countries, and that no higher duties shall be levied thereon than are levied on the imports and exports of other nations; that there shall be no discriminating duties on the vessels of each country in the ports of the other; that no higher duties shall be levied on the goods and merchandise of the two countries, whether such importations and exportations shall be in the vessels of the United States or Great Britain; and the treaty regulated the trade between the United States and the British West Indies and Calcutta, and provided for the appointment of consuls to reside in each of the countries, respectively.

This treaty was made necessary by the discriminating laws against Great Britain, growing out of the war of 1812, and was in direct conflict with certain acts of Congress.

After the treaty had been ratified and proclaimed, President

Madison laid before Congress his proclamation proclaiming it, stating:

I recommend to Congress such legislative provisions as the convention may call for on the part of the United States.

It will be remembered that President Madison had always taken the position that the House had an important agency in reference to treaties.

The Senate was generally of the opinion that no act of Congress was necessary, but the Committee on Foreign Relations did report a declaratory act simply stating that "so much of any act or acts as is contrary to the provisions of the convention shall be deemed and taken to be of no force or effect." This act was read and passed by unanimous consent.

In the meantime the House, after receiving the President's message, passed a bill of its own, in which bill certain provisions of the treaty were substantially reenacted in the shape of a law.

When this bill reached the Senate it seemed to be the desire to kill it at once without debate. But a few speeches were made on it, and as this seems to have been the only time, in open session, when the Senate discussed the question at all, I will quote briefly from those speeches.

Senator Barbour, of Virginia, spoke against the House bill, in the course of which speech he said:

A bill brought in by the Committee on Foreign Relations passed the Senate unanimously, declaring that all laws in opposition to the convention between the United States and Great Britain, concluded on the 3d of July, should be held as void. The principle on which this body acted was, that the treaty, upon the exchange of its ratification, did, of itself, repeal any commercial regulation, incompatible with its provisions, existing in our municipal code, it being by us believed at the time that such a bill was not necessary, but by a declaratory act it was supposed all doubts and differences, should any exist, might be removed. This bill is sent to the House, who, without acting thereon, send us the one under consideration, but differing materially from ours.

The difference between the two bills is rendered important by its involving a constitutional question.

The difference between the friends of the bill and those opposed to it is, as I understand it, this: The former contend that the law of Congress discriminating between American and British tonnage is not abrogated by the treaty, although its provisions conflict with the treaty, but that to effect its repeal the bill in question, a mere echo of the treaty, must pass; the latter, among whom I wish to be considered, on the contrary, say that the law above alluded to was annulled upon the ratification of the treaty.

Is the legislative sanction necessary to give the treaty effect? I answer in the negative, because the Constitution says that all treaties are a part of the supreme law of the land. We ask for no superiority, but equality, and as one law repeals another, so we contend a treaty will repeal a law.

The Constitution gives Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations. I inquire to what extent does the authority of Congress in relation to commercial treaties reach. Is the aid of the legislature necessary in all cases whatsoever to give effect to a commercial treaty? It is readily admitted that it is not. That a treaty whose influence is extraterritorial becomes obligatory the instant of its ratification. That, as the aid of the legislature is not necessary to its execution, the legislature has no right to interpose. It is then admitted that while a general power on the subject of commerce is given to Congress, that yet important commercial regulations may be adopted by treaty, without the cooperation of the legislature, notwithstanding the generality of the grant of power on commercial subjects to Congress.

If it be true that the President and Senate have, in their treaty-making power, an exclusive control over part and not over the whole, I demand to know at what point that exclusive control ceases. In the clause relied upon there is no limitation. The fact is, none exists. The treaty-making power over commerce is supreme. No legislative sanction is necessary, if the treaty be capable of self-execution; and when a legislative sanction is necessary, as I shall more at large hereafter show, such sanction when given adds nothing to the validity of the treaty, but enables the proper authority to execute it; and when the legislature do act in this regard, it is under such obligation as the necessity of fulfilling a moral contract imposes. Congress has power to lay embargoes, pass nonintercourse laws, or nonimportation or countervailing laws, but the President and Senate has a right to repeal or modify them by treaty. If by treaty we agree, as in this case, that for an equivalent we will forbear to exact a higher tonnage duty on British than American ships, then the treaty, as it needs no legislative aid, is self-executory.

Senator Fromentin, an able lawyer and judge, spoke against both the House and Senate bills, and said:

Both bills in one respect are radically defective. Both bills enact provisions evidently useless, and whatever is useless by legislation is not unaccompanied by danger.

A treaty is a law; it is not to become a law when an act shall have been passed by Congress to make it so, otherwise it would have been useless to make treaties a part of the supreme law. From the moment the treaty has been ratified by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the Constitution declares that it is the supreme law. Can a law need any further assistance to become so? Can it need the enaction of another law to make it so? Where will this process end? A treaty and an act of Congress are put upon the same footing; both are declared to be laws, and there can not be two definitions of a law. If the law, as it results from a treaty, wants the superenactment of an act of Congress, I can devise no reason why an act of Congress should not require another act of Congress, too, before the first act can be considered a law. I see no end to this enactment and reenactment. Did not the treaty of peace repeal the act of Congress declaring war? I would refer in support of the same doctrine to the numberless treaties made with the Indian tribes.

I would refer to the treaty concluded at Paris on the 30th of April, 1803, between the United States and France. This treaty, and the several conventions signed at the same date, stipulated certain commercial regulations, and contained provisions for the payment of $15,000,000. What was the conduct of the Congress that time? Did the House of Representatives contend that the treaty could not be carried into effect until the provisions of the treaty had been reenacted by an act of Congress? No such doctrine was dreamt of, the House merely passed an act authorizing the President to take possession of Louisiana, and for the temporary government thereof, and the treaty was considered by the House then the supreme law of the land. That treaty gave the rights of American citizenship to the citizens of Louisiana, and no act of Congress was passed confirming that right.

The question was more fully discussed in the House.

Mr. Hopkinson, Mr. Barbour, and Mr. Forsythe spoke in favor of the bill. Mr. Clay did not discuss it, but said that at the worst, according to the opinions on the other side, it was harmless, while in the opinion of the gentlemen on this side it was necessary.

But two of the greatest speeches ever made in Congress were made on this occasion by John C. Calhoun and William Pinkney, two, perhaps, as able men as this country has produced. Both were strongly opposed to the passage of any bill as wholly unnecessary and both claimed that the treaty itself, by its own force, repealed the laws in contravention with it.

John C. Calhoun spoke against the necessity for passing such a measure, in the course of which he said:

Were he of the opposite side, if he indeed believed this treaty to be a dead letter until it had received the sanction of Congress, he would lay the bill on the table and move an inquiry into the fact why the treaty had been proclaimed as a law before it had received the proper sanction. It is true the Executive had transmitted a copy of the treaty to the House, but did not send the negotiations. Do gentlemen say that information is not needed; that though we have the right to pass laws to give validity to treaties, yet we are bound by a moral obligation to pass such laws? To talk of the rights of this House to sanction treaties, and at the same time to assert that it is under a moral obligation not to withhold its sanction, is a solecism. No sound mind that understands the terms can possibly assent to it, and he cautioned the House that while it was trying to extend its power to cases which he believed did not belong to it to take care lest it should lose its substantial and undoubted power.

Another fact in regard to the treaty, it does not itself stipulate that a law should be passed to repeal the duties proposed to be repealed by this bill, which would be its proper form, if in the opinion of the negotiators a law was necessary, but it stipulates in positive terms for their repeal without consulting or regarding us. The bill before the House is mere form and not supposed to be necessary to the validity of the treaty. Why can not Congress then repeal the act declaring war? He acknowledged with the gentleman, they can not, consistently with reason. The solution of this question explained the whole difficulty. The reason is plain—one power can make war; it requires two to make peace. It required a contract or a treaty between the nations at war. Is this peculiar to a treaty of peace? No; it is common to all treaties. It rises out of their nature and not from any accidental circumstance attaching itself to a particular class. It is no more or less than that Congress can not make a contract with a foreign nation.

Let us apply it to a treaty of commerce—to this very case. Can Congress do what this treaty has done? It has repealed the discriminating duties between this country and England. Either could by law repeal its own. But by law they could go no further, and for the same reason that peace can not be made by law. Whenever, then, an ordinary subject of legislation can only be regulated by contract, it passes from the sphere of the ordinary powers of making laws and attaches itself to that of making treaties. The truth is the legislative and treaty-making powers are never in the strict sense concurrent. They both may have the same subject, as in this case commerce, but they discharge functions as different in relation to it in their nature as their subject is alike. It is proposed to establish some regulation of commerce. We immediately inquire, Does it depend on our will; can we make the desired regulation without the concurrence of any foreign power? If so, it belongs to Congress, and anyone would feel it to be absurd to attempt to effect it by treaty.

On the contrary, does it require the consent of a foreign power? Is it proposed to grant a favor, to repeal discriminating duties on both sides? It is equally felt to belong to the treaty power; and he would be thought insane who would propose to abolish the discriminating duties in any case by an act of the American Congress. It is calculated, he felt, almost to insult the good sense of the House to dwell on a point apparently so clear. Why, then, has a treaty the force which he attributed to it? Because it is an act in its own nature paramount to laws made by the common legislative powers of the country. It is in fact a law and something more—a law established by contract between two independent nations. * * *

Whatever, then, concerns our foreign relations; whatever requires the consent of another nation, belongs to the treaty power, can only be regulated by it; and it is competent to regulate all such subjects, provided—and here are the true limitations—such regulations are not inconsistent with the Constitution. If so, they are void. No treaty can alter the fabric of our Government, nor can it do that which the Constitution has expressly forbad to be done, nor can it do that differently which is directed to be done in a given mode, and all other modes prohibited. For instance, the Constitution says that no money shall be drawn out of the Treasury but by an appropriation made by law. Of course no subsidy can be granted without an act of law, and a treaty of alliance could not involve the country in war without the consent of the House.

A treaty can legitimately do that which can be done by law, and the converse is true. Suppose the discriminating duties repealed on both sides by law, yet what is effected by this treaty would not even then be done; the plighted faith would be wanting. Either side might repeal its law without breach of contract. * * * Instead of looking to our own Government, members have been swayed by the opinion and practice of the Government of Great Britain. There is a radical difference between the two Governments. Admitting the fact to be, then, that the King refers all commercial treaties affecting municipal regulations of the country to Parliament for its sanction, the ground would be very feeble to prove that to be the intention of our Government and Constitution. Strong differences exist between the two Governments, etc.

William Pinkney, a great statesman, lawyer, and diplomat of that day, and who was a member of one of the conventions ratifying the Constitution, made a strong speech against the passage of the bill as wholly unnecessary, and insisted that the treaty of commerce was self-executing, and needed no law of Congress to carry it into effect.

Judge Cooley, in commenting upon the action of Congress at this time, stated, "Upon this occasion a most admirable speech was delivered by the late William Pinkney, in which his great powers of reasoning and judicial learning had an ample scope."

I will now quote a portion of Mr. Pinkney's speech. He said:

By what process of reasoning will you be able to extract from the wide field of that general provision, giving the President and Senate power over treaties, the obnoxious case of a commercial treaty, without forcing along with it the case of a treaty of peace, and along with that again the case of every possible treaty?

Speaking of the treaties of peace entered into by the President and the Senate, Mr. Pinkney said:

You saw your laws departing from the statute book, expelled from the stronghold of supremacy by the single force of a treaty of peace, and you did not attempt to stay them; you did not bid them to linger until you should bid them go; you neither put your shoulder to the wheel of expulsion nor made an effort to retard it. In a word, you did nothing. You suffered them to flee as a shadow, and they were reduced to a shadow, not by the necromancy of usurpation, but by the energy of the Constitution. Yet you had every reason for interference then which you can not have now. The power to make a treaty of peace stands upon the same constitutional footing with the power to make a commercial treaty. It is given by the same words. It is exerted in the same manner. It produces the same conflict with municipal legislation.

The ingenuity of man can not urge a consideration, whether upon the letter or the spirit of the Constitution, against the existence of a complete power in the President and Senate to make a valid commercial treaty which will not, if it be correct and sound, drive us to the degeneration of the power exercised by the President and Senate, with universal approbation, to make a valid treaty of peace. Nay, the whole treaty-making power will be blotted from the Constitution, and a new one, alien to its theory and practice, be made to supplant it, if sanction and scope be given to the principles of this bill. The bill may indeed be considered as the first of many assaults, not now considered as assaults perhaps, but not therefore the less likely to happen, by which the treaty-making power, as created and lodged by the Constitution, will be pushed from its place and compelled to abide with the power of ordinary legislation. The example of this bill is beyond its ostensible limits.

The pernicious principle, of which it is at once the child and apostle, must work onward and to the right and left until it has exhausted itself, and it never can exhaust itself until it has gathered into the vortex of the legislative powers by Congress the whole treaty-making capacity of the Government. For if, notwithstanding the directness and precision with which the Constitution has marked out the departments of the Government, by which it wills that treaties shall be made and has declared that treaties so made shall have the force and dignity of a law, the House of Representatives can insist upon some participation in that high faculty upon the simple suggestion that they are sharers in legislative power upon the subject embraced by any given treaty, what remains to be done for the transfer to Congress of the entire treaty-making faculty, as it appears in the Constitution, but to show that Congress have legislative power, direct or indirect, upon every matter which a treaty can touch? And what are the matters within the practicable range of a treaty which your laws can not either mold or qualify or influence? It is admitted that the only matter within the practicable range of a treaty which the law can not mold or qualify is a contraband of war.

Sir, you have my general notions upon the bill before you. They have no claim to novelty. I imbibed them from some of the heroes and sages who survived the storm of the contest to which America was summoned in her cradle. I imbibed them from the father of his country. My understanding approved them, with the full concurrence of my heart, when I was much younger than I am now, and I feel no disposition to discard them now that age and feebleness are about to overtake me.

The House bill passed by a small majority, there being 86 ayes and 71 noes.

The Senate and House appointed conferees, and the two bills were taken up, and an amended declaratory act was agreed to.

From the report of the conferees, both on the part of the House and the Senate, it is to be seen that the Senate denied that the convention required legislative provisions, and, as stated in the report of the conferees on the part of the House—

The committee allude to the principle which inculcates the propriety of always taking care if we do not err on the safe side. Should Congress fail to legislate where legislation is necessary, either the public faith must be broken or, to avoid that evil, the executive branch of the Government must be tempted to overstep the boundaries prescribed by the Constitution.

As to the late convention, the immediate subject of controversy, the Senate doubted whether any act of legislation was necessary, but since it was deemed important by the House that an act should be passed, they had no objection to give it their sanction, provided a precedent was not established binding them hereafter to assist in passing laws in cases in which such doubts might exist.

In reference to the act as agreed to, the Senate conferees stated that—

Even a declaratory law to this effect is a matter of mere expediency, adding nothing to the efficacy of the treaty and serving only to remove doubts wherever they exist.

In endeavoring to state the result of this proceeding of 1816, I can not do better than to quote what Justice Story has said in commenting upon it in Story on the Constitution:

At the distance of twenty years the same question was again presented for consideration of both Houses upon a bill to carry into effect a clause of the treaty of 1815 with Great Britain. The result was that a declaratory clause was adopted, instead of a mere enacting clause. So that the binding obligation of treaties was affirmatively settled.

TREATY WITH SPAIN, 1820.

In 1820 Mr. Clay introduced a resolution in the House—

That the Constitution of the United States vests in Congress the power to dispose of the territory belonging to them, and that no treaty purporting to alienate any portion thereof is valid without the concurrence of Congress.

It was claimed that the Spanish treaty of 1819 alienated a part of the territory of the United States. A short discussion was had upon Mr. Clay's resolution.

RECIPROCITY WITH PRUSSIA, 1844.

On June 14, 1844, Senator Choate, from the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, submitted a report to the Senate on the reciprocity treaty with Prussia of that year, reducing certain duties on enumerated articles coming from Prussia in return for similar concessions on articles exported to Prussia.

This report showed conclusively that the treaty was very inequitable to the United States, and that the United States would concede much more than she would gain by it. This report has been cited as a strong precedent against reciprocity treaties. It was stated in the report that—

The committee are not prepared to sanction so large an innovation upon the ancient and uniform practice in respect of the department of government by which duties on imports shall be imposed. The convention which has been submitted to the Senate changes duties which have been laid by law. It changes them either ex directo and by its own force, or it engages the faith of the nation and the faith of the legislature to make the change.

In the judgment of the committee the legislature is the department of government by which commerce should be regulated and laws of revenue passed. The Constitution in terms communicates the power to regulate commerce and to impose duties to that department. It communicates it in terms to no other. Without engaging at all in an examination of the extent, limits, and objects of the power to make treaties, the committee believe that the general rule of our system is indisputably that the control of trade and the functions of taxation belong to Congress.

Holding this to be the general rule upon the subject, the committee discern nothing in the circumstances of this case, nothing in the object to be attained, or in the difficulties in the way of obtaining it, which should induce a departure from this rule.

There were two reports on the subject, both very lengthy, and I will not stop now to quote any more of them, as I will endeavor to show that they ought not to be given very great weight, when we examine into the circumstances and conditions surrounding the treaty and the administration at that time.

Tyler was President at this time, having taken the office on the death of President Harrison. Harrison was a Whig, and Tyler, while elected as the Whig candidate for Vice-President, and while he had pledged himself to carry out Harrison's policy, still he stood at the opposite pole in his own party from Harrison. He was a Southern man and an ex-Democrat. In the Senate, while supposed to be a Whig, he voted as an independent Democrat. Almost from the very moment of his inauguration a breach was opened between himself and Congress, and especially between himself and the Whig majority in the Senate, and it continued to widen until the party which had elected him had entirely abandoned him. He was in exactly the same position with the Whigs as Andrew Johnson was with the Republicans in 1866. Tyler vetoed every measure his party desired to pass. He at once became the rival of Clay in his own party. The Whig majority constantly wrangled with their President. His entire Cabinet, excepting Webster, his Secretary of State, resigned, because they were not in harmony with the President, and Webster some time afterwards was forced to resign.

The whole tone of the report shows that the Whigs desired to rebuke their President, and they took the convenient position that the treaty was an innovation upon the ancient and uniform practice of the Government. In the course of the report they took occasion to inform their President that—

To follow, not to lead; to fulfill, not to ordain the law; to carry into effect, by negotiation and compact with foreign governments, this legislative will, when it has been announced, upon the great subjects of trade and revenue; not to interpose with controlling influence; not to go forward with too ambitious enterprise. These seem to the committee to be the appropriate functions of the Executive.

Under these circumstances, therefore, I attach but little weight to Senator Choate's report.

In commenting upon the report, Mr. Calhoun, who became Tyler's Secretary of State, said that the objections of the committee were opposed to the uniform practice of the Government, and he referred to numerous treaties which contained stipulations changing existing laws. "So well," says he, "is the practice settled that it is believed it has never before been questioned. The only question, it is believed, that has ever been made, was whether an act of Congress is necessary to sanction and carry out the stipulation carrying the change into effect. If the view taken by the committee be the correct one, it may be said that the exercise of the treaty-making power has been one continual series of habitual and uninterrupted infringements of the Constitution."

Mr. Calhoun, in a private letter to Mr. Wheaton, found in Wheaton's International Law, states in confidence to Mr. Wheaton that the true cause for the rejection of the Zollverein treaty of 1844 by the Senate was "the bearing which it was feared it would have on the Presidential election. Mr. Clay's friends, who are a decided majority in the Senate, felt confident of his election, under the old issue as it stood when Congress met, and were adverse to admit any new question to enter the issue.

"I can not but hope that the treaty would be sanctioned by the Senate should the time be prolonged to the next session, when the Presidential election will be over, and the party motives that have led to laying the treaty on the table shall have passed away. I am strengthened in this opinion from the very inconclusive reasons assigned by the Committee on Foreign Relations for its rejection, and which I feel confident the Senate will never sanction, whatever may be the fate of the treaty."

GADSDEN TREATY, 1854.

In 1854, when the House was called upon to make an appropriation of $10,000,000 to carry out the Gadsden treaty it again discussed its power over treaties. The opposition was led by Mr. Benton, who took the extreme position that the House should have been consulted before the purchase was made. He attempted to have resolutions passed defining what he considered to be the powers of the House. These resolutions were declared out of order, and a bill appropriating $10,000,000 passed by a vote of 103 yeas and 62 nays.

ALASKAN TREATY, 1867.

The next time the question was discussed was in 1867, during the Fortieth Congress, Andrew Johnson being President, and the Republicans having control of both branches of Congress. The discussion arose on the bill appropriating $7,200,000 for the purchase of Alaska under the treaty with Russia. The House was not called upon to make the appropriation until the treaty had been ratified and proclaimed, and until the United States had taken possession of the territory. The Senate passed a short bill, simply appropriating the money. The House, after many speeches had been made against it, passed a bill, also appropriating the necessary funds, but the bill had a long preamble, defining what the House considered to be its powers, and in which they stated "that the assent of Congress is hereby given to said treaty." The Senate disagreed to the House bill, conferees were appointed, and the objectionable part of the preamble stricken out.

A statement of the respective claims of the two Houses is given by Mr. Loughridge, one of the conferees on the part of the House, in his report to the House, in which he said:

> Upon my motion the House placed upon this bill a preamble, setting forth fully and clearly the doctrines of this House. In the first place, that no cession of territory can be made without the consent of the House; in the second place, that no money can be appropriated without the consent of the House, and in the third place, that no foreigners can be naturalized without the consent of the House. To all these propositions the Senate entirely disagree, and I am satisfied will never consent.
> The committee on the part of the Senate stated freely and frankly that they could in no event consent to the preamble, and that the Senate would not consent, and that they held that the House was bound to carry out the stipulations of all treaties, and that when a treaty provided for the payment of money for any purpose, that such stipulation created a debt, and that the House had no discretion in relation to the payment of the same, a doctrine of course utterly at variance with the law and with the principles asserted in the preamble as it passed the House; and it is manifestly impossible to reconcile opinions so utterly at variance upon so important a question. The majority of the committee on the part of the House could in no event consent to any such doctrine, so utterly subversive of the rights and constitutional prerogatives of the House. If the House insisted on incorporating its doctrines in the bill it would fail.
> I think the Senate should have agreed to the preamble. In refusing to do so they show an intention to continue the encroachment upon the rights of the House which has been going on, on the part of the treaty-making power, for years, and which this House owes it to itself and to the country to put a stop to.

The report of the conferees was agreed to on the part of the House by a vote of 91 yeas and 48 noes.

The debate at this time was practically the same as it had been on previous occasions—no new facts or precedents were brought forward—and the great leaders of the House of that period, among them being Blaine and Garfield, did not express themselves upon the subject at all.

This was the last time that the House discussed this important question. It was scarcely raised when the appropriation of $20,000,000 was made pursuant to the treaty with Spain of 1898.

The question, so far as whether the House is bound to make an appropriation under a treaty, has not even been settled. The Supreme Court in the Porto Rican cases touched upon it, but stated:

> We express no opinion as to whether Congress is bound to appropriate the money to pay for it. This has been discussed by writers upon constitutional law, but it is not necessary to consider it in this case, as Congress made prompt appropriation of the money stipulated in the treaty.

Of course, many of the precedents I have given has been in relation to appropriating money to carry a treaty into effect. That is not the direct question involved here, but the principle is very similar, and in each of the cases I have cited the discussion covered the whole subject, and was not confined to the necessity of appropriating money.

Writers on international and constitutional law have discussed this question. Some have taken one position and some have taken another, and a few noted writers have declined to take any absolute position, but have given a brief history of the subject, and seem to incline to the theory that the House is bound to pass an appropriation called for under a treaty, and uphold the vast power of the President and Senate on the subject of treaties. Among those who have taken the latter position is Justice Story in his work on the Constitution. Kent, in his Commentaries, took a more pronounced position, and declared in so many words that the treaty is a contract and the supreme law of the land, and that Congress is bound to provide an appropriation or any other legislation that might be necessary, and had no discretion in the matter. Wheaton, in his work on International Law, discusses the treaty-making power in the United States, and holds that it is vested in the exclusive control of the Executive and the Senate, and that the House is bound to pass an appropriation for the purpose of carrying the treaty into effect without inquiring into the merits of the treaty itself.

The statement of Chief Justice Marshall, in Foster vs. Nielson (2 Peters, 315), that "the treaty is consequently to be regarded in courts of justice as equivalent to an act of the legislature whenever it operates of itself without the aid of any legislative provision. But when the terms of the stipulation import a contract, when either of the parties engages to perform a particular act, the treaty addresses itself to the political, not the judicial department, and the legislature must execute the contract before it can become a rule for the court."

This has always been cited by those who claim that the House has an important agency on the subject of treaties. But when we read the case in which Chief Justice Marshall made this statement, I think it sustains my position.

In that case Chief Justice Marshall was construing the eighth article of the treaty with Spain, ceding Florida, which, according to our translation of the treaty, provided:

> All grants of land made before the 24th of January, 1818, by his Catholic Majesty shall be ratified and confirmed to the persons in possession of the lands, to the same extent, etc.

All that Justice Marshall held in that case was that the words "shall be ratified and confirmed" imported a contract, and meant that they "should be ratified and confirmed" thereafter by Congress. Justice Marshall expressly stated in that case that if the language of the treaty had been "that those grants are hereby confirmed," "that it would have acted directly on the subject, and would have repealed those acts of Congress which were repugnant to it."

The same treaty was considered again by Chief Justice Marshall in 7 Peters, 53, when it was discovered that there was an error in our translation of the treaty, and that the words used were "shall remain ratified and confirmed," and Chief Justice Marshall held that those words acted directly on the subject, and that the eighth clause needed no legislative sanction.

It would seem, therefore, from this decision that if a reciprocity treaty provides directly that the articles enumerated in it shall be admitted on payment only of the reduced duties set forth in the treaty, that such a treaty would be self-executing, and would need no further legislative sanction, because such words do not import a contract or provide for further legislative action, but they would repeal by their own force acts of Congress inconsistent with the terms of the treaty.

The Supreme Court has many times held that self-executing treaties repeal prior laws, and that subsequent laws may repeal treaties (at least so far as our own municipal law is concerned). It was stated in Whitney vs. Robertson (124 U. S., 194):

> If the treaty contains stipulations which are self-executing—that is, require no legislation to make them operative—to that extent they have the force and effect of a legislative enactment, and that the one last in date will control.

HAWAIIAN, CANADIAN, AND MEXICAN RECIPROCITY TREATIES.

The reciprocity treaties with Hawaii, Canada, and with Mexico, which did not go into effect until Congress acted, are sometimes referred to as establishing a precedent that Congress must act on all reciprocity treaties. But each of those treaties contained express provisions that they should not become effective without Congressional action. In the Hawaiian and Canadian treaties Congress did pass the necessary laws, and they went into effect. In the reciprocity treaty with Mexico, negotiated by General Grant, Congress failed to enact the necessary laws, and the treaty never went into practical effect.

Had the provision for Congressional action been omitted in the Hawaiian, Canadian, and Mexican reciprocity treaties, they would have become effective at once upon the exchange of ratifications.

THE REVENUE CLAUSE.

It has been stated that a reciprocity treaty, in order to become effective, must be submitted to the House of Representatives, because of that section of the Constitution which says:

> Bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose and concur with amendments.

Upon this section very little comment is to be found by writers on constitutional law, and I have been able to find but one decision of the Supreme Court where that clause was directly involved.

What is meant by the words "bills for raising revenue" has not been settled definitely. It has been discussed in Congress a number of times. In 1856 the Senate insisted that a general appropriation bill was not a bill for raising revenue. Some very able speeches were made on the proposition. Senator Seward argued that by the letter of the Constitution the Senate had the power to originate such a measure; but he stated that, inasmuch as the Senate had never exercised the right to originate a general appropriation bill, it was better not to commence doing so at that time. The Senate passed two of these bills, but they were laid on the table in the House. During the Forty-second Congress the subject was again argued—the first time when the Senate originated a measure repealing the tax on incomes, and the House passed a resolution declaring that the Senate had no constitutional power to originate such a bill.

Justice Harlan, in a recent case (167 U. S., 201), held:

The case is not one that requires either an extended examination of precepts or a full discussion as to the meaning of the words in the Constitution "bill for raising revenue." What bills belong to that class is a question of such magnitude that it is the part of wisdom not to attempt, by way of any general statement, to cover every possible phase of the subject. It is sufficient in the present case to say that an act of Congress providing a national currency secured by a pledge of bonds of the United States, and which, in the furtherance of that object, and also to meet the expenses attending the execution of the act, imposed a tax on the notes in circulation of the banking association organized under the statute, is clearly not a revenue bill which the Constitution declares must originate in the House.

Justice Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, says (sec. 880):

The practical construction of the Constitution and the history of the origin of the constitutional provision in question proves that revenue bills are those that levy taxes in the strict sense of the word, and are not bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue.

Justice Miller, in his lectures on the Constitution of the United States, says in reference this clause:

This is a very important function of legislation, as it is now construed by the House, to be reposed exclusively in that body. As we would naturally understand the meaning of the term "revenue" at the present day, the expression "bills for raising revenue" would have reference to laws for the purpose of obtaining money by some form of taxation or other means of raising the necessary funds to be used in supplying the wants of the Government, paying its expenses, and discharging its debts. The appropriation of that money, which is always necessarily done by virtue of an act of Congress, would seem to be quite a different thing from the laws prescribing how the money shall be raised.

Justice Miller goes on to say that these appropriation bills have always originated in the House, but that the Senate has never given its full assent to the proposition, but has originated appropriation bills for specific purposes.

From the decisions and statements of Justices Story, Miller, and Harlan I can not see how this clause could make it necessary to submit a reciprocity treaty to the House before it becomes effective. The language of the clause is that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House, and not all bills affecting revenue, or in which revenue may incidentally arise. A reciprocity treaty is not a bill. It is true that it reduces a duty which has been laid by law, but I maintain that the treaty-making power has authority to change a tariff law the same as it has authority to change any other act of Congress, and we have seen that it has been clearly held, from the decisions of Chief Justice Marshall down to the present, that the President and Senate, by treaty, can change or modify a law of Congress.

My attention has been called to a recent work by Mr. John Randolph Tucker, late member of Congress and a professor of constitutional and international law and equity, published in 1899. The book, as stated in the preface—is an expression of the views of the author, not merely his intellectual opinions, but his deep convictions, in the consistent exercise of which he lived and in the faith of which he died; and neither the dissent of friendship nor the storm of popular indignation nor yet the hope of political preferment ever shook his unswerving devotion to them. He religiously believed that the maintenance of these principles was necessary to the stability and preservation of the Union and the happiness and prosperity of the people, and that their rejection would as certainly result in tyranny, despotism, and ultimate dissolution.

The views that he was so anxious to express were that the powers of the Federal Government should be limited so far as possible. His life in Congress and in his State of Virginia and all his studies were devoted to that end. The book seems to have for its object the establishment of the doctrine of a limited Federal government and the individual rights of the State.

When he discusses the subject in hand here he states, without citing any particular authority, that the President and Senate would not have the right to make treaties of this character without the consent of the House, because of other clauses of the Constitution giving to Congress the power to lay and collect taxes, duties, and imposts, to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and to the House the power of originating bills for raising revenue. He does not cite or discuss the authorities that I have commented upon heretofore, and simply takes the position that a great many members of the House of Representatives have taken for a hundred years.

I do not think that Mr. Tucker, on this subject, is such an authority as should govern the United States Senate—first, because of his looking through a darkened glass upon all questions in reference to Federal power and authority and of his desire to limit the power of the Executive and the Senate; second, because he was a member of Congress and has studied and considered the views of the lower House without appreciating the rights of the Executive and Senate; third, because he ignores the history of the Constitution and the laws and the policy of this Government for the past forty years. He fails to appreciate that this is a Federal Government, a nation, and that the Constitution gives to the Executive certain well-defined powers that should be recognized and not limited.

If it were important, I might take the time to show how he has been mistaken on different constitutional questions. He criticises Justice Story's construction, and he takes exception to the statements and conclusions of Abraham Lincoln.

In section 352 of volume 2 he says:

Another form in which the question has been presented is as to the validity of a treaty which gave an alien subject of a foreign nation with whom the treaty was made the right to hold land in a State, contrary to the law of the State against such right. These questions have been decided by the Supreme Court in favor of the validity of such a provision. This is an extreme view of the treaty power. It could change the law of the State in respect to land tenure within its borders. Perhaps it may be vindicated upon the ground that the Constitution expressly recognized the validity of treaties which had been made under the articles of confederation, in which such a provision is inserted.

He there ignores the ground on which the decisions of the Supreme Court are based, and attempts to make an excuse for these decisions which has no foundation in fact. He ignores the real ground of all those decisions, and that is that a treaty is the supreme law of the land. As stated by the Supreme Court in 100 U. S., 488:

A treaty can not be the supreme law of the land, that is, of all the United States, if any act of a State legislature can stand in its way. If the constitution of a State must give way to a treaty and fall before it, can it be questioned whether the less power, an act of the State legislature, must not be prostrate? It is the declared will of the people of the United States that every treaty made by the authority of the United States shall be superior to the constitution and laws of any individual State, and their will alone is to decide.

For the same reason a treaty sets aside an act of Congress, and is the supreme law of the land until it is repealed by a subsequent act of Congress.

This general question before us here has been before the Senate for a hundred years. The Executive and the Senate have taken one position, and that is that a treaty is the supreme law of the land. That position has been sustained by the Supreme Court. On the other hand, during all these hundred years, the House of Representatives has, as a rule, insisted that they should be considered in reference to certain treaties. That does not relieve the Senate of the duty of standing for its prerogatives and its rights, and insisting that the rights of the Executive shall be maintained.

The point here is this: The Constitution gives to the Executive, with the advice and consent of the Senate, the right to negotiate treaties. We have been negotiating commercial treaties continuously prior and subsequent to the adoption of the Constitution, and those treaties have been sustained as the supreme law of the land.

It is said that the Constitution has given to Congress the right to regulate commerce with foreign nations, to lay and collect taxes, duties, and imposts, and to the House of Representatives the right to originate bills for raising revenue, and to the President and Senate the right to make and ratify treaties. These are all coequal and independent powers. One does not interfere with the other. One is not exclusive of the other. A law passed in any of the ways provided by the Constitution is the supreme law of the land until it is changed or repealed. A treaty made by the Executive and ratified by the Senate is the supreme law of the land as well as an act of Congress. If the Congress is not satisfied with the treaty it has a perfect right to repeal it, let the consequences be what they may, but until such action is taken the treaty remains a part of the supreme law.

Now, Mr. President, I have gone over at greater length than I perhaps ought to have done the history of the treaty-making clause of the Federal Constitution. I have given a sketch of the proceedings in Congress, commencing with 1796, when that clause was under consideration, and I have given a brief statement of the decisions of our Supreme Court, and writers on constitutional and international law, on the subject.

From all of these authorities it will be seen that the authority of the House in reference to treaties has been argued and discussed for more than a century, and has never been definitely settled in Congress, and perhaps never will be. The House, each time the question was considered, insisted upon its powers, but nevertheless it has never declined to make an appropriation to carry out the stipulations of a treaty, and I contend that it was bound to do this, at least as much as Congress can be bound to do anything, when the faith of the nation had been pledged. And this appears to me to be the only case in which any action by the House is necessary, unless the treaty itself stipulates, expressly or by necessary implication, for such Congressional action.

I have given my views upon the constitutional powers of the President and Senate, whatever may be the policy hereafter adopted by the Senate in dealing with the question.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ATLANTA, GA.

Mr. CLAY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 361) for the erection of a public building at Atlanta, Ga., be taken up and passed. It will not lead to any debate. A similar bill passed the Senate at the last session without any opposition.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 7, before the word

"hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, additional land adjoining the post-office and custom-house building at Atlanta, Ga., and to enlarge said building, at a total cost not to exceed $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the purchase of additional ground and the enlargement of the public building at Atlanta, Ga."

CAR TRANSFER OVER DULUTH CANAL.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 2008) to authorize the city of Duluth, Minn., to construct and maintain, or cause to be constructed and maintained, a car transfer over the Duluth Canal, and for that purpose to occupy certain lands of the United States.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT BROWNS POINT, WASHINGTON.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 258) providing additional funds for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal station at Browns Point, on Commencement Bay, State of Washington.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to appropriate the additional sum of $3,200 to establish a light-house and fog-signal station at Browns Point, on Commencement Bay, State of Washington, under the direction of the Light-House Board.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HUGH R. RICHARDSON.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3106) granting an increase of pension to Hugh R. Richardson.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Hugh R. Richardson, late captain Company F, Second Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TROOPS IN THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, a few days since the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], in the course of some observations submitted by him, made the statement that in the war of the Revolution the State of Massachusetts had furnished more troops on land than all the States south of Mason and Dixon's line. He said he did that without discrediting the valor or patriotism of the people of that section of the country. I am quite sure that the Senator from Massachusetts would not make any mistake if he knew it, and that he would not commit to the RECORD a statement of that sort unless he had historical facts to sustain it.

He was supported by his colleague, the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who stated that the figures submitted were correct and were taken from a report made by the first Secretary of War, General Knox, in answer to a request made by the House of Representatives for this very information, as to how many troops had been furnished by the several colonies during the struggle for independence.

Mr. President, I can not see whether either one of those distinguished gentlemen is in his seat or not. I hope they are here. I know that neither one of them would make a statement of that sort with any intention to disparage or discredit any section of the country. But I am also interested in the truth of history. Somebody said that history is philosophy teaching by example. Napoleon said that history is simply the lies that are agreed upon. I am perfectly aware that one historian after another repeats the mistakes of the first. It has been so from the days of Herodotus until to-day.

I recollect an incident that occurred in the House of Representatives when the question came up as to how the independence of the Republic of Texas was recognized. It was stated by a member from the State of Texas, who was unusually well-informed generally, that it came because the resolution passed by the Congress of the United States was signed by Gen. Andrew Jackson, President, on the very last day of his last Administration. I denied that to be a fact, and stated to him that he was mistaken about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair). Will the Senator from Mississippi suspend for a moment?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask that the Senator from Mississippi be allowed to continue his statement.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have the bill laid before the Senate, and then I shall make no objection to the Senator continuing his statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and, if there is no objection, the Senator from Mississippi will proceed. The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator from Mississippi proceeds, will he allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to give a notice, or to make a statement. I am very desirous to call up for early action the joint resolution (S. R. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, respecting the succession to the Presidency in certain cases. It proposes to provide for the succession in a case which seems to have been omitted, certainly by the letter of the Constitution, where the President-elect or the Vice-President-elect, or both, die or become incapacitated before they are qualified.

That is a very important matter, of course, as every amendment of the Constitution is. The joint resolution has been carefully considered by the Judiciary Committee twice, and in each case there has been a unanimous report; and it has passed the Senate, without dissent, so far as I now remember, certainly once, and I am quite confident twice. So it will not take very long.

I should like, if this bill last very long, to get half an hour, and to see whether that will be enough to dispose of the joint resolution. I should like to have it get through so as to go to the State legislatures while they are in session this winter, if it can be done.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I did not exactly understand the Senator. I could not hear distinctly what he wants. I am disposed to yield to the Senator, but I do not understand what he wants to do.

Mr. HOAR. I asked the Senator to yield that I might give a notice.

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I did not ask him to delay his speech, but merely stated that I desire to find a brief time pretty soon for considering the proposed constitutional amendment about the succession of the Presidency, which I hope and believe will not take very long. I gave that as a notice so that Senators might have their attention turned to the subject.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I was about to relate an instance to show how historians copy each other without original investigation, and are just as apt to perpetuate a mistake as an accurate statement. A distinguished Representative from Texas said that the Republic of Texas was recognized by the United States by the signature of Andrew Jackson, in the last days of his last Administration, to a resolution passed by the Congress of the United States. I denied that, because there were at that time no joint resolutions introduced on that subject; there were Senate resolutions and there were House resolutions, and it was impossible for that to be true, because of that fact, and also because I knew that on the 3d day of March, 1837, he had appointed Emil La Branch, of New Orleans, chargé d'affaires to the Texas Republic, and that was the only recognition the Republic ever had, and all that it needed.

I was confronted with Brown's History of Texas, and that book stated positively that in the last days of the Administration of the patriotic statesman and warrior, Andrew Jackson, he signed the joint resolution. I was not satisfied with that and we consulted the "Life of Sam Houston," by somebody, and it repeated the same statement. We then went to the Library, to Mr. Spofford; the great bibliographer was called upon. He consulted sundry encyclopedias, and all the way through there was the same statement made. I telegraphed up to the State Department to learn from the records what had happened, and it appeared that Andrew Jackson never had signed any resolution, but that he had recognized the independence of the Texas Republic by appointing Emil La Branch as chargé d'affaires to that Republic on the 3d of March, 1837.

Now, Mr. President, the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is a writer of history—histories that are exceedingly useful, and exceedingly instructive and entertaining, and which have a considerable vogue. While the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] may not write histories, he has made addresses before literary associations and bar associations and other memorial associations which have been read with delight everywhere all over the country, and which are full of bits of history and of recollection that are not only useful, but exceedingly delightful. So I acquit them of any intention whatever to embalm in the RECORD a statement that is not strictly borne out by the facts.

I wish to state that in the same report of General Knox certain qualifying statements were made. In the first place, I want to say that Dr. J. L. M. Curry, formerly a member of the House, one of the most distinguished divines and one of the most eloquent orators of to-day, ex-minister to Spain and the administrator of the Peabody fund, a gentleman in every way, painstaking in his researches historically, the author of several valuable books, makes a statement here which very much explains why there should be such a discrepancy as the Senator from Massachusetts believes. In the first place, however, the discrepancy does not really exist. As a matter of fact, there was furnished by Virginia 56,721 soldiers out of a population of 110,934, and South Carolina furnished 31,131. South Carolina out of every 42 citizens that could bear arms furnished 37. This is taken from General Knox's information to Congress. South Carolina furnished 37 out of every 42 citizens capable of bearing arms. Massachusetts furnished only 32 out of every 42 capable of bearing arms.

Mr. HOAR. What year was that?

Mr. MONEY. That was during the entire struggle. General Knox also says:

In some years of the greatest exertion of the Southern States there were no returns whatever of the militia.

You will find that in the American State Papers (Military Affairs), 1, 14, etc.

Taking the general population of all the statistics, the North sent forth to the war 100 out of every 227 of military age; the South sent out 100 out of every 209 of military age. So the figures decisively favor the South. I do not say that the South was any more patriotic nor any more anxious to fight than the North was, but these are the true figures, which are entirely in discord with those that were submitted to the Senate the other day, of course with no intention to misrepresent.

Now, I am going to read two or three pages from Dr. Curry's book, which absolutely settle the whole business.

I wish to say, however, that one of the most important actions of the war, one which was as effective in its results as that of the surrender at Saratoga or Yorktown, was the surrender of Ferguson's command at Kings Mountain, in which all the British were captured who were not killed, Colonel Ferguson himself being one of the slain; and that battle was fought by Colonels Campbell, Williams, Sevier, and others, who led farmers picked up from their homes, and who went simply for the fray and returned, and there was no roster, no record whatever.

It is unfortunate—

Says this historian—

that the habits of life of the Southern people and their contempt for vainglory, love of money, and mercenary services prevented any adequate preservation of the materials of such a history. In consequence of this contemporary neglect to record and to save, these Southern States have suffered in failing to receive the bounties and pensions, as well as the historical recognition, properly due to them.

He then quotes from Colonel Higginson's centennial speech before the Massachusetts Historical Society, in which he says:

No set of new colonists, probably, ever recorded their own history so promptly and continuously as did the founders of New England. The leaders of the Plymouth and Salem colonies wrote from the very beginning; each new colony was born writing, as one might say—as if a baby were to raise its head from the cradle and demand pen and ink to put down his expressions. They kept back nothing so far as they knew it. This from the earliest period; and when we come to the storm and stress of the Revolution it is the same thing. Men came through it historians of themselves.

That is the difference, as far as bits of history are concerned which have been preserved in the North, and it is very well that it was so. But that was not the case in the South.

It might easily be shown, even with the scant memoranda most providentially preserved, that the South, in expense and battles and soldiers, bore her full share in the struggle for independence. In Baltimore the first cruisers were fitted out, which were the pioneers of the American Navy, and Maryland furnished more than 20,000 men to the Revolutionary army. In 1790 the white male population over 16 years of age in Pennsylvania and Virginia was about the same, the former being 110,788 and the latter 110,934, and yet, according to the official estimate presented to the First Congress by the Secretary of War, Gen. Henry Knox, of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania furnished 34,965 soldiers and Virginia 56,721.

New Hampshire had a military population 513 larger than South Carolina, and she contributed 14,906 soldiers and South Carolina 31,131. The latter quota is nearly equal to that of Pennsylvania, which had triple the military population and twice the total population, free and slave. South Carolina outnumbered New York's troops 29,836, although New York had much more than double the military population and 40 per cent more of total population. Connecticut and Massachusetts did more than any of the States not Southern, and yet South Carolina sent to its armies 37 out of every 42 citizens capable of bearing arms. Massachusetts sent 32, Connecticut 30, and New Hampshire 18. At the North nearly every man who served was entered on the rolls, while, as General Knox says, "in some years of the greatest exertion of the Southern States there are no returns whatever of the militia."

I will state here that I know an instance personally of a young lady who desired to enter the Association of Colonial Dames or Daughters of the Revolution, or something of that sort. She traced one of her ancestors to Massachusetts, to Silas Clark; and Silas Clark had enlisted eight several times during the seven years' struggle, once for only eight days, and once for only two months. I was told this by the father of the girl, one of the most distinguished divines, book reviewers, and editors in the United States.

Generally, at the North the war assumed a regular character, at the South it was brought home to every fireside, and there was scarcely a man who did not shoulder his musket, even though not regularly in the field. Again, while sending its troops freely to defend any part of the country, it fought, in very large degree, its own battles, and the losses sustained in supporting this home conflict were far heavier than any amount of taxation ever levied. "Certain partisan leaders in Vermont kept up, on their part, a shrewd parleying, now with the British authorities for the purpose of conjuring the storm of war from their borders, and now with the Continental Congress for the purpose of coercing that hesitating body into a recognition of the territorial independence."

He does not say from whom he quotes, but this is a quotation.

A Pennsylvania historian says: "Pennsylvania fought in the Revolution like a man with one arm tied behind his back." The Declaration of Independence "was looked upon by many at the time as a party triumph," and dissidence of opinion—a civic feud—drove men of the highest character from the public service. John Adams called the triumph of the Revolutionary party a righteous overthrow of "cowardice and toryism," and it was constantly alleged, "with much iteration of phrase," that "the proprietory gentlemen" were more solicitous to keep the scabbards of their swords unsoiled than to wield the swords in a battle for the rights of the colonies.

These extracts are from The Nation, of August, 1893, and Elliott's Debates.

According to General Knox's report, the North sent to the Army 100 men for every 227 of military age, as shown by the census of 1790, and the South 100 for every 209.

Here is an important fact that I want to bring to the attention of Senators:

In 1848, 1 out of every 62 of the men of military age in 1790 in the North was a Revolutionary pensioner, and 1 out of every 110 in the South.

Nearly twice as many men on the pension list.

Of these pensioners New England had 3,146, more than there were in all the South, and New York two-thirds as many, though she contributed not one-seventh as many men to the war. These are authentic historical facts, and are not presented by way of recrimination, but to establish equality and justice. If there were inequality of burdens, if the South made heavy sacrifices, they were cheerful free-will offerings on the altar of liberty. (2 Henry, 9, 69, 155; 10 Bancroft, 479.)

Mr. President, it is unnecessary to read further. I simply make this statement in the interest of truth, that it may not go down to future generations disproportioned and mangled. I could not for a moment believe that those honorable Senators intended that there should be a misunderstanding, much less a misstatement of these facts. I put these facts in here so that the people may understand that the South did its full share, and more, in that great struggle for independence.

Now, while I say nothing in the way of reflection upon those two distinguished Senators, I will make mention of the fact that Mr. Bancroft, the great American historian, in publishing his second edition cut out some pages appearing in the first edition that were complimentary to Virginia in that struggle for independence, as you will find by comparing the first and second editions.

I should be very glad indeed if some impartial historian would sift these facts, bring out exactly what is the truth, and present them to us in such form that there can be no longer any dispute as to the measure of sacrifices made by both sections. All honor is due to the North because, as it has been said, the shot that was fired at Concord reverberated around the world, followed by the fights at Lexington and Breed's Hill. I recollect the burning words of Patrick Henry, the orator of the Revolution, when he said in the Virginia house of burgesses: "Why stand we here idle, when the next gale that sweeps from the North may bring to our ears the clash of resounding arms! Our brethren are already in the field"—and they were. They took their part in those battles and nobly sustained their reputation for independence, for patriotism, and for courage, and no less did the South do its duty in that great struggle, and it also should be awarded the meed of praise.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate from the important and pressing business of the session by discussing ancient history, however delightful the memories it may inspire, but I think I ought to set myself right in regard to the matter which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] has brought up.

I had no purpose in what I said of instituting any comparison between different parts of the country. Still less had I any purpose of instituting a comparison which should be in favor of any part of the country other than my own. The way the matter came up was this: The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] made some remarks which drew the attention of the whole Senate, in which he spoke with a great deal of earnestness and emphasis in opposition to the accepted American belief that an improvised military or naval force, local in times of peace to particular States, was of any value to the country in the sudden emergencies of a great war. I rose to express my dissent from that proposition and stated what had been the service of the fighting force at sea in the Revolutionary war.

I made my statement on the authority of several recent historical investigations, one especially by the Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale, one of the most accomplished living men, that the number of sailors put at sea by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts exceeded the force on land—I am not sure now that it was not all of the States, but at any rate it was of a very considerable aggregate of States—and I said in passing what I wish I had not said, not because it was not true, but because I see how it might have been misunderstood, that that was in addition to the State of Massachusetts having on land a force greater than that of all the States south of the Potomac combined. I think I added then that there were some peculiar disadvantages under which the Southern States labored, those States being the theater of war and very sparsely settled, while we had a compact population and had got rid of the invader early in the war.

Mr. President, I should be the last man on earth, I think, to disparage or discredit the contributions of the Southern States to the achieving of our independence or to the establishment of the great institutions which followed.

Perhaps I might, without great want of delicacy, be permitted to quote what John C. Calhoun said of an ancestor of mine who served in the Continental Congress and in the Revolution, to be descended from whom is almost the dearest pride of my life. Mr. Calhoun said that he was faithful to the interests of the South when the statesmen of the South itself did not fully understand them, and that his name ought to be written in letters of gold and live forever. I do not want to say anything in my humble place which would be thought for a moment to blot out my right by inheritance to be proud of that tribute to my grandfather.

I think—and I have said it more than once at home—that among the noblest examples of lofty patriotism and lofty generosity in all human history is the example of the generosity of the people of the South, especially of the people of Virginia, and also almost equaled by that of the people of South Carolina, to Boston, Mass., in the time of their sore distress. The British Government undertook to starve out Boston by the Boston port bill. Neither Virginia nor South Carolina had the slightest particle of personal interest in that matter; their trade was not affected; their commerce did not suffer; they were not at that time engaged in manufactures, which England was suppressing, and they would probably have found it more for their advantage to buy what they had to buy of England than of Massachusetts, but they did not stop to think of that. The people of Virginia sent to Boston their contributions of money, of flour and other supplies with a generosity unexampled before that time, and hardly ever equaled or approached since in the history of human generosity. Not only at tide water, but the farmers in the distant and remote mountain districts of Virginia held their conventions, made their subscriptions, and drew their supplies of wheat and of flour to tide water. Now, generous Virginia, I suppose, has forgotten that transaction and disdains to remember her generosity, but Massachusetts will never forget it.

It was equaled, if anything could equal it, by the admirable and glorious manner in which Charleston, in South Carolina, uttered the expressions of the sympathies of her people. The governor undertook to suppress the South Carolina house of assembly, but in order that the governor might not dissolve them they closed their doors when letters came from Massachusetts, and would not open them until they had expressed their affection and sympathy for that people. When Josiah Quincy went down to meet the Rutledges, the Gadsdens, and the other great men of that time in South Carolina, who had not a particle of reason for sympathizing with us, except that they loved liberty, he found friends and sympathizers and counselors and companions. We have not forgotten those things; and may my arm be stricken from the shoulder blade and may my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth if ever I say anything which will seem to be inspired by other than gratitude.

But, Mr. President, the figures which I gave in passing, without a thought of exciting anybody's sensibilities, I mentioned, as I said, thinking of what our sailors had done at sea. I mentioned also that that was in addition to the number of troops furnished by Massachusetts, larger than that of all the States south of the Potomac together; but I think I added at the time—and if I did not I will make it clear now—that that was not because those communities were not all as alive as we were to the interest of the cause, not because their men were not as brave or as self-sacrificing, but it was because with their large and scattered populations they were not as able to send organized militia into the field as we were from our populous towns. After we had got rid of the invader on the 20th of March, 1776, when he was driven out of Boston bag and baggage, routed horse, foot, and dragoons, and his ships followed them, we had no trouble; but the Virginia planter or the South Carolina planter never could know but that in the morning his own plantation, his home, might not be the scene of a British attack, and he could not do, therefore, what these communities could. After March, 1776, it was really a foreign and not a domestic war, so far as the hardships of that war were concerned.

Now, do not let me be misunderstood for a moment. I could not go home to Massachusetts with comfort if I was understood to have made any derogatory remarks about the gallantry of the Southern people in that great Revolution.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator permit me one moment?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I am sorry the Senator was not in at the beginning of my remarks, for I then said that the Senator had given full credit to the South for its share in the struggle and the controversy; that his intention was absolutely good, as was also that of his colleague [Mr. LODGE], and that I simply wanted to correct the cold figures of the statement the Senator made, and I did it from the same authority. That was all.

I want to say to the Senator again, while I disclaim any intention, as I did at the beginning, of anything but praise for the Senator and his colleague in this matter, for I know they did not intend to make any misrepresentation, as I said at first when the statement was made it tortured the credulity of this side of the House. We could not believe that those figures were exactly true, and, of course, we went into an investigation. I simply wanted to bring out the figures themselves. In no way would I for a moment discredit the good intention of either of the Senators referred to, for I know they are incapable of making a misrepresentation, and I wish to commend the good grace with which the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] approved of the courage and the patriotism of the Southern people in that struggle.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, as I have just said, the statement I made about the function of the Navy in that war was made on the authority of several recent investigations, but especially the paper of Dr. Hale.

I was understood by one Senator—I think not by the Senator from Mississippi—to have said in reply that, after all, it was not the valor of soldiers or of sailors, but commercial greed, which caused England to make peace. I said, and I repeat, that England would have been able to maintain the struggle, and would have maintained it indefinitely, but for the demands of the merchants of Bristol and Liverpool and London; and, as an example of what they were suffering, I stated that the rates of marine insurance in the Mediterranean on British vessels before the French alliance had got up to 28 per cent. But what was it that brought those rates up to 28 per cent? It was Paul Jones, Abram Whipple, and men like them, and hundreds of naval commanders, either as privateers or in our little Navy, who had inspired such terror at sea by their valor that British commerce could not live any longer. It was the valor of the American sailor and soldier that had brought this thing to pass, and so Lord North and George III changed their ground.

In regard to these figures about the number of Massachusetts soldiers as compared with those from the States south of the Potomac, they were taken from documents submitted to an early Congress, in the Administration of Washington, by the Secretary of War, and published then as the authoritative figures without anybody's dissent, when three-fourths, I suppose, of the members of both Houses of Congress had been engaged either in civil or military service during the war of the Revolution.

General Knox, a famous soldier, who had seen service South and North, as had General Greene and other Northern soldiers—

General Knox, the Secretary of War, prepared these figures. General Knox, of Massachusetts, and General Greene, of Rhode Island, had gone down South during the latter years of the war, and had rendered glorious service to that section, where General Greene found his honored grave in Savannah, just discovered again within six months, I think. The Senator from Georgia will remember.

Mr. BACON. It has been within a short time,

Mr. HOAR. Within a short time, at any rate. But what did they do which could repay what General Washington and the Virginia riflemen under Morgan did at the time of the siege of Boston, years before? I do not speak of that by way of boast, but only to show that, imperfectly and partially at least, we paid our debt, or tried to.

Here are the figures. I shall read them, and then I shall ask to have added to my speech the remaining pages of the document.

Mr. TELLER. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. HOAR. I am reading from a document issued from the War Office of the United States May 10, 1790, signed by Henry Knox, Secretary of War.

WAR OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES, May 10, 1790.

In obedience to the order of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of War submits the statement, hereunto annexed, of the troops and militia furnished from time to time by the several States toward the support of the late war.

The numbers of the regular troops having been stated from the official returns deposited in the War Office may be depended upon, and in all cases where the numbers of militia are stated from the returns the same confidence may be observed.

But in some years of the greatest exertions of the Southern States—

I beg that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] will both listen to what I am now reading—

But in some years of the greatest exertions of the Southern States there are no returns whatever of the militia employed. In this case recourse has been had to the letters of the commanding officer and to well-informed individuals in order to form a proper estimate of the numbers of the militia in service; and although the accuracy of the estimate can not be relied on, yet it is the best information which the Secretary of War can at present obtain. When the accounts of the militia service of the several States shall be adjusted, it is probable that the numbers will be better ascertained.

There are not any documents in the War Office from which accurate returns could be made of the ordnance stores furnished by the several States during the late war. The charges made by the several States against the United States which have been presented by the commissioner of accounts are probably the only evidence which can be obtained on the subject.

All which is humbly submitted to the House of Representatives.

H. KNOX, Secretary of War.

So those Senators will see what I ought to state, and wish to state emphatically, that these accounts, so far as they affect the returns of the militia of the Southern States during the time when those States were making their great exertions, are estimates only of the Secretary of War and not absolutely accurate, though, so far as I know, they were not challenged by anybody at the time, historian or statesman, as not being approximately accurate; but whatever deductions should be made from the statements I have made on that account, let them be made.

For the year 1775 the number of men in the Continental pay from Massachusetts was 16,444.

Conjectural estimate of militia employed in addition to the above.

Virginia, for six months	2,600
Virginia, State corps, for eight months	1,180
	3,180

That is a misprint. The total should be 3,780 instead of 3,180. It makes a grand total of 10,180 for all of these States, as against 16,444 for Massachusetts.

The next year is 1776.

Statement of the troops furnished by the following States, taken from actual returns of the Army, for the year 1776.

States.	Numbers of men in Continental pay.	Numbers of militia.	Total of militia and Continentals.
New Hampshire	3,019
Massachusetts	13,372	4,000	17,372
Rhode Island	798	1,102	1,900
Connecticut	6,390	5,737	12,127
Delaware	609	145	754
Maryland	637	2,592	3,329
Virginia	6,181
North Carolina	1,134
South Carolina	2,069
Georgia	351
New York	3,629	1,715	5,344
Pennsylvania	5,519	4,876	10,395
New Jersey	3,193	5,893	9,086
Grand total	46,891	26,060	72,951

Then, here is a conjectural estimate of militia in addition to the above:

Conjectural estimate of militia employed in addition to the above.

New Hampshire, averaged at four months		1,000
Massachusetts, averaged at four months		3,000
Connecticut, averaged at four months		1,000
New York, averaged at four months		2,750
Virginia, averaged at four months
North Carolina, averaged at eight months		3,000
South Carolina, averaged at six months		4,000
Georgia	750
Georgia, State troops	1,200

These are short terms which are averaged; Massachusetts, 3,000, which would bring her up to 19,444; Virginia, 2,750, which would bring her up to about 6,800; North Carolina, 3,000, which would bring her up to 4,134; South Carolina, 4,000, which would bring her up to 6,069; Georgia, 750, State troops, 1,200, making 1,950, which would bring her up to between 5,000 and 5,100.

Now, I will go on and give the figures as to the other years if the Senator would like to have them.

Mr. BACON. I have them all.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator has them all. But I will print the whole in my remarks.

A STATEMENT OF THE NUMBER OF NONCOMMISSIONED OFFICERS AND PRIVATES OF THE REGULAR TROOPS AND MILITIA FURNISHED BY THE SEVERAL STATES FROM TIME TO TIME FOR THE SUPPORT OF THE LATE WAR.

N. B.—The Army in the Northern Department discharged the 5th November, 1783, and that in the Southern States on the 15th November, 1783.

H. KNOX, Secretary of War.

WAR OFFICE OF THE UNITED STATES, May 10, 1790.

Mr. LODGE. The Philippine bill, I believe, has been laid before the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me to have something to say——

Mr. LODGE. I trust the afternoon will not be consumed by this historical debate. It is exceedingly interesting, but there will be some other opportunity for it, if the Senator will forgive me. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] gave notice that he desired to speak on his amendment to the bill.

Mr. MORGAN rose.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Alabama will allow me to proceed for a little while.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection to the Senator's proceeding as long as he wants to.

Mr. LODGE. If the afternoon is to be devoted——

Mr. BACON. I will address myself to the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LODGE. If the afternoon is to be devoted to this interesting historical discussion, before it continues, as it must by unanimous consent, for it can continue in no other way, I should——

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will pardon an interruption, can we not speak on this question on the Philippine tariff bill? You can not gag us in that way. You can not gag us in the effort to force the Philippine discussion.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator surely does not think I have any such idea.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Georgia has asked permission to discuss this very question, which has been elaborately presented by the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Mississippi. How does the Senator from Massachusetts get his own consent to appear so invidious or so ungracious, or whatever other term may be permissible, to prohibit some little additional light being thrown on this subject?

Mr. LODGE. I have no desire to prevent the throwing of light on any subject, and I am perfectly aware that I can not prevent any subject of discussion being discussed here this afternoon. All I was now about to say was that I had an impression that I had the floor, although I had some reason to doubt that, and that while I occupied it, as I was in charge of the bill and responsible for it, I thought it only proper to say to the Senate that the Senator from Alabama had notified me that he would like, when the bill was laid before the Senate, to address himself to the amendment which he has offered. If he does not desire to go on this afternoon and wishes to yield to the Senator from Georgia, then, before I yield the floor for the discussion of these very interesting revolutionary questions, I should like, if I might have the privilege, to put in something relating to the Philippine debate, although I know it is far removed from the present debate.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Georgia will pardon me for one word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the junior Senator from Massachusetts yield, and if so to what Senator?

Mr. HOAR. I was about to say——

Mr. LODGE. I do not yield the floor. However, I yield to my colleague.

Mr. HOAR. I want to say to the Senator from South Carolina that I think the most effective argument against this whole Philippine business——

Mr. TILLMAN. Is the discussion of the patriotic impulses of our ancestors.

Mr. HOAR. Is a discussion of the Revolution. I think it is a pretty good atmosphere to get into this Chamber and to apply to modern conditions.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think so, too.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was saying when I yielded for a question that I desired, as the afternoon was to be given to the Revolution, to put in something relating to another subject which we have been debating here. I shall detain the Senate but a moment.

As the Senate is well aware, some remarks attributed to General Wheaton were brought up by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] day before yesterday and commented on with great severity. I myself very greatly regretted seeing in the RECORD what I did not hear at the moment, that the Senator from Idaho referred to General Wheaton as a charity boy. I was very sorry that he should have done so, and I desire to put upon the record of the Senate and to read to the Senate the record of General Wheaton.

He was born in Michigan the 15th of July, 1838, and appointed from Illinois. He was appointed first sergeant Company E, Eighth Illinois Infantry, on the 20th of April, 1861, and served until the 20th of July, 1864. His subsequent record is as follows:

LOYD WHEATON.

Born July 15, 1838, in Michigan, and appointed from Illinois.

First sergeant Company E, Eighth Illinois Infantry	20 Apr., 1861, to 24 July, 1861
First lieutenant, Eighth Illinois Infantry	25 July, 1861
Captain	25 Mar., 1862

Major	28 Aug., 1863
Lieutenant-colonel	25 Nov., 1864
Honorably mustered out	4 May, 1866
Captain, Twenty-fourth United States Infantry	28 July, 1866
Unassigned	14 Apr., 1869
Assigned to Twentieth Infantry	1 Sept., 1869
Major, Twentieth Infantry	14 Oct., 1891
Lieutenant-colonel Twenty-second Infantry	31 May, 1895
Transferred to Twentieth Infantry	11 Sept., 1895
Transferred to Second Infantry	30 Dec., 1898
Brigadier-general, U. S. Volunteers	27 May, 1898, to 15 Apr., 1899
Colonel Twentieth Infantry	6 Feb., 1899
Brigadier-general, United States Volunteers	15 Apr., 1899
Major-general, United States Volunteers	18 June, 1900
Major-general, United States Army	30 Mar., 1901

Brevetted colonel of volunteers March 26, 1865, "for faithful and meritorious services during the campaign against the city of Mobile and its defenses;" major, United States Army, March 2, 1867, "for gallant and meritorious services in siege of Vicksburg, Miss.;" lieutenant-colonel March 2, 1867, "for gallant and meritorious services in the assault on Fort Blakely, Ala.," and major-general, United States Volunteers, June 19, 1899, "for conspicuous gallantry in action against insurgent forces near Imus, P. I., June 19, 1899."

Awarded medal of honor for distinguished gallantry in the assault on Fort Blakely, Ala., April 9, 1865, leading the right wing of his regiment, springing through an embrasure against a strong fire of artillery and musketry, the first to enter the enemy's works, while serving as lieutenant-colonel, Eighth Illinois Infantry.

The further details of his service I have here. I got the record from the War Department as soon as I could, and I shall ask to have it printed in full in my remarks.

Principally with his regiment in Alabama, Louisiana, and Texas from 1861 to 1865, and since his appointment in the Regular Army, in the Southern States from 1866 to 1869, and on the Western frontier to 1898, with the exception of two years' recruiting service.

Since the beginning of the war with Spain he has been commanding a brigade in Alabama and Florida to December, 1898, and in Cuba to January, 1899; en route to Manila to February 23, 1899, and commanding a brigade in the Eighth Army Corps to April 18, 1900; in command of the Department of Northern Luzon, Philippine Islands, to November 30, 1901, and of the Department of North Philippines to present date.

General Wheaton's appointment as major-general of volunteers was urgently recommended by Generals Otis and MacArthur in recognition of and as a reward for his exceptional and conspicuous service in action in the Philippines, where he has participated in all the hardest-fought battles, where success has been due in equal measure to his cool determination and ability to handle troops in trying circumstances. He was made a major-general in the Regular Army for conspicuous services in connection with the capture of Aguinaldo.

I did not know before the details of General Wheaton's record. I think that that record is an honor not only to him, but to the country which he has served all his life long. I do not know what may have suggested calling him a charity boy, unless it was the idea that he was a West Pointer, which he was not. He entered the Army as a private. He is a very gallant officer, of singularly fine record, incapable, as I believe, of any conduct unbecoming an officer. I do not see from either of the dispatches that he did anything except to comment upon the remarks of President Schurman, of Cornell, which, in my judgment, he had a right to do.

Mr. President, I will also say that I regret very much, and I can not but feel that my friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] will regret also having applied any such epithet as "charity boy" to him even if he had been a graduate of West Point. The graduates of West Point and Annapolis are a body of young men who are invited there by the laws of the United States. They receive their education from the Government, and they render back all they have received and have rendered it back many times over. West Point has given to the country such soldiers as Lee and Grant, Sherman and Sheridan and Johnston, and Thomas and Stonewall Jackson. It has given to us in these later times some of the men most distinguished in our military service, and Annapolis has given to us many of our great naval officers. It seems to me that these men and their fellow-graduates have repaid a hundred-fold all that the country ever did for them.

Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho is the graduate of a great university. I am the graduate of another sister university. Those universities give to all who come within their gates an education at a fee for tuition far, far below what the actual cost is. They are enabled to do it by reason of the wise benevolence extending, in the case of Yale and Harvard, over two centuries and more of time. Those two universities also hold scholarships given by benefactors to afford poor boys, unable to secure an education in any other way, the opportunity to get an education there. I am sure the Senator from Idaho, with his memories of the great university of which he is a graduate, would be the last to say that any man who had gone there, whether he had received a scholarship or without assistance had simply received the tuition which the institution opens to all—I am sure he would be the last to apply to any of those men, many of whom have brought great honor to the United States, the term of "charity students."

If we would not apply it to our own universities, or to the universities of the country at large, certainly we ought not to apply it to the great schools which the United States has established, not to give charity to anybody, but to give the opportunity to her sons who may be fit to learn to defend her in the best way on land and sea alike.

It is not within my province especially to defend the Army or the Navy, but I feel, for one, a very deep sense of gratitude to both those services for all they have done, and I am slow for my part to criticise any of the officers, especially any officer with so remarkable a record of honorable service as that which I have had the pleasure to lay before the Senate in reference to General Wheaton. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, when this subject was discussed, not quite so elaborately as it has been discussed by the Senator from Massachusetts, but very fully by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], I learned that General Wheaton was not a graduate of West Point. I then paid him a great tribute for his gallantry and bravery. I think all of us enjoyed very much the splendid dissertation of the Senator from Massachusetts on the Army and on the colleges of the country, and I was pleased, after they have telegraphed from Manila that General Wheaton used the language attributed to him, to hear him defend General Wheaton for that. He started out this debate by saying that there was nothing in it; that we should not condemn these men for uttering language which they did not utter. Now, after all this quibbling, at the very end of it, he stands up and delivers a learned dissertation and admits that our contention was correct.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator, unless——

Mr. DUBOIS. I should like to know from the Senator from Massachusetts if he thinks Army officers have the right to criticise the Senate when it is attempting to enact legislation, or to criticise the course it is taking?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I thought the Senator asked me a question. I will not interrupt him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Idaho permit me to say a word?

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have in my hand what purports to be a dispatch from the Associated Press, which is published this morning, and that dispatch says:

General Wheaton's vigorous criticism referred entirely to Professor Schurman's speech at Boston, though he holds the professor in high personal esteem.

Mr. DUBOIS. I understand that perfectly, and I will say in this connection, too——

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to add, if the Senator will permit me, that I think the Senator from Idaho will not contend that the man who is at the head of our armies in the Philippines is not entirely within his province when he criticises any utterance of a private citizen in the city of Boston. I do not think the Senator will contend that General Wheaton has not a right to criticise an utterance of Professor Schurman, who is not a member of the Senate or in Government employ.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will contend that it is in exceedingly bad taste, to say the least, for an Army officer, in active service, to criticise the opinion of a gentleman who has gone there to gather facts officially and to present to the American people.

But I want to say, in addition, to the Senator from New Hampshire that the dispatch started out by saying that the civil and military authorities were all agreed in criticism of the minority of the Senate for their substitute. Then it went on to state what General Wheaton said, carrying the impression to anyone who read it that General Wheaton not only agreed with the criticism mentioned, but in addition said this also.

I want to state, while I am on my feet, that I am glad the gentlemen on the other side are forced to admit that General Wheaton used this language. I will say, furthermore, that General Wheaton censored the dispatch, and both of them, and there is a censorship in Manila.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] yesterday read an interview with Governor Taft, and the Senator from Ohio put an interpretation upon the interview that Governor Taft said that there was no censorship. The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] disagreed with that interpretation. I agree with the senior Senator from Massachusetts. I do not think the Senator from Ohio put the proper interpretation upon Governor Taft's language. I do not believe that Governor Taft meant to say there is no censorship there. I will read what Governor Taft said:

> Although there was a time when, for military reasons, it was not advisable to make public everything occurring in the Philippines, the necessity for such secrecy is over, and no effort is now being made to conceal any part of the truth from the people of this country.

I do not believe that that can be tortured into meaning that Governor Taft said there is no censorship. Governor Taft is a fellow-graduate of mine of the distinguished university to which the Senator from Massachusetts referred. I know him personally, and have the utmost respect for him, and I would believe any statement he would make. I do not believe he would make a statement which was intended to mislead; and I say there is a censorship, in my judgment, in Manila.

I will tell you what they do. No correspondent can send a dispatch from there until after he has filed a copy of it with the military authorities, and the dispatch which he puts in the cable company's office must be an exact duplicate of the one which he furnishes the military authorities. Now, the gentlemen on the other side can quibble over that if they want to. I think it is a censorship. That would be my interpretation of it. Those are the facts as they exist there.

There was much heat in the debate yesterday over the question of censorship, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] contending that it was in vogue there; the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] and others insisting that it was not. I state the facts, and I think if in this debate we can get at the facts we can legislate more fairly. I see no necessity for quibbling in regard to these matters. Your side will justify it, no matter what is done. Why not justify it at the start instead of putting us to the trouble of ascertaining these things which you yourselves can ascertain if you go to any sort of pains about it. I do not care to say anything more.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to say, in regard to the censorship, that I did not intend to speak without authority. I had asked the Secretary of War, and I asked him again last night. I took pains in order to find out at the Department. He said there was no censorship there.

Mr. DUBOIS. I give you the facts.

Mr. LODGE. I give you the name of my authority. I shall be very glad to have the names of the authorities who say there is a censorship.

Mr. DUBOIS. It will be very easy to ascertain whether I am correct, and I shall not give the name. I state it on my responsibility as a Senator. Our committee can find out whether or not I am correct.

Mr. LODGE. Very well.

Mr. DUBOIS. You may not think that is censorship. I am stating the facts.

Mr. LODGE. We can very easily call the Secretary of War before us.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from Idaho has referred to my statement here yesterday. I want to say what I then said as to my interpretation of Governor Taft's statement. I have not any doubt that Governor Taft was perfectly sincere. We all know him to be a man of character, and a man who would not undertake to mislead the American people by making an evasive statement or one that was intended to carry any occult meaning. He undertook to answer frankly the inquiry made of him, and his statement was that there was a time when because of military reasons there was some supervision of dispatches, but that for a long time there has been no effort to conceal any part of the truth.

Mr. CULLOM. I will read what he said, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. FORAKER. I put it in the RECORD yesterday.

Mr. CULLOM. Oh, did you?

Mr. FORAKER. It is already in the RECORD.

Mr. CULLOM. Then it is not worth while for me to read it.

Mr. FORAKER. I assume it is the same statement that was put in the RECORD, and which is found on our desks this morning.

Mr. CULLOM. I assume that it is.

Mr. FORAKER. But to ascertain definitely in regard to the matter, I did as the Senator from Massachusetts says he did; I made application to the Secretary of War to know what the truth is as to whether or not a censorship is now maintained in the Philippines. He made to me the same answer that he made to the Senator from Massachusetts—that while for a time there was supervision of press dispatches and other dispatches because of military necessities or supposed necessities, there is not now any supervision or censorship of any kind whatsoever.

He added, however, in the statement to me, which was sent to me by telephone, that to meet this matter a letter had been sent by General Greely, who was in charge of cable and of telegraphic facilities in the Philippines, to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE]. I will yield the floor in order that the Senator from Indiana may put that letter into the RECORD if he so desires. I have seen it, and it meets the whole question, as I understand it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, because of the somewhat extended discussion which has occurred upon the point as to whether a censorship exists between this country and the Philippine Islands, in the discussion of the tariff bill now before us, and because of my statement, on personal knowledge, that there was no such censorship there, I requested the War Department, having control of this matter, to make an official statement, and I received this morning a letter which I now send to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, SIGNAL OFFICE,
Washington, January 29, 1902.

Hon. A. J. BEVERIDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BEVERIDGE: In answer to your telegram of this morning asking whether censorship exists in the Philippine Islands over Signal Corps or other telegraph lines, I have to report as follows:

Censorship in the Philippine Islands has been removed entirely between these islands and Europe and America, save in the case of code messages of unauthorized firms having no standing. The press is entirely free.

Necessarily a limited censorship is maintained over messages in the Philippine Archipelago and to adjacent points where insurgent troops and agents are in active hostility against the United States. Press messages are not censored to any place in Europe or America, but only to points where insurgents are actively engaged, through juntas or other agencies, such as in Hongkong or Singapore.

Very respectfully,
A. W. GREELY,
Brigadier-General, Chief Signal Officer, U. S. A.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, it thus appears, and I have no doubt even to the satisfaction of the Senator from Idaho, that as to communications of the press between the Philippine Islands and America and Europe or any other portions of the world except the two points where the Philippine insurgents may maintain representatives—to wit, Singapore and Hongkong—there is absolute freedom of communication of information.

Mr. DUBOIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. DUBOIS. If it appears that my statement is absolutely correct, and that no dispatch goes out unless a copy is given to the military authorities, would you consider that censorship?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. DUBOIS. I should like to have you answer that question before the facts are ascertained to your satisfaction.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will say upon that subject that I do not think it pertinent to go into a discussion of an hypothesis, which the Senator has not yet established, when we have an official statement before us.

Mr. DUBOIS. I state facts. You might not consider that censorship. This letter does not disprove my statement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will answer the Senator's question, although I can not conceive what light this throws upon the subject in hand, which is an emergency tariff bill. I will say that the filing of a dispatch with the authorities would not seem to me to be censorship if the authorities exercise no power to strike any portion of it out or to indicate what should be sent or what should not be sent. Is that an answer to the Senator's question?

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly; that is an answer to it. There may not be any censorship according to the Senator from Indiana. According to my notion——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Oh, Mr. President, it is not my intention to aid the Senator in his policy of procrastination upon this bill by taking up time in discussing the theory of censorships; though I will remark that he started out with a charge, direct and emphatic, that a censorship existed in the broadest terms. And now when he is confronted not only with a statement from myself, with statements verbally made from the War Department, but also by a letter officially written and signed, we have the whole matter reduced by him to the proportions of his present proposition, to wit, that correspondents are required to file copies of anything sent out, and even that is stated upon authority which the Senator is not willing to give.

Now, Mr. President, I may be excused for declining to enter into a theoretical discussion of censorship in general, and certainly such a meager, attenuated one—I will not call it one at all—such a description of a condition as the Senator from Idaho now gives.

Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that it is admitted, and it never has been denied, that a censorship exists between points in the Philippine Islands where there is insurgent activity. I have no doubt that the Senator will admit, as a perfectly proper military precaution, that there might be censorship between that and any junta established by them at Hongkong and Singapore. And I will ask him whether or not that is not a proper military precaution?

Mr. President, it was not my purpose in rising to consume one single moment of time except to lay before the Senate the letter which had been written to me upon this subject, because I did not think when it was first mentioned, and I do not think now, that it contributes to the enlightenment of the Senate or the country upon the question now before the Senate, which is the emergency tariff bill reported by the committee.

I was surprised at the beginning of the discussion of this question, which we of the majority are ready to vote upon to-day without further discussion, or which we are ready to debate, that the Senator from Idaho should see fit to discuss censorships which do not exist, or the character of a brave and gallant officer whom he charged with being a charity boy.

After that had transpired, it looked to me, and I doubt not it looked to everybody here present upon this side of the Chamber, as though there was no intention on the part of the opposition to really discuss the measure which had been reported back by the Senator from Massachusetts, and which did not need any further elucidation from any Senator upon this side of the Chamber after the Senator from Massachusetts had so ably, clearly, and fully presented its merits and given the reasons for its immediate passage. It looked then, and it looks now by a continuation of these practices, as though the opposition has adopted a policy of procrastination, and I might even say has devised a plot for delay, which the Senator from Idaho seems to be engineering with such signal ability.

Mr. WELLINGTON. Mr. President, before we quit the subject of the criticism of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], I beg leave to say just a word upon it.

I am rather pleased that the Senator from Idaho, though mistaken in his conjecture, brought about this debate. I believe that there is in the army of the United States employed in the Philippines a decided spirit of criticism upon any man in the United States, whether he be in the Senate or out of it, for expressing an opinion upon a conviction he may hold that the present war in the Philippines is unrighteous and unjust; and when such an expression is made in the Senate, forthwith from every section of the country, and from the Philippines, there come assertions that the man who makes the statement is unpatriotic, and sometimes they even go so far as to say that he is guilty of treason.

Now, sir, I believe the time has come when the Senate of the United States should take cognizance of this matter. I believe I have a right, as a Senator of the United States Senate, representing in part one of the States of this Union, to present to the Senate of the United States my conviction and opinions upon any great national question. I believe I should have the right to do so without being criticised by the officers of the Army. And why? Not as a matter of any personality, but, sirs, one of the dangers of imperialism, one of the dangers confronting this country, is that the enlargement of the Army, as it has been made by this unjust and unrighteous war, puts forth an increased estimation of the Army—an army no longer engaged in patriotic duty, but an army engaged in conquest; and that this Army and its officers will gradually rise in the scale as the civil scale goes down.

What was the danger of Rome? How did the senate of Rome lose its power? It was by the going up of the power and the influence of the army. It was by its criticisms of the senate, until the senate at last became subservient to the army power.

It is for that reason that I object to these criticisms. I am glad to know that General Wheaton did not criticise the Senate of the United States, at least it has been made apparent that he has not done so. But no military record, no amount of bravery or ability in the Army will excuse, in my opinion, an Army officer for making such criticism of the Senate of the United States as will impede the progress of its duty. It is one of the duties of the Senate to listen to the convictions of the minority. They may be wrong, but I believe it would be well for the Senate and for the country in these days to think upon the words that Abraham Lincoln used as he stood upon the steps of the Capitol, when he said: "With malice toward none; with charity toward all, but with a firmness for the right, as God gives me to see the right, I will do my whole duty."

Let us do our duty as we see it. I may see it differently from that of the majority of the Senate, but I have the right to stand here and give evidence of my convictions, and to stand by them, even though I am beaten.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I have listened with a good deal of interest to this debate. I have not yet heard anything from anyone in the Army or from the people in criticism of the Senate of the United States that was very remarkable or unusual. This body and the other and the President have been criticised from the beginning, and I think the criticism of the people, although sometimes unjust, on the whole has been useful. I believe in the freedom of speech and of the press. That freedom is sometimes abused, as we all know it must be, but it is by freedom of utterance that public opinion is formed, by which the country is governed.

Now, there has been another subject discussed here, which is not entirely germane to the bill, for I think it is a revenue bill. It is as to what we will do with the Philippines. It is said that we have no right to hold them because we have not procured them with their consent. I should like to inquire how in all history civilization ever progressed where barbarism existed—and it always existed where civilization did not, so far as we have any history—except by moving onward without the consent of the barbarians. I should like to know of an instance in all history where barbarians expressed in any form their desire for civilized nations to take possession of their country.

If the theory of the consent of the governed had prevailed, the fathers who landed at Jamestown would have left the country; the Mayflower would have returned with its crew, for nobody in the country consented that they should remain. Every acre of land which this Republic now governs has been procured against the will of the original inhabitants.

Senators say it will involve war if we take land without the consent of the original occupants. It always has involved war. War commenced in the colonies of New England immediately upon the arrival of the Pilgrims. So, south of the Potomac the original settlers were always involved in war. Our progress has been marked by war. The Jefferson purchase involved a hundred years of war, some of it very severe. Those wars have cost hundreds of millions of dollars, and they are not entirely over yet. Is this all wrong? Must progress stop? Must civilization be bound by the will of the barbarians? Can it not grow? Do we not justify it in any form?

I could give you instances of ancient times. Did the people of England consent to the rule of William the Conqueror? Earlier than that, did they consent to the Roman conquest of the country? Did they consent to the numerous invasions of the Northmen who came there and settled among them? Not at all. They fought against it. They were finally overcome by William the Conqueror and his barons, who divided up the country and established laws.

They did not even acknowledge the citizenship of more than a very few of the people. Then came that grand struggle for citizenship among our ancestors, the long parliamentary contention as to the right of Englishmen. When they wrung the great charter from King John it was granted to the barons and not to the people. The people claimed that the Magna Charta extorted from King John belonged in common to all Englishmen. The struggle to realize its benefits developed free government. The struggle of hundreds of years by our ancestors for liberty and equality has extended free institutions wherever the Anglo-Saxon has found a home.

If William the Conqueror had waited until England had invited him to come a very different history would have been written. We might not have had free institutions anywhere. It took the struggles of hundreds of years to gain the rights of Englishmen who planted free institutions in England, and then, imbued with the rights of man, they established them in this country.

Now, it is said that the Philippines furnish an exception. Why? Because the Philippines are a great way off. In point of time the Philippines are nearer to us than Plymouth Rock or Jamestown was to England three hundred years ago. The Philippines are nearer to us to-day than California and Oregon were fifty years ago. In time of communication the Philippines are nearer to Washington than Philadelphia was when the archives of the Government were removed to the District of Columbia. The same arguments of distance were used when California and Texas were acquired. The descriptions of the worthlessness of California and New Mexico and the difficulty of governing them are repeated by the reactionists in describing the conditions in the islands of the Pacific.

If the vigor of expression and fervor of imagination which characterized the eloquence of Webster and his colleagues in denouncing our Mexican acquisitions have not been fully equaled by modern orators in their wild and extravagant speeches against our new acquisitions in the Pacific, it is not for want of passion, but for lack of capacity. When Alaska was acquired we were sneeringly told that we were buying icebergs. The only argument which prevailed in the Senate to secure the ratification of the treaty was that Russia was our friend and it might be regarded as an affront if we did not buy it, and on that account it was taken.

Who would give it away now? Who would give away anything that we have acquired? If any man thinks the American people will give up territory he is mistaken. Put the question to the American people as often as you will, as long as our Government grows it will expand. That is the history of all governments. When we commence to contract and to give up country, then we will decay. Whatever we may say here, however we may criticise the management of that country (and it is proper to criticise, because I believe in free speech) we will go on and we will civilize the islands, and we will establish ourselves in the most important commercial point in all the East.

The Philippines are at the doors of China and Japan through which all the commerce from Europe which passes through the Suez Canal must go. It must pass our gateway. The Philippines have the best location of any country in all the East for trade and commerce. If we are to have the trade of that country we must be there. If we are strangers, if we do not appear there, we will not be advertised, but when the people of the Orient see us there and feel our power and learn the advantages that we are bestowing upon that people we will have trade; we shall have a trade in the Pacific which will rival the trade of the Atlantic.

I think that those islands are more valuable than we can now conceive. I think they are going to add more wealth in the way of trade and commerce to the United States than any acquisition that we could possibly have acquired. It seems providential that they come to us. It only remains for us to be wise in our government, kind, and firm.

Senators talk about our taking the rights of the Filipinos away from them. They have never risen to the idea of local self-government, and they do not know what it is. They never have tasted the joys of good government of any kind. They have been for three hundred years under Spanish rule, which we all know means despotism, fraud, and treachery. Spain, I am sorry to say, has taught them lessons which must be unlearned.

We do not expect to get their consent. We do not ask it any more than we asked the consent of the people of Louisiana, of the savage tribes that inhabited the great interior of the continent, of the inhabitants of California and New Mexico, or the original inhabitants of any other territory over which the flag of the Republic now floats. Whatever country we have acquired or shall acquire has been and will be without the consent of the inhabitants. If we plant civilization in countries where it does not exist we must do it in opposition to the barbarous practices our institutions supersede. There is no way to avoid it.

Shall we throw up the advantages that we have? Shall we abandon the Sandwich Islands, Guam, and the Philippines, which make our position stronger in the Pacific than it is in the Atlantic? It gives us a most admirable position, and our people will avail themselves of it, and they will not injure the people of the Philippines, but they will improve their condition and their trade. They will give them a stable government, which they have never enjoyed. That is what we have done wherever we have gone.

If you submit this question to the American people they will decide to keep the Philippines, to improve them, to be kind and just to the people, and those who come after us will be bound by that public sentiment which exists for fair play to the people of the Philippines and justice in the administration of the laws. If any military officer commits an outrage there he will have to answer at the bar of public opinion.

Mr. President, I dare to trust our military officers. They understand the sentiment and spirit of the American people. The idea of military rule overrunning this country, with the little paltry army that we have to control the Philippines, is absurd. I do not fear the Army. The Army is loyal to the flag and loyal to all our institutions, and the civil officers who will be sent there will carry to the Philippines lessons of freedom and of justice which they have not before learned.

It is a part of the destiny of the United States to redeem those islands, to set an example in the Orient. Of course we hear complaints at the beginning. No step has ever been made to extend the borders of the United States which has not been opposed with bitterness. It is well that we should hear both sides on all occasions.

I am not annoyed because people propose to give up the islands. I am not annoyed because fault is found with what has been done. I believe in the freest discussion. Let the arguments be stated which exist against progress, against expansion, against the growing power of our great Republic. Caution our country, if you will, but progress will go on; new acquisitions will be made; liberty will be extended as long as the Republic survives. While it lives it will grow. It will extend its blessings farther and farther over the world. It will give new lessons and inspire men with hope everywhere.

But you can not expect to do this with the consent of those who have never tasted the sweets of liberty and who can not understand the language of free institutions or appreciate the blessings of a stable government. The aspirations of the American people for growth and expansion can not be resisted.

The opponents of progress and expansion may destroy themselves, but they can not resist their irresistible force. The Federal party, which was dominant under Washington and his patriotic colleagues, was crushed and destroyed by its opposition to Jefferson's policy of expansion, and after thirty years of banishment from power was compelled to change the name of Federalist to Whig. The victorious Whig party in the forties was led by Clay, Webster, Corwin, and others in opposition to the annexation of Texas and the acquisition of New Mexico and California, and was destroyed by the futile attempt to resist the aspirations of the people.

History is again repeating itself, and the opposition is again attempting to thwart the growth and expansion of the Republic. Let them take warning that there is nothing in the situation or the surroundings to encourage them to hope to avoid the fate of all previous attempts of a similar character. If they would learn by experience the lesson of 1900, when the issue to surrender the Philippines was distinctly made, they ought to be satisfied that the American people are determined to retain the islands.

Whatever the opposition may do, the progress of civilization will go on, as it has gone on, with more momentum and glory than ever before.

I have no fears of the future of my country. I believe in it. I believe in its institutions. I believe in its people. Wherever they plant the tree of liberty they are able to guard and protect it and nurture it and make it grow. I have no doubt of that. We have never failed, and we are not going to fail now.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, as the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] has gone back to the time of William the Conqueror, I suppose I may be permitted to say a word about some things that occurred some seven hundred years after that; and as, in a different part of his speech, he had something to say about our free institutions and the manner in which they were secured, it is possible that it may not be out of place for me to say something as to those who were concerned in the establishment of those free institutions.

A matter was brought to the attention of the Senate this morning by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] which was a resumption of the same subject which had been before the Senate one day last week, and in which I had at that time a very small participation. At that time the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] made a statement that in the Revolutionary war Massachusetts had furnished more soldiers to the patriot army than all the States "south of Mason and Dixon's line" combined, a statement which I then challenged and which I now dispute the correctness of. If this discussion revives ancient history, the Senator from Massachusetts is alone responsible for it, as he made the statement without any provocation from any Southern Senator.

Mr. President, the matter to which I allude—I would not pursue it further, except that I wish to complete the record, a part of which has been already so well presented—is a matter of importance, and, as suggested by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], discussing, as we are here, questions which relate to the proposed independence or the continued domination of another people, it is not inappropriate that we should refer to the time when we ourselves won our independence; and it is a question, Mr. President, of no light moment to any of those representing a people who were engaged in that struggle, as to whether or not they bore their full share in those sacrifices and toils and sufferings which ended in the securing of that independence.

Mr. President, I desire to acquit the senior Senator from Massachusetts of any design to speak invidiously of the Southern States. I accept most fully his assurance to the contrary; and I will say, Mr. President, that even if he did in a moment of inadvertence say what was unjust to those whom he then denominated as being "south of Mason and Dixon's line," the generous tribute which he paid to-day to the patriotism of the South would be ample and more than ample compensation for it. Therefore, Mr. President, what I now say is not for the purpose of reflecting upon the senior Senator from Massachusetts in any way, or of criticising him, but simply for the purpose, I repeat, of completing the record, in order that to-day's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which has so much upon the subject, may have the advantage of whatever I now may offer in the way of a completion of that which interests the particular section which I in part represent. It is important that it be not in doubt that the South performed its full part in the war of the Revolution.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts has read from the records of the War Department, or rather the records of Congress furnished by the War Department, as to the number of soldiers furnished by the different States in the Revolutionary struggle. I will not repeat what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] has said relative to the omission—the necessary omission—of certain soldiers who were furnished by the South at that time, but I will call attention to one fact, and that is, that those records give the statement of all the soldiers who were upon the pay roll. If those soldiers had been enlisted for the war, of course that record would be an accurate comparative statement as to the number furnished by each State; but it is a notorious fact that during the Revolutionary war men were enlisted for very short periods and for very irregular periods. The consequence is that in taking the pay rolls necessarily there were duplications. As stated by the Senator from Mississippi this morning, he had knowledge of a particular instance in which one man had enlisted in New England eight times.

I did not expect this debate to come up this morning, and consequently I have not some documents which I should otherwise be provided with; but I recollect in Washington's correspondence, in a letter, I think, written to one of his secretaries, and if I mistake not the name of the secretary was Reade—I may be in error about that, however, but I am not about the substantial facts I am going to state—Washington complained of the great hardship and difficulty of mustering out one army and enlisting another, in the suburbs of Boston, in the face of the enemy. That was in the winter of 1775–76; in other words, the entire term of enlistment of the Army expired in the winter of 1775–76, and one army was mustered out and another army enlisted or reenlisted, and doubtless many of them, if not the majority of them, were reenlistments, and if so, they were counted twice, probably not all of them twice, of course, but there were without doubt many duplications.

If that had been all to which I wished to call attention, Mr. President, I should not have trespassed upon the time of the Senate; but there is a most remarkable fact, which I think ought to be put in to-day's RECORD in connection with what has been said here by other Senators to-day upon this subject. That fact is that the number of Revolutionary soldiers is not confined to those who were engaged actively in fighting the British and the Hessians, but that it extends to those who were protecting the frontiers of the country from the Indians, whom the British themselves were enlisting and endeavoring to incite to participation in the war, they in that way becoming most valued allies to the British cause.

The Senator from Mississippi has read as an authority here the testimony of a Southerner, the Hon. J. L. M. Curry, a native of my State. I propose now to read the testimony of a Northern man, the present President of the United States. In a book written by him, called "Winning of the West"—I have not the volume here; I sent to the Library for it, but, unfortunately, the particular volume that has the extracts in it I desired to present has not been sent to me, and, therefore, I read it as an extract from the book, reprinted in the same volume that the Senator from Mississippi read from. This extract shows that there was a most important part played by the soldiers of the Southern States, to the exclusion of the troops from the Northern States, in defending the territory of the colonies against the red allies of the British, and in winning, as he terms it, this great Western territory. Mr. Roosevelt gives the entire credit to the soldiers from the South, not only as to the territory lying immediately west of the South, but of the great Northwestern territory, out of which are now carved most of the great States that we designate as the Middle West. In addition, it is an important fact that in the important battles of the Revolution fought in the Southern States the soldiers were almost entirely from the South. They fought their own battles, not only with the British, but with the Indians, who were allies of the British.

I will read what Mr. Roosevelt in his book, Winning of the West, says on that subject, and I repeat that it constitutes a most important feature in the history of the Revolutionary struggle. If the Western border had been left unguarded, subject to the incursions of Indians who were armed and supplied by the British, the result, if not different, would have followed a struggle which certainly would have been very much more arduous and attended with very much more sacrifice. Mr. Roosevelt in this book says:

> Indeed, the Southwesterners not only won their soil for themselves, but they were the chief instruments in the original acquisition of the Northwest also. Had it not been for the conquest of the Illinois towns in 1779 we should probably never have had any Northwest to settle, and the huge tract between the Upper Mississippi and the Columbia, then called Upper Louisiana, fell into our hands only because the Kentuckians and Tennesseeans were resolutely bent on taking possession of New Orleans, either by bargain or by battle. All of our territory lying beyond the Alleghenies, north and south, was first won for us by the Southwesterners fighting for their own land. The northern part was afterwards filled up by the thrifty, vigorous men of the Northeast, whose sons became the real rulers as well as the preservers of the Union; but these settlements of Northerners were rendered possible only by the deeds of the nation as a whole. They entered on land that the Southerners had won, and they were kept there by the strong arm of the Federal Government, whereas the Southerners owed most of their victories only to themselves.
> The first comers around Marietta, did, it is true, share to a certain extent in the dangers of the existing Indian wars; but their trials are not to be mentioned beside those endured by the early settlers of Tennessee and Kentucky; and whereas these latter themselves subdued and drove out their foes, the former took but an insignificant part in the contest by which the possession of their land was secured. Besides, the strongest and most numerous Indian tribes were in the Southwest.

Mr. President, the Southern soldiers who did this great work were not on the rolls of the Army and were never counted. Who can say how many there were? They were on the frontier and were soldiers all the time, with their rifles ever in hand.

Then the author of this book goes on to say—I am speaking now of what Dr. Curry says, for what I have read is the end of the quotation from Mr. Roosevelt's Winning of the West:

> Beginning in 1774, these border men crossed the Alleghenies, defeated French, Spaniards, and the British with their Indian allies, made homes for their families in the primeval forests, enlarged the area of freedom, and opened the way for the establishment of organized liberty on this virgin continent. Romance contains nothing more thrilling than the exploits of these pioneer men and women; and we do injustice, while honoring the achievements of those engaged in more regular warfare against the British and the Tories, not to keep in grateful remembrance the deeds of those who, amid severer hardships and dangers, were subduing more active and dangerous foes. These backwoodsmen were ardent patriots, and deserve to be classed with their fathers and brothers on the Atlantic coast.
> In 1774 was fought the battle of the Great Kanawha, bloody and stubborn, closely contested between the Indians and the backwoodsmen.

What I am about to read is a quotation, but whether it is a quotation from Winning of the West or not, I do not know, for I have not had time to compare it with the original:

> This war kept the Northwestern tribes quiet for the first two years of the Revolutionary struggle and rendered possible the settlement of Kentucky, and therefore the winning of the West.

I presume that is a quotation from Mr. Roosevelt:

> Lewis's army consisted of men from Botetourt and Fincastle, but those counties then embraced all southwestern Virginia—even extended to "the waters of the Mississippi."
> The men of the West took little share in campaigning against the British and Hessians. In the exigencies of the unequal war they were left to take care of themselves, and were fully occupied in "holding the wooded wilderness that stretched westward to the Mississippi," and in laying therein the foundations of many future commonwealths. Only trained woodsmen could have occupied successfully the regions out of which so many States have been carved. Patrick Henry and Jefferson and Wythe encouraged Clark, to whose tact, energy, courage, and executive ability, in his momentous expedition of 1778–79, we owe the acquisition of the West and the defeat of the British and the Indians.
> The British commander records his mortification at having to yield Fort Vincennes, in 1779, "to a set of uncivilized Virginia woodsmen armed with rifles," and Roosevelt says had Clark, "in this most memorable of all the deeds done west of the Alleghenies in the Revolutionary war," been defeated, "we would not only have lost the Illinois, but, in all probability, Kentucky also." The British were never able subsequently to shake the hold of the Americans upon this section; and the Indians became quiet until their hostilities were far less formidable. In the war of the Revolution, Great Britain sought to "stop the westward growth of the English race in America, and to keep the region beyond the Alleghenies as the region where only savages should dwell." The arms used by savages against both organized foes and helpless noncombatants were supplied from British arsenals. Clark, in his campaign in the Illinois and the Northwest, and Boone, in Kentucky, encountered Indians officered and armed by the British.

Mr. President, I have thought it necessary to read that in order to complete the record which has been made to-day by Senators who have preceded me.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts, in the speech made by him on the 15th of January, which gave rise to the several speeches which have been made—and I recognize fully that it was not the intention of the Senator to say anything which would be invidious or unpleasant to the people of the South, and he has to-day spoken of them in such high terms as to be gratifying to us all—made another statement which was challenged at the time, and which I shall read. The Senator then used this language:

> Mr. President, in talking about the training in civil life of sailors, there is another fact which has not been generally known, even here. Our independence in the Revolutionary war was won at sea. Lord North and the monarch, George III, and their successors, could have continued for a hundred years, if it had been necessary, the land war of the Revolution, and England was rich enough to pay the cost then. The English people would have submitted. What compelled Lord North and the unwilling monarch to make peace was the rate of insurance on English commerce. It was not the French alliance. It was not the French troops under Rochambeau. It was the New England sailors and the other sailors of the maritime States who won our independence.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts again alluded to that this morning. At the time it was first uttered by him I took the liberty of challenging the statement and expressing my want of belief that such was the cause to which our independence was due.

I shall not undertake to go into the question at length, but I have here another witness from the North, a letter written by a Massachusetts gentleman, Hon. John E. Russell, published in the Springfield Republican, directly responsive to the statement made by the senior Senator from Massachusetts in the Senate which I have just read, and I will ask that the Secretary be permitted to read it as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEW ENGLAND PRIVATEERING AND ITS RELATION TO THE INDEPENDENCE OF THE COLONIES—JOHN E. RUSSELL TAKES ISSUE WITH SENATOR HOAR.

To the Editor of the Republican:

Our senior Senator said in the debate last Wednesday that the independence of the colonies was won at sea; that it was not the French alliance nor the other wars in which England was engaged, but New England privateering which raised maritime insurance to 28 per cent and compelled peace.

This is an old statement revived, but it will not bear examination. Privateering was useful in the early months of the conflict by intercepting vessels conveying munitions and stores to the army. After the evacuating of Boston several transports were taken with large numbers of Scotch recruits for Gage, who had sailed away to the north.

After the Declaration of Independence the business took a wide range and became enormously profitable for a time; prizes were sold by connivance of the French, and at the end of 1776 some 250 East Indiamen had been captured and insurance rose to 28 per cent, the figure which Mr. HOAR says compelled a peace six years afterwards. But there was no talk of peace in England or Scotland. The great commercial towns heartily supported the war. Bristol, though represented by Edmund Burke, who was on the side of the colonies and led the opposition in the House of Commons, was not against the war.

The effect of successful privateering was demoralizing. The privateersman was not a patriot soldier; he was not fighting in a cause; he was engaged in legalized piracy upon noncombatants for his own benefit. Washington did not approve of it because it prevented recruiting, and the story of its successes discouraged men who bore the privations of the army. He complained that he could not get recruits enough to balance desertions, and when his fortunes were at their lowest and his men ragged and marching without shoes, great fortunes were being made by speculators and privateers.

Robert Morris complained that the Eastern States were so intent upon privateering that they minded little else, and the loyalists of the Middle States said that the popularity of the war in New England was due to the profits made in it, though the largest gains were in Philadelphia. Colonial affairs were at a low ebb. Washington had been defeated at Brandywine and Germantown, Philadelphia was in possession of the British, and Congress was wandering about, when the turn came in the capture of Burgoyne's army at Saratoga. The New England States were stirred to vigorous action by the invasion of the British, with a large contingent of Canadian Indians, on their frontier, and by a sweeping draft through the whole region, they sent not less than 10,000 men to the assistance of the force under command of Gates, though Arnold, Morgan, and Lincoln did the fighting. A well-equipped army of nearly 6,000 British and German troops, under excellent officers, was compelled to surrender.

American historians consider this the turning point of the war. Creasy puts Burgoyne's defeat among the fifteen decisive battles of the world. Lord Mahon, in his history of England, from 1713 to 1783, rates it as the cause of American independence, because it brought on war between Great Britain and France and Spain. Mr. Lecky, in his England in the Eighteenth Century, says: "It made the triumph of the Revolution a certainty." Lord Shelburne, who, as minister, made peace with us, says, in his memoirs, that from it came the loss of the colonies. John Fiske agrees with the others I have cited.

When war was on between England and France privateering was at a disadvantage. There were no more unarmed unwary merchantmen afloat. England in arms was in fact mistress of the seas. She had not only ships, but seamanship. English vessels sailed in fleets, with strong convoys, the French ports were closely watched, and swarms of English privateers were out. There were two sides to the game. In a few months the fisheries and the West India trade, hitherto the main reliance of New England, were ruined; the coasting trade was destroyed, and 900 sail had fallen into British hands. (Hildreth, Vol. III, p. 241.) Rates of marine insurance did not advance, even when Spain and Holland joined France and the war was extended to the East Indies. It remained at about 28 per cent to the peace of Versailles.

It is the fact that the conclusion of the war in America was brought about, as Captain Mahan states, by the failure of the British to prevent the French fleet from going north from the West Indies to Chesapeake Bay. That junction of the fleet with the French land forces and Washington's troops compelled the surrender of Cornwallis, the triumph of the "anti-imperialists" in Parliament, and the formation of a cabinet pledged to make peace with the colonies.

Notwithstanding the success at Yorktown, which, as a French victory, is blazoned on the walls of Versailles, France was ruined. Spain, then still a great power, recovered the island of Minorca, Florida, and control of the Gulf of Mexico, but she failed to wrest Gibraltar from the defense of Elliot. In the final treaty she gave England those rights on the Mosquito coast which have so bothered our diplomacy for the past fifty years. The Dutch had nothing to show but scars and increased debt. At the close of the war the Baltic fleet of merchantmen, with a cargo not only of immense value, but of great importance, since it contained the materials of future navies, by good fortune and skillful seamanship escaped capture from 12 Dutch sail of the line. What was New England privateering in the turmoil of such events?

England could have carried on the war, no doubt, if her people had been in favor of it, but they were tired of it. The public debt had been nearly doubled and there was a sum of 30,000,000 sterling unfunded. Neither the Government nor Parliament were aware of the straits to which the colonies were reduced. Speculation was at an end. Privateering brought in no prizes. The previous winter Washington had informed Congress and several of the governors that he could not "rub through another campaign." Not an eighth of the quota of troops decreed were in the field; powder, small arms, clothes, and money had to be supplied by France.

In this extremity, but a few months before the end, a special messenger was sent to Paris to demand a large loan; so desperate was the condition that Hamilton proposed to threaten France that if cash was not forthcoming at once the colonies would make terms with England, "not as a menace, but as a candid declaration of circumstances." What the messenger (Laurens) did say we do not know, but Vergennes is on record as saying that the Americans were ungrateful and insolent; but the money was raised, exacted rather than borrowed, and it served the purpose. I am not unmindful of differences of opinion, nor of Walpole saying that history can not be true. I am also aware that the story of the Revolution is yet to be written, but whoever reads Washington's letters will get more of the truth concerning it than from all other American sources.

JOHN E. RUSSELL.

LEICESTER, January 18, 1902.

Mr. BACON. In saying anything upon this subject, I have not the slightest desire to depreciate in any manner anything which was done by Massachusetts in the Revolutionary war. Whether Faneuil Hall was entitled to the appellation, certainly Massachusetts was "the cradle in which young Liberty was rocked," and I would not, in anything I say, detract in any manner from all the credit and all the glory that she is entitled to in that struggle, which has so affected the destiny not only of this continent but of the whole world.

Mr. President, I will say one other word in this connection. The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], in a manner most delightful to me, exemplifies his loyalty to the free institutions which were won in that struggle, and I only wish that the temporary departure of a number of people in Massachusetts from harmony with him in that regard may be short lived, and that within a short time, as to that, all others in Massachusetts may be like him.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to say one word about Mr. Russell's letter. I do not want to prolong this debate. But the letter which has been read will not bear any analysis at all. I have seen it before, and it is in opposition to what is now the best accepted historic judgment, as I understand. But the letter itself gives away half the case. He says that I am quite right in saying that England could have carried on the war indefinitely if she had chosen, and that it was stopped because the English people were tired of it. And that is true. That is about half what I said, but I add that the English people were tired of it, not because they were tired of the mere expense of sending soldiers over here (for England has always been lavish with her money in military matters), but their commerce was almost destroyed; it was imperiled.

I saw myself in the cellar underneath the Supreme Court the papers of a court made up of a committee of Congress, but which sat as an admiralty court, and there was an enormous number of prizes which they adjudged and brought in, showing how extensive were our captures. Everybody knows that one privateer or man-of-war capturing ten ships will make the lives of 500 shipowners unhappy. Just think of the Alabama! With all we suffered on land by the brilliant military operations of the great Southern commanders and the brave and wonderfully efficient troops they commanded, just think what terror the Alabama alone struck into the Northern seacoast! That vessel, with the Florida and one or two less known, alone drove Northern commerce from the sea; and Paul Jones and Abram Whipple were quite as terrible in their day as Captain Semmes and his Alabama were to us.

Now, Mr. Russell quotes the fact that some eminent authority has said that the success of the Revolution was due to the victory at Saratoga. There never is a great chain of historic events, all of which affect the final result, in regard to which somebody does not say of each one of them that it produced it. There was a battle at Concord Bridge where there were eight or nine hundred British soldiers on an expedition, and one company of them had an encounter across the river with Continental troops, and the British regiment was driven back to Charlestown under a fire from every stone wall and every thicket on the way, and Edmund Burke, who had as sure an historic instinct as any man who ever lived and who studied the events of that war with all the power of his transcendent genius, said of the battle of Concord, "That day made independence certain."

Mr. Russell might as well say it was not Paul Jones and the driving of British commerce from the sea, but it was that little company of two or three hundred men at Concord Bridge that won our independence, and cite Mr. Burke for his authority, as to cite Creasy as to the effect of Saratoga.

Mr. President, it was after Saratoga, was it not, that we saw the darkest time of the war, the capture of Charleston, the ravaging of the fields of the South by Tarleton and the other British generals, the brilliant defense of Marion and Sumter, a defense which led one of them, I think it was Marion, to be called the Swamp Fox. It was after Saratoga that the terrors of Valley Forge were encountered by Washington and his army with bare and bleeding feet through the snows of that terrible winter. I do not think you can say that because Saratoga was essential to our success, even the Vermont and New Hampshire farmers and their neighbors from Massachusetts who captured Burgoyne at Saratoga accomplished the result; and I adhere to my original opinion that although, without the great courage and constancy of Washington and the army on land under his command, and without Saratoga, and without Yorktown our liberties would not have been won; on the other hand, they would not have been won by them but from the fact that the merchants of the great seaports of Great Britain clamored for peace, and the obstinacy of King George and Lord North even were unable to resist their demands.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts underestimates the effect of the surrender of Burgoyne as well as that of Cornwallis, and in so saying I am certainly paying a very high tribute to his State, because, whatever Massachusetts did not have anywhere else, she had, I think, about 10,000 troops which were sent there for that particular purpose. If I recollect aright the surrender of Burgoyne was in October, 1777. The great effect of the surrender of Burgoyne was the recognition by France of the independence of the United States and the French alliance, which not only followed immediately thereafter, but which was the direct consequence of it and which would not have occurred but for that.

Mr. President, I do not doubt that the privateers, if you please, or naval forces, contributed largely to securing our independence, and I have no desire to depreciate the value of the services of privateers, but that with which I take issue and with which I took issue a week ago was the statement by the Senator from Massachusetts which he practically repeats to-day:

Our independence in the Revolutionary war was won at sea. Lord North and the monarch, George III, and their successors, could have continued for a hundred years, if it had been necessary, the land war of the Revolution, and England was rich enough to pay the cost then. The English people would have submitted. What compelled Lord North and the unwilling monarch to make peace was the rate of insurance on English commerce.

In the first place, Lord North had gone out of power at that time, but that is utterly immaterial. I suppose he was driven out of power by the necessity of making peace.

Mr. LODGE. When peace was made.

Mr. BACON. That is immaterial, from the fact he doubtless lost power by the necessity which was ahead of him of surrendering his war policy.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] omits to give estimate to the fact that at that time England was at war not simply with the United States, but with France, with Spain, and with Holland, and at the time when she made peace with the United States she had achieved great naval victories over her European enemies. It was just at that time, if I recollect correctly, that the siege of Gibraltar, after having lasted several years, was raised by the British fleet, and it was just at that time, if I recollect correctly, that the British won a great victory in the Indies against the French. I do not recall for a moment the names of the respective commanders. England had won a great naval victory over both of her principal antagonists—Spain and France—and if it be true that the question of maritime insurance was the one most influential at that time, that was the time, after she had defeated her enemies at sea and had swept them from the sea, when that difficulty would have been relieved.

I repeat I have no desire to depreciate that which was done by the sailors of the maritime States, but I do challenge and take issue with and repudiate the statement that our liberties were not won by the soldiers on land in the battles which they fought and by the blood which they shed.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to appeal to my friend the Senator from Illinois to yield for a brief discussion of the character of Mary Queen of Scots. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULLOM. That would be very interesting, I know, from the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say to my friend the Senator from South Carolina that I wish a brief executive session, and that I am compelled to leave the Senate in a very little while.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think we can very profitably go back to the wellsprings of liberty and take another draft in the morning; and if the Senator from Illinois is exceedingly anxious for an executive session, I will defer my few little remarks on Revolutionary history and the little part South Carolina took in it until morning, when the Senator from Massachusetts will call up the Philippine bill again, and we will again proceed to discuss it as we have done this afternoon.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 30, 1902, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 29, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. JOHN VAN SCHAICK, Jr., First Universalist Church, Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday last was read and approved.

OLEOMARGARINE BILL.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to make a report from the Committee on Agriculture on the bill (H. R. 9206) known as the oleomargarine bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has a request to make.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Connecticut makes the report of the majority. The minority report accompanies that report, and will be printed in connection with it, and also the bill offered as a substitute for what is known as the Grout bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] that what is called the views of the minority should properly go into the basket with the report itself. The gentleman from Connecticut reports what is known as the oleomargarine bill, and the gentleman from New York states that the views of the minority accompany the report.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And also the substitute bill proposed by the minority for the Grout bill. I simply want to give that information to the House. I know that the proper course was to put it in the basket.

FOREST RESERVATIONS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent of the House to have printed as a House document a recent opinion of the Attorney-General in reference to forest reservations. I could have it done by the committee, but it is a matter of some importance, and I think it ought to be in the form of a House document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an opinion of the Attorney-General bearing upon the subject of forest reservations.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That was not the gentleman's request.

Mr. LACEY. It was as a House document.

The SPEAKER. That it be printed as a House document. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will resume the call of committees.

Mr. LACEY (when the Committee on the Public Lands was called). Mr. Speaker, we have nothing more to present.

The Clerk continued the call.

Mr. LACEY (when the Committee on Mines and Mining was called). Mr. Speaker, I do not see the gentleman from Oregon in his seat. There is a bill that they desire to present this morning. The gentleman is now in the lobby, and I would be glad if that committee could be passed without losing its place.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Mines and Mining be passed without prejudice. Without objection, this will be done.

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER (when the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress was called). Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CORLISS], is absent from the city and requested me to ask that this committee call might be passed without prejudice to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress be passed without prejudice. Without objection, this order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The call of the committees was resumed and concluded.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees that were passed without prejudice.

The Committee on Mines and Mining was again called.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Iowa any bill to call up?

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I am not a member of the committee. There does not seem to be a single gentleman in the House present who is a member of that committee, yet they desire to call up a bill.

The Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress was again called.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of all the committees within the rules.

PERMANENT CENSUS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] says that he has a report ready to present from the Committee on Census, otherwise I do not know of any business before the House, and I would like to suggest right here that some gentlemen will be complaining later on in the session of the rule, and will raise that as an objection, or as a reason why they have not been able to get their bills before the House. It seems to me the only reason why the bills are not considered is that they have not been reported from the committees and the committees have not completed their work upon the bills.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will call for the regular order.

Mr. PAYNE. It is a good deal like the case of lawyers having no business the first week, and after that they have more business than they can attend to——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the regular order.

Mr. PAYNE. Then I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] may file his report upon the bill from the Committee on the Census after the adjournment of the House to-day, so that it can be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the Committee on the Census, be permitted to file his report after the adjournment, so that it may be printed. Is there objection to this request?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The committee directed that the request be made that the bill and report be printed in the RECORD of to-morrow, as it is the purpose of the chairman of the committee to call up the bill for consideration to-morrow; and I would like to have that request added to the request of the gentleman from New York—that the bill and report be printed in to-morrow's RECORD.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order. We can not hear what is being said over there.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The bill and the report.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Speaker, if that part is added to the request I shall object; I mean that part which asks that it be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is no part of the request.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to everything unless we can have order.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I will repeat my request—that is, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], chairman of the Committee on the Census, have leave to file his report after adjournment of the House to-day, and have it printed in the usual way.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and report of the chairman of the Committee on the Census be printed in the RECORD to-morrow. I see that the gentleman from Illinois just came in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the House has already given unanimous consent that the gentleman may file his report from the Census Committee after the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that my report and the bill, prepared under the instructions of the House, may be printed in the RECORD for the benefit of members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill and his report be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Pending that request, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the committee, if the report is unanimous?

Mr. HOPKINS. The report is a unanimous report on a roll call. Every member of the committee is in favor of the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. There are no views of the minority?

Mr. HOPKINS. None whatever.

Mr. BURKETT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. What is the object of running this in the RECORD? It will be printed in small type. Why can it not be printed in the ordinary way?

Mr. HOPKINS. It will be printed in the ordinary way, but for the benefit of the members it will be better to have it in the RECORD also.

Mr. BURKETT. Well, I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PERMANENT CENSUS BUREAU.

Your committee beg leave to report that, in accordance with the instructions of the House, they have prepared a substitute bill for House bill 198, which provides for a detailed organization of a permanent census bureau, and report said bill and the substitute bill to the House with the following report:

The arguments of scientific men, economists, statisticians, and others on the necessity and value of a permanent census office have been summarized in a report prepared for the Census Committee by the Director of the Census, and available for examination by the members of the Senate. Your committee does not deem it necessary to enter into any recapitulation or restatement of the arguments and suggestions of this report, all of which have its unanimous approval.

Section 1 of the bill now submitted simply declares the temporary Census Office to be a permanent office of the Government. A declaratory enactment of this character is made necessary by the proviso of section 1 of the act of March 3, 1899, which declares that "nothing herein contained shall be construed to establish a census bureau permanent beyond the Twelfth Census."

Section 2 provides that the work of the Twelfth Census shall be carried on under the existing organization of the Census Office until July 1, 1902, at which date the Director of the Census assures us that all the work on the four great reports of the Twelfth Census—Population, Manufactures, Agriculture, and Vital Statistics—will be completed and published in accordance with the time limit fixed by section 7 of the existing census act. The date of the completion of these great reports furnishes an easy, natural, and proper point at which to reorganize the office on a permanent basis.

Sections 3 and 4 of the proposed bill provide for the official staff of the reorganized permanent census bureau, and include only such officials as are deemed necessary for the proper administration of the permanent work of the bureau. The salaries of the officials who are to be retained under these sections are as follows:

1 Director	$5,000
3 chief statisticians, at $2,500	7,500
1 chief clerk	2,500
1 disbursing clerk	2,100
3 expert chiefs of division, at $1,800	5,400
1 stenographer	1,500
6 clerks, class 3, at $1,600 each	9,600
10 clerks, class 2, at $1,400 each	14,000
Total	47,600

The following employees are dispensed with:

2 chief statisticians	$3,000
1 purchasing agent	2,500
1 superintendent of printing	2,500
1 geographer	2,500
7 expert chiefs of division, at $2,000	14,000
1 appointment clerk	2,500
12 clerks of class 4, at $1,800 each	21,600
15 clerks of class 3, at $1,600 each	24,000
18 clerks of class 2, at $1,400 each	25,200
1 captain of the watch	840
2 messengers	1,200

The above reduction in the force effects a saving of about $114,400 per annum. The offices of appointment clerk and disbursing clerk are combined in the proposed bill. This reduction in the executive staff is as far as it is safe to go, and contemplates that many valuable experts in the census work will continue their services in the Census Office at lower rates than they now receive.

Section 5 provides that the employees now on the rolls of the Census Office shall be placed in the classified service of the Government. This provision is only just to a large body of worthy clerks whose efficiency has been thoroughly demonstrated. The adoption of section 5 of the proposed bill will place in the classified service of the Government as efficient and thoroughly equipped body of clerks as has ever been certified to the Executive Departments of the Government. The same section also provides that new appointments in the permanent Census Office, when they become necessary in the course of time, shall be made through the regular classified service of the Government.

Section 6 retains in force all the sections of the act of March 3, 1899, for the taking of the Twelfth and subsequent censuses which are not repealed or amended by the provisions of this bill. The sections of existing law thus retained relate exclusively to the methods of taking the census, appointment and duties of supervisors, enumerators, etc., and the general organization of the office.

In order that the exact situation in which the passage of this bill will leave the whole question of census legislation, the committee submits the following statement which indicates precisely the sections of the existing law which will remain unrepealed, in the event of the passage of the proposed bill, and the purpose of each section.

Section 6 provides that census information shall be collected by supervisors, enumerators, and special agents.

Section 7 indicates the nature of the inquiries on the population, manufactures, agricultural, and mortality schedules.

Section 9 relates to the appointment of supervisors.

Section 10 to the duties of supervisors.

Section 11 to the compensation of supervisors.

Section 12 to the enumerators and their duties.

Section 13 to enumeration districts.

Section 14 to the removal of delinquent enumerators.

Section 15 to interpreters.

Section 16 to enumerators' compensation.

Section 18 to the oath of office.

Section 19 to the date enumeration.

Section 20 to penalties for enumerators, clerks, or other employees.

Section 21 to penalties for neglect or refusal to perform duties.

Section 22 to penalties for refusal to furnish information for the census.

Section 23 to the enforcement of penalties.

Section 24 to the incidental expenses of the office.

Section 26 to electrical or mechanical devices for tabulating purposes.

Section 27 to the franking privilege.

Section 28 to information to be obtained from other departments of the Government.

Section 29 to the records and property of preceding censuses.

Section 30 to the furnishing of copies of population returns to governors, mayors, etc., upon application.

Section 31 to the official seal.

Section 32 makes the preliminary appropriations for the Twelfth Census.

Section 33 repeals the previous census acts.

The sections omitted in the above recapitulation—1, 2, 4, 5, 8, 17, 25—are those to which the proposed bill makes amendment.

Section 7 reenacts section 8 of the existing census law, with some slight modifications. This section enumerates all the special inquiries or investigations which the Census Office is required to make, after the completion of the four great inquiries which constitute the census reports proper.

Section 8 provides for the annual collection of births and deaths in legislative areas, in accordance with the methods for a decennial census of this character, which are prescribed in the existing census laws. The arguments in favor of this annual census of births and deaths have been fully stated in the report on the permanent census office referred to above.

Section 9 proposes a five-year census of the important manufacturing industries of the country midway between the decennial censuses, restricted to industries carried on under the factory system, and excluding the neighborhood industries, hand trades, etc., the collection of which has added enormously to the cost of the manufacturing census of the decennial period. It seems to be generally agreed among statisticians and economists that such a manufacturing census as is here proposed, at five-year periods, is of the utmost importance to a true understanding of the industrial condition and progress of the country. The argument in favor of such a midway census is fully stated on page 36 of the report on "A permanent Census Office" above referred to.

The gross value of the products of all the manufacturing and mechanical industries reported to the Twelfth Census is $13,003,127,680 by the preliminary figures. Of this total fully $11,000,000,000 pertains to the manufacturing establishments which it is proposed to cover in the five-year census provided for in this bill. The remaining two billion represents the product of the hand trades or neighborhood industries, such as are common to every community, and are but slightly affected from decade to decade by changes which make for prosperity or depression in the general manufacturing enterprises of the country.

It is not possible under any system to get a complete enumeration of these branches of mechanical industry. They can be estimated from the data possessed by the Census Office more accurately than they can be ascertained by an actual enumeration. Yet the cost of such an enumeration is enormous—unsatisfactory as it is. If the enumeration of these mechanical industries should be abandoned at future censuses it would be possible to dispense altogether with the services of the enumerator in connection with the census of manufactures. The weakest spot in the whole manufacturing census is the enumerator's work, and the gain in economy and accuracy from his elimination would be very great.

With these neighborhood industries omitted from the canvass; with the services of the enumerator dispensed with in consequence; with the manufacturing census thus largely concentrated in, say, 2,500 cities and towns and their immediate environment, which contain 90 per cent of the total value of the manufactured product; with a permanent census office to keep a card catalogue of all manufacturing establishments in the country; and with the privilege of utilizing the trained clerical force of that permanent census office to act as chief special agents in connection with the field work in these 2,500 cities and towns, the whole cost of the five-year census and of the ten-year census would be reduced, on a conservative estimate, by 30 per cent; and this reduction in the cost of the work, both in the field and in the office, would be accompanied by far greater accuracy in the results obtained.

This section also authorizes an annual census of cotton production to be obtained from the reports of cotton ginners. This is a continuance of work already twice done by the temporary Census Office, with results of the most gratifying character, enabling the country to know at an early date the exact dimensions of the annual cotton crop with a greater accuracy than has been possible heretofore. The importance of this annual report on the cotton production to the people of the Southern States can not well be exaggerated, as is shown by hundreds of letters received by the Census Office from producers, distributers, dealers, manufacturers, and others in all the Southern States. Some extracts from these letters have been printed by the Census Office, and are submitted in connection with this report.

Section 10 reenacts section 17 of the act of March 3, 1899, with an important amendment suggested by the Director, which promises to greatly reduce the cost of future work in census investigations. The section allows the appointment of special agents, as under existing law, and fixes their compensation the same as under existing law, and undoubtedly a few such agents will be required in the special investigations provided for in section 7. The amendment authorizes the Director, however, to utilize the regular clerical force of the Census Office so far as may be possible in performing this field work. Most important advantages will follow this method of collecting data, as compared with the old method of special agents appointed especially for such purpose.

It will greatly reduce the expense of the field work, the clerks serving at their regular compensations; it will enable the Director to put into field work trained men thoroughly acquainted with the Census Office methods, thoroughly trained in knowledge of the exact information it desires, and thoroughly tested as to their competency and faithfulness. These are qualifications which it is impossible to secure with certainty when it is necessary for the Director to select as special agents, as must always be the case under a temporary census office, persons who have had no training in census work and whose qualifications for the special field work assigned to them can not always be definitely known or ascertained by the Director.

Section 11 abolishes the printing office of the Census Office. This is done in accordance with the recommendation of the Director, whose experience justifies him in believing that the printing of the Census Office can be done with equal economy and greater advantage at the Government Printing Office.

Section 12 repeals all supplemental acts which have been passed amendatory of the general census act, and repeals all sections of this general census act which are inconsistent with the provisions of this bill.

It is estimated that the sum required to complete the principal inquiries ordered by the temporary census act, and included in the proposed bill, will be about $3,600,000, spreading it over the next four years. This involves an office force of not far from 800 people, including the present executive force, costing about $160,000 per annum; including also rental, miscellaneous expenses, etc. Under the proposed bill, however, with the changes that have been made, it is estimated that the annual cost will be not far from $615,000 for the next six years. This involves a material reduction in the clerical force during the time indicated; also a reduction of about $114,000 per year in the executive force and a corresponding reduction in general expenses, rental, etc., so that in effect the actual expenditures of the Government would be practically the same. It is the belief of your committee that when all phases of the question are taken into consideration there will be in the end an actual saving of money to the Government as a result of establishing a permanent Census Office at this time, to say nothing of the enormous gain from a scientific point of view, and increase in the value and accuracy of future censuses which would result from this legislation.

There will also be a very handsome saving in the amount required to prepare for the ordinary decennial census. The appropriation for preliminary work at the last two decades has been $1,000,000 each. In view of the fact that there would be a trained force in the Census Office and ample time, at least one-half of this sum could be saved in the work of preparation for the next census, and a further sum of $100,000 saved in the way of furniture and fixtures.

The question has been raised how the clerical force of a permanent Census Office can be kept profitably engaged during the interval that must elapse between the completion of the work on the special reports and the commencement of preparation for the Thirteenth Census.

There is work enough provided for in section 8 of the existing law to keep a force of skilled clerks busy for the entire interval from July 1, 1902, to, say, October, 1908, when the preparation for the Thirteenth Census should be well under way. The special inquiries required by section 8 can be distributed over the whole period; and this distribution would undoubtedly result advantageously in the quality of the work done. For instance, in addition to the annual report upon births and deaths in registration areas, provided for in the new section of the present bill, the division of vital statistics would be employed upon a special report upon the deaf and dumb, a special report upon the blind, a special report upon the insane and feeble-minded, a special report upon criminals and juvenile delinquents, and a special report upon pauperism and benevolence; and these special reports would be made, one in each year, until completed.

In the same way the report on public indebtedness, valuation, taxation, and expenditures, provided for in section 8, would divide itself into special reports upon public indebtedness, upon public receipts and expenditures, upon assessments and taxation, and upon true valuation of real and personal property. These separate reports, it is estimated, would occupy one division of the permanent Census Office until the spring of 1907, the publication of the results of the several parts of the investigation to take place from time to time as the same are completed.

In another division the inquiries as to street railways, telegraph and telephone, and electric light and power would be taken up and brought to completion, or substantially so, before the investigation of mines and mining is entered upon. Upon the completion of this latter report, the investigation of transportation by water, a difficult and important field of inquiry, would follow in due order. Thus the Census Office would be continuously preparing and publishing a series of valuable reports upon topics which Congress has already determined that it shall investigate. It would be entirely feasible, with a permanent Census Office, to arrange for the future publication of corresponding reports for the next census in such a way that the report on each topic would be ten years distant from the last. This whole class of reports could thus be disassociated from the census year, with all its pressure, without destroying their comparability in point of time.

Another clause of section 8 provides for a series of special reports on the social statistics of cities, and it will readily be seen that the work of making these reports, which will possess great value and interest, can be distributed to the best advantage over the entire period that will elapse before the next census. This course would involve the taking of the social statistics of the cities of certain sections of the country in one year and of other sections in another year, according as the facilities and opportunities of the permanent census office permit.

Provision should be made also, in the event of a permanent census organization, for a careful review of the conditions governing the taking of the present census, in order that the plan of enumeration may be so perfected as to secure a very much closer supervision of the work of the census enumerators. Considerable progress has been made in this direction in the work of the Twelfth Census, but it is apparent from recent experience that very much more time must be given to the initiation of the preparatory work and steps taken at a comparatively early date to develop a better and more complete system, involving the possible separation of the enumeration of the population in cities from that in the rural sections of the country, and, in the latter case, making the country the unit for census supervision.

In addition to the enumeration of the population of the States and organized Territories of the United States proper, specific provision was made in the law for taking the Twelfth Census for the enumeration of the population of Alaska and Hawaii, and by implication also of the population of Indian Territory and Indian reservations, areas not previously covered by the census enumerators. And if in the Thirteenth Census the general enumeration is extended to include all the outlying possessions of the United States, the preparatory work necessary to the proper conduct of the enumeration will be increased greatly, and this would be especially the case if the duty of taking a census of the Philippines should be charged upon the Census Office. This alone would involve a large amount of preparatory work and would call for very different methods from those pursued in this country, or even in the other possessions of the United States, where more settled conditions prevail.

The division of the work at the Twelfth Census, as stipulated in the act by which it is governed, was the result of the experiences of the Tenth and Eleventh censuses, at which the completion of the census reports was very much delayed, owing to conditions arising inevitably from the temporary character of the census service and the lack of time in which to properly institute the many investigations which by the terms of the census act were required to be carried on as nearly simultaneously as possible. The separation of the general decennial work, which is more or less contingent upon a thorough canvass of the country, from that of a more special nature, and not in any way dependent upon the work of the census enumerators, did not lessen, moreover, the amount of preparatory work required for the enumeration of the population and the tabulation of the enumerators' returns in season to furnish the statement of population for apportionment purposes at the beginning of the session of Congress immediately following the date of enumeration.

This statement is equally applicable to the amount of preparation which will be required in providing for the field work of the Thirteenth Census at the decennial period, and it is imperative that the work preliminary to that enumeration should be instituted at a date sufficiently early to insure its successful prosecution and completion within the time specified by the census act.

In order to provide, under proper conditions, therefore, for the enumeration of the population and the collection of the statistics of agriculture in 1910, both of which are dependent upon a house-to-house canvass, it is essential that the preparatory work incident to the decennial enumeration should be initiated at least as early as the fall of 1908, and a portion (not necessarily a large portion) of the force retained for special work made available for the uninterrupted prosecution of the preparatory work from and after that time.

This would give at most but twenty months, and this is not too long a period in which to make the necessary preparation for the selection, equipment, and proper instruction of an army of from 60,000 to 70,000 persons, employed on the average for less than thirty days. The limited term of their employment makes it all the more important that the plans for the effective utilization of their services should be carefully matured and not hastily conceived and put into operation under adverse conditions, as has been the experience at the last two censuses, for want of a sufficient length of time for their proper development and consideration.

For the reasons set forth your committee respectfully recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

A bill (H. R. 10308) to provide for a permanent Census Office.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Census Office temporarily established in the Department of the Interior in accordance with an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1899, is hereby made a permanent office.

SEC. 2. That the work pertaining to the Twelfth Census shall be carried on by the Census Office under the existing organization until the 1st day of July, 1902, when the permanent Census Office herein provided for shall be organized by the Director of the Census.

SEC. 3. That the permanent Census Office shall be in charge of a Director of the Census, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive an annual salary of $5,000. It shall be his duty to superintend and direct the taking of the Thirteenth and subsequent censuses of the United States and to perform such other duties as may be imposed upon him by law.

SEC. 4. That there shall be in the Census Office, to be appointed by the Director thereof, 3 chief statisticians, who shall be persons of known and tried experience in statistical work, at an annual salary of $2,500 each; a chief clerk, at an annual salary of $2,000, who, in the absence of the Director, shall serve as acting director; a disbursing clerk, who shall also act as appointment clerk, at an annual salary of $2,100; one stenographer, at an annual salary of $1,500; 3 expert chiefs of division, at an annual salary of $1,800 each; 6 clerks of class 3; 10 clerks of class 2; and such number of clerks of class 1, and of clerks, copyists, computers, and skilled laborers, with salaries at the rate of not less than $600 nor more than $1,000 per annum, messengers, assistant messengers, watchmen, and charwomen as may be necessary for the proper and prompt performance of the duties required by law. The disbursing clerk herein provided for shall, before entering upon his duties, give bond to the Secretary of the Treasury in the sum of $25,000, which bond shall be conditioned that the said officer shall render a true and faithful account to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury quarter yearly of all moneys and properties which shall be received by him by virtue of his office, with surety, to be approved by the Solicitor of the Treasury. Such bond shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be by him put in suit upon any breach of the conditions thereof.

SEC. 5. That all employees of the Twelfth Census Office, at the date of the passage of this act, above the grade of skilled laborer shall be, and they are hereby, placed under the provisions of the civil-service act approved January 16, 1883, and the amendments thereto and the rules established thereunder; and all new appointments in the Census Office hereby created shall be made in accordance with the requirements of the civil-service act above referred to.

SEC. 6. That all the provisions of the act of March 3, 1899, relating to the Twelfth Census, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall remain in full force and effect for the taking of the Thirteenth and subsequent censuses.

SEC. 7. That section 8 of the act of March 3, 1899, is hereby amended so as to read as follows: That after the completion and return of the enumeration and of the work upon the schedules relating to the products of agriculture and to manufacturing and mechanical establishments provided for in section 7 of this act, the Director of the Census is hereby authorized to collect statistics relating to special classes, including the insane, feeble-minded, deaf, dumb, and blind; to crime, pauperism, and benevolence, including prisoners, paupers, juvenile delinquents, and inmates of benevolent and reformatory institutions; to social statistics of cities; to public indebtedness, valuation, taxation, and expenditures; to religious bodies; to electric light and power, telephone and telegraph business; to transportation by water, express business, and street railways; to mines, mining, and minerals, and the production and value thereof, including gold in divisions of placer and vein, and silver mines, and the number of men employed, the average daily wage, average working time, and aggregate earnings in the various branches and aforesaid divisions of the mining industry. And the Director of the Census shall prepare schedules containing such interrogatories as shall in his judgment be best adapted to elicit the information required under these subjects, with such specifications, divisions, and particulars under each head as he shall deem necessary to that end; and all reports prepared under the provisions of this section shall be designated as "Special reports of the Census Office." For the purpose of securing the statistics required by this section, the Director of the Census may appoint special agents when necessary, and such special agents shall receive compensation as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 8. That there shall be a collection of the statistics of the births and deaths in registration areas for the year 1902, and annually thereafter, the data for which shall be obtained from the registration records of such States and municipalities as possess records affording satisfactory data in necessary detail, in the discretion of the Director, the compensation for the transcription of which shall not exceed 2 cents for each birth or death reported.

SEC. 9. That in the year 1905, and every ten years thereafter, there shall be a collection of the statistics of manufactures, confined to manufacturing establishments conducted under what is known as the factory system, exclusive of the so-called neighborhood and mechanical industries; and the Director is hereby authorized to prepare such schedules as in his judgment may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section; and that the Director of the Census shall annually collect the statistics of the cotton production of the country as returned by the ginners; and that the Director of the Census shall make, from time to time, any additional special collections of statistics relating to any branch of agriculture, manufacture, mining, transportation, fisheries, or any other branch of industry that may be required of him by Congress.

SEC. 10. That section 17 of the act of March 3, 1899, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. That the special agents appointed under the provisions of this act have equal authority with the enumerators in respect to the subjects committed to them under this act and shall receive compensation at rates to be fixed by the Director of the Census: Provided, That the same shall in no case exceed $6 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3 per day during their necessary absence from their usual place of residence: And provided further, That no pay or allowance in lieu of subsistence shall be allowed special agents when employed in the Census Office on other than the special work committed to them, and no appointments of special agents shall be made for clerical work: And provided further, That the Director of the Census is hereby authorized in his discretion to employ the clerical force of the Census Office for such field work as may be required to carry out the provisions of sections 7, 8, and 9 in lieu of employing special agents for that purpose; and such employees when so employed shall be allowed, in addition to their regular compensation, actual necessary traveling expenses and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3 per day during their necessary absence from the Census Office."

SEC. 11. That the printing office established in the Census Office is hereby abolished, and the outfit and equipment therein shall be turned over to the Public Printer; and the Director of the Census is hereby authorized and directed to have printed, published, and distributed, from time to time, bulletins and reports of the preliminary and other results of the various investigations authorized by law; and all of said printing and binding shall be done by the Public Printer at the Government Printing Office.

SEC. 12. That the supplemental acts amendatory of the act of March 3, 1899, approved February 1, 1900, May 10, 1900, June 2, 1900, February 23, 1901, are hereby repealed; and all provisions of the act of March 3, 1899, inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I will say to the members of the House that in pursuance of the direction of the House the Committee on the Census has prepared a bill, and I desire to take the bill up to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal. Therefore I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill at that time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the Census Bureau bill may be taken up after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask if this is a privileged bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. It is, in my judgment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If it is a privileged bill, I think the gentleman can call it up without unanimous consent; and I prefer, if the gentlemen can call it up as a privileged bill, that it be called up in that way rather than to give unanimous consent.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have made the request in pursuance of the unanimous request of the Committee on the Census.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is not because I am objecting to the consideration of the bill; but if it comes up as a matter of privilege, I prefer that to the practice of making bills in order by unanimous consent. I prefer it to come up as a privileged bill. I understand the Speaker has held that it was a privileged bill on a former occasion.

Mr. HOPKINS. The question whether this bill is a privileged bill or not has not been formally presented to the Speaker. Of course it would depend on the determination of the Speaker after an inspection of the bill whether it would be privileged or not. My opinion is that it is privileged, but, of course, I can not speak for the Chair on that subject. Hence I think it would be better to take up the bill by unanimous consent, and I hope gentlemen will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MADDOX. I will object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I now give notice that as this is a privileged bill, after the reading of the Journal to-morrow morning I shall ask the House to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering it and reporting it back to the House.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word or two. This is a very important bill that the gentleman is now presenting, and the bill and report are to be published in the RECORD to-morrow morning. We have no time to see what has been done and no time to study the bill. I do not think it is fair to call it up to-morrow morning, and for that reason I entered an objection. We should have an opportunity to see what has been done. I would have no objection to its going over to the next day to give us a little time to look into it.

Mr. HOPKINS. There is nothing in the bill but what every gentleman in the House is entirely familiar with; but in deference to the gentleman from Georgia, I will make my request to apply to Friday morning instead of to-morrow morning.

Mr. MADDOX. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the supplemental request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], which is that this bill be made a special order for the day after to-morrow—Friday. Is there objection?

Mr. MAHON. I object.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I renew my notice that to-morrow morning after the reading of the Journal I shall ask for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois gives notice that he will call the bill up to-morrow morning.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the gentleman in that connection——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call for the regular order.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] will withdraw his motion for a moment. I wish to ask unanimous consent for the adoption of a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman from Connecticut has any business which he desires to have transacted, I will withdraw the demand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] withdraws for the time being the demand for the regular order.

Mr. HENRY of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Monday, February 3, 1902, immediately after the reading of the Journal, it shall be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill (H. R. 9206) "to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of the State or Territory into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine;" and this motion shall continue privileged until the bill shall have been passed by the House: Provided, however, That it shall not interfere with general appropriation bills, conference reports, consideration of the Private Calendar on Fridays, or special orders already made.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi and others objected.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

HEATING OF STREET-RAILWAY CARS.

Mr. HOAR. I introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia. It is very brief, and I ask that it be read at length.

The bill (S. 3370) to regulate the heating and care of street-railway cars in the District of Columbia was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be the duty of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia from time to time to make such recommendations to the proprietors or managers of the various street railways in the District of Columbia for the comfort and convenience and safety of passengers and the public as shall seem to them desirable.

SEC. 2. That said Commissioners shall report to Congress annually on the 1st day of January of each year, and as much oftener as shall to them seem desirable, whether said railway companies have obeyed or complied with such recommendations, and the reasons, if any, that said proprietors or managers may have assigned for noncompliance therewith.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to be allowed to make one observation in regard to the bill.

I am not one of those persons, if there be any, who always wish to be finding fault with public corporations which have in charge the convenience of the public. Especially do I think that in general the street-railway system of the District of Columbia is fairly well administered; but certainly the public have a right to hold the companies to more care for the health and safety of the people than they exercise. In weather like this not to have in a street railway the ordinary heating arrangements which are found in the cars in every little town in the North at this season of the year, exposing people to great discomfort and to very serious danger in regard to health and life, seems to me to be a great wrong. That is the case, and it has been the case, with the street cars here, and I understand that the conductors on being applied to say they can not turn on the heat; that they would be discharged if they did so.

In my own State a system of recommendation not putting any absolute arbitrary power into the hands of the railroad commissioners has operated perfectly. The Massachusetts railroad commissioners are authorized to make recommendations to various railroad companies in all such matters, and if the companies disobey, as they have a right to do, the commissioners are then to report to the legislature the facts in the case. But in no instance, I believe, certainly in very few instances, have the railroad companies ever disregarded a recommendation of the railroad commissioners for the public comfort and convenience and safety; and I have no doubt that would be the case here. It will save the constant appeal to Congress in little grievances, and I have no doubt will be entirely effectual.

I hope my friend the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia will give the matter his attention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

EMPLOYMENT OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. BURNHAM (for Mr. McCOMAS) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be, and it hereby is, authorized to appoint a messenger, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, at the rate of $1,440 per annum, until otherwise provided for by law.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture be directed to transmit to the Senate any facts which they possess with reference to the preservation in the United States or the Dominion of Canada of the buffalo, or American bison, informing the Senate whether or not such animals are dying out or are on the increase; to what extent they are running wild or are being domesticated, and whether or not such as remain are of pure or mixed blood, and also informing the Senate whether or not any steps ought to be taken by the United States for the preservation from extinction of such animals.

REPORTS ON ISTHMIAN CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals cause to be prepared an analytical index of Senate Report No. 1337, Fifty-sixth Congress, and Senate Report No. 1, Fifty-seventh Congress.

ACTS OF PHILIPPINE COMMISSION.

Mr. RAWLINS. I submit a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of War is directed to inform the Senate if the following has been passed by the Philippine Commission, and is being enforced as a law in said islands, and persons punished thereunder, viz:

"SEC. 2. Every person owing allegiance to the United States or the government of the Philippine Islands and having knowledge of any treason against them, or either of them, who conceals and does not, as soon as may be, disclose and make known the same to the provincial governor in the province in which he resides, or to the civil governor of the islands, or to some judge of a court of record, is guilty of misprison of treason, and shall be imprisoned not more than seven years and be fined not more than $1,000."

"SEC. 8. Every person who shall utter seditious words or speeches; write, publish, or circulate scurrilous libels against the Government of the United States or the insular government of the Philippine Islands, or which tend to disturb or obstruct any lawful officer in executing his office, or which tend to instigate others to cabal or meet together for unlawful purposes, or which suggest or incite rebellious conspiracies or riots, or which tend to stir up the people against the lawful authorities or to disturb the peace of the community, the safety and order of the government, or who shall knowingly conceal such evil practices, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 9. All persons who shall meet together for the purpose of forming, or who shall form, any secret society, or who shall, after the passage of this act, continue membership in a society already formed, having for its object, in whole or in part, the promotion of treason, rebellion, or sedition, or the promulgation of any political opinion or policy, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

"SEC. 10. Until it has been officially proclaimed that a state of war or insurrection against the authority or sovereignty of the United States no longer exists in the Philippine Islands it shall be unlawful for any person to advocate orally, or by writing or printing or like methods, the independence of the Philippine Islands or their separation from the United States, whether by peaceable or forcible means, or to print, publish, or circulate any handbill, newspaper, or other publication advocating such independence or separation.

"Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $2,000 and imprisonment not exceeding one year."

Mr. LODGE. I would say to the Senator from Utah that Governor Taft will be before the committee to-morrow morning, and the Senator can then ask that question of him directly, without asking the Secretary of War to duplicate the information. I have no earthly objection to the resolution, not the least in the world; but the Senator can in that way, in my judgment, get the information much more quickly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the resolution will go over.

Mr. RAWLINS. I ask the Senator to withdraw his objection for a moment until I can make a statement in regard to it.

Mr. LODGE. I did not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] objected.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will waive the objection in order to hear the Senator.

Mr. RAWLINS. It is being circulated and repeated that that act was passed by the Philippine Commission. Upon examination of the laws passed by the Commission which have been sent to us, I failed to find it. It seems to be a later number than any of the acts which are contained in the volumes which have been laid before the Senate. Governor Taft, it is true, is to be here to-morrow; but I am advised that this act was passed during his absence, and it is possible that he may not have accurate information as to the terms of the act. Now, it is fair to those of us who desire to discuss the question upon the proper basis, and who desire information, that we should have official information as to whether this is an act passed by the Commission and being enforced as a law in the islands. That is the only object of the resolution, and I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not interpose his objection.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think the resolution had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire objects, and the resolution goes over until to-morrow morning.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

Mr. HOAR. I move to take up for consideration the joint resolution (S. R. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting the succession to the Presidency in certain cases.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It proposes that the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States shall be proposed for ratification by the legislatures in the several States, which, when ratified by legislatures in three-fourths of the United States, shall be valid as a part of the said Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE XVI.

In all cases, not provided for by Article II, clause 5, of the Constitution, where there is no person entitled to discharge the duties of the office of the President, the same shall devolve upon the Vice-President. The Congress may by law provide for the case where there is no person entitled to hold the office of President or Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability shall be removed or a President shall be elected.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was read the third time, and passed (two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative).

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BUTTE, MONT.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1633) to increase the limit of cost of the post-office building at Butte, Mont.

The Secretary read the bill, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 5, before the word "hundred" to strike out "five" and insert "four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost of the post-office building at Butte, Mont., be increased from $225,000 to $400,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL BATTLEFIELDS MEMORIAL PARK IN VIRGINIA.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1452) to establish the Fredericksburg and Adjacent National Battlefields Memorial Park in the State of Virginia.

The Secretary read the bill, and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to suggest to the Senator having this bill in charge that he accept an amendment, which will not in the least impair it; that is, to strike out, from line 8 to line 12 of the first section, the words—and on which limited territory the late distinguished Union general, John C. Newton, after careful investigation, declared that more great battles were fought, more men engaged, and more execution done than on any other spot of similar area in the world.

It seems to me, in the first place, that we ought to be very cautious of affirming in an act of Congress a historical fact relating to matters like that; and, in the next place, if we are going to affirm it, we should do so, and not merely say that somebody said so, without saying whether we agree with it or no.

Mr. PROCTOR. I consent to the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. My amendment is, in section 1, line 8, after the word "miles," to strike out down to and including the word "world," in line 12.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, on page 1, line 8, after the word "miles," it is proposed to strike out:

And on which limited territory the late distinguished Union general, John C. Newton, after careful investigation, declared that more great battles were fought, more men engaged, and more execution done than on any other spot of similar area in the world.

So as to read:

That for the purpose of preserving and suitably marking for historical and professional military study the famous battlefields in Spottsylvania County, Va., known as Fredericksburg, Salem Church, Chancellorsville, the Wilderness, and Spottsylvania Court-House, all of them within a radius of 8 miles, and upon the ceding of jurisdiction to the United States by the State of Virginia over all lands and public highways called for by this act, and the report of the Attorney-General of the United States that the title to the lands over which jurisdiction as aforesaid is ceded and the right of the United States to occupy, use, and improve said highways is perfect, the following-described highways in the State of Virginia are hereby declared to be approaches to and parts of the Fredericksburg and Adjacent National Battlefields Memorial Park, as established by the second section of this act, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARTHUR R. HENDERSON AND OTHERS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 238) for the relief of Arthur R. Henderson. I send to the desk a committee amendment which has been reported with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read to the Senate for its information.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not rise to object to the consideration of this bill, but I will venture to express the hope that, after it has been considered, the Calendar may be taken up in order. The hour and ten minutes remaining before the close of the morning hour would, in my opinion, clear the Calendar of unobjected cases.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 238) for the relief of Arthur R. Henderson, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, at the end of the bill, to insert the following:

The Secretary of the Treasury is also authorized and directed to pay to George L. Wentworth, administrator of the estate of Henry A. Thomas, his salary as postmaster of the city of Boston from June 1, 1899, to December 6, 1899, the date of his resignation, in addition to that already authorized to be retained by Arthur R. Henderson.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in settling the accounts of Arthur R. Henderson while acting postmaster of Boston, Mass., to allow him to retain the sum of $1,750 over and above his regular salary of assistant postmaster, for his services as acting postmaster for the term of seven months, from June 1, 1899, to December 31, 1899, inclusive. The Secretary of the Treasury is also authorized and directed to pay to George L. Wentworth, administrator of the estate of Henry A. Thomas, his salary as postmaster of the city of Boston from June 1, 1899, to December 6, 1899, the date of his resignation, in addition to that already authorized to be retained by Arthur R. Henderson.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Arthur R. Henderson and others."

GEORGE H. PAUL.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1949) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to appoint George H. Paul a warrant machinist in the Navy.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to appoint George H. Paul to fill an original vacancy in the 100 warrant machinists in the Navy, authorized by section 14 of the act approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," notwithstanding he was about seven months beyond the age limit at the time of examination, he having passed the examination, near the top of the list, under a misapprehension as to the age limit, and having served twelve months at the Naval Academy and four years at sea in the Government service as an engineer.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ABERDEEN, S. DAK.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2786) to increase the limit of cost of the public building at Aberdeen, S. Dak.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "dollars to," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost of the public building at Aberdeen, S. Dak., heretofore provided for by the act of March 3, 1901, be, and the same is hereby, increased from $100,000 to $175,000.

GUARANTIES ON PROPOSALS FOR NAVAL SUPPLIES.

The bill (S. 1111) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 3719 of the Revised Statutes relative to guaranties on proposals for naval supplies" was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COCKRELL. The report in this case is very short. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. McMILLAN on the 21st instant, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1111) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 3719 of the Revised Statutes, relative to guaranties on proposals for naval supplies," make a favorable report upon the same.

The bill has the approval of the Navy Department, as will appear by the following extract from the Annual Report of the Paymaster-General:

[Report of the Paymaster-General, pp. 11, 12.]

SECURITY FOR THE EXECUTION OF CONTRACTS.

The law now requires that all bids shall be accompanied by a written guaranty or by a certified check for the full amount of the proposal (act of May 25, 1896). In the event of award of contract, the bidder must either file a bond (sec. 3719, Rev. Stats.), or, if he has submitted a certified check with his proposal in lieu of guaranty, that check may remain as security without bond. The amount of the bond, not fixed by law, varies according to the nature of the contract, generally ranging from 25 to 50 per cent of the amount involved. Ample security for its fulfillment is thus afforded, but dealers are frequently deterred from bidding by the trouble or expense of obtaining bond, or from giving a certified check instead, through reluctance to tie up cash to the full amount of the contract perhaps for several months. In a tight money market this consideration might materially affect the bidding.

In the interest, therefore, both of the Government and of the business world, I urge two changes in the present law—that the act of May 25, 1896, be so modified as to authorize—

First. Acceptance of certified check, in lieu of guaranty and bond, for such proportion of amount of proposals and contracts as the Department may fix.

Second. An annual bond in such sum as the Department shall decide in the several cases for the fulfillment of any and all undertakings that a contractor may enter into with the Bureau.

With these forms of security, in addition to the bond for a single contract under the present law, the Government would be fully protected, while contractors would have a choice of methods. It is certainly good policy to allow as much latitude in business methods with contractors as is consistent with proper protection of the Government's interests.

By giving the pay officer this duty he could render efficient service in the military organization, and would release for other duty an officer now assigned to the powder division. This consideration should earnestly commend the idea at a time when the Navy's growth in ships is rapid, while its quota of officers is fixed. There were many instances in the civil and Spanish wars where pay officers were placed by their commanding officers in charge of the powder division, or a section thereof, rendering efficient and satisfactory service. It is believed that pay officers in general could qualify for this service, which is now performed by a line officer, and they should, if found qualified, be so detailed. This would make available for this duty about 70 pay officers on board ship, thereby releasing a corresponding number of line officers for gun-division duty. The report of the board has been approved by the Bureau of Navigation, and it is but pursuing its recommendations to their natural and necessary conclusion to urge that the Department prescribe the qualifications requisite for powder-division duty on the part of pay officers afloat; that they shall be required to take examinations after a definite period of time, and that such of them as are found qualified be assigned accordingly. In order that assistant paymasters, upon entering the service, shall have the requisite knowledge, it is further suggested that great benefit to the Navy would follow if the law were changed so that appointments to the Pay Corps would hereafter be made from graduates of the Naval Academy.

Mr. COCKRELL. I observe that the bill puts in only one clause of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy. Would it not be better to have the bill contain both clauses, so that he could require either the certified check or the annual bond, leaving it optional with the Secretary and with the party?

Mr. McMILLAN. The bill was prepared by the Department, and I supposed it covered all they thought necessary, although I think myself it might be better to put in both.

Mr. SPOONER. There might be a good many cases where a bond would be better than a certified check.

Mr. McMILLAN. A bond is now provided for.

Mr. SPOONER. The object of this proposed innovation is to give the alternative.

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. If a man wants to give a bond instead of tying up the money, he ought to be permitted to do it. I understood the Senator from Missouri to say that it did not so provide.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that ought to be added. He ought to have the privilege, or the Navy Department might have the privilege of requiring it.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Michigan says it does.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator will read it, I think he will find that it does not.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let the Secretary read that part of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Read the last part.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, accept, in lieu of the written guaranty required to accompany a proposal for naval supplies, and in lieu of the bond required for the faithful performance of a contract for furnishing such supplies, a certified check, payable to the order of the Secretary of the Navy, for such proportion of such proposal or contract as may, in his judgment, be deemed sufficient and satisfactory, the check to be held by the Secretary of the Navy until the requirements of the proposal or contract shall be complied with and as a guaranty for compliance with the same.

Mr. COCKRELL. It would not give him the right to do that, it seems to me.

Mr. SPOONER. The language is permissive:

The Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, accept, in lieu of the written guaranty required to accompany a proposal for naval supplies, and in lieu of the bond required for the faithful performance of a contract for furnishing such supplies, a certified check.

It is permissive only.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator think that this would give the Secretary the right to accept an annual bond in such sum as the Department might direct?

Mr. McMILLAN. That is as I understand it, Mr. President.

Mr. COCKRELL. This would be in lieu of that bond. He does not recommend the old bond, but he recommends an annual bond, which the party may give—either one or the other. It seems to me both ought to be in the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I think a fair construction of the bill would imply that he might require the written guaranty or he might require the bond, but in lieu of either he may take the certified check.

Mr. COCKRELL. He wanted it modified according to his recommendation, as follows:

In the interest, therefore, both of the Government and of the business world, I urge two changes in the present law—that the act of May 25, 1896, be so modified as to authorize—

First. Acceptance of certified check, in lieu of guaranty and bond, for such proportion of amount of proposals and contracts as the Department may fix.

Second. An annual bond in such sum as the Department shall decide in the several cases for the fulfillment of any and all undertakings that a contractor may enter into with the Bureau.

He wanted both. I do not think this bill provides for them, though it may.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is the understanding that it does provide for it. It may be wrong. The measure was prepared at the Department.

Mr. SPOONER. It is an important matter. Is there any objection to its going over?

Mr. COCKRELL. I make no objection to the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think it is all right.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator thinks it contains what the Secretary recommends, I make no objection.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think it is just as he wants it.

Mr. SPOONER. I think it is permissive, in the alternative, and would cover either.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT CODE.

Mr. McMILLAN. A few days ago a bill was passed to amend the code of the District of Columbia in connection with the drawing of grand jurors. The bill was passed and sent to the House, and for some reason it was not taken up, but another bill on the same subject was passed by that body and sent to the Senate. I this morning reported favorably the bill (H. R. 9342) to amend the code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901, and I ask that it may be taken up at this time. It is a matter of great importance to the District that it should be passed to-day.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is not this an exact copy—in the same language—of the bill which was passed by the Senate two or three mornings ago?

Mr. McMILLAN. It is exactly the same measure.

Mr. COCKRELL. What has become of that bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. That is the question.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has it passed out of the possession of the Senate?

Mr. McMILLAN. The bill was sent from the Senate to the House, but in some way or other it has been lost and has not been discovered, and the House has passed a bill to the same effect and it has come over to us.

Mr. COCKRELL. They have been compared, and this is in identically the same language as the Senate bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir; identically the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed, and that the House be requested to return it to the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. That is right. We can then indefinitely postpone it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be indefinitely postponed when it comes back.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri enters a motion to reconsider the votes by which a like bill, Senate bill 3199, was ordered to a third reading and passed by the Senate on Thursday last, and moves that it be recalled from the House of Representatives. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

L. A. DAVIS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the Calendar will be announced.

The bill (S. 276) for the relief of L. A. Davis was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It refers to the Court of Claims the claim of L. A. Davis, of the State of Washington, for compensation in carrying the English mails over mail route No. 15406, from Olympia, via Tumwater, Coal Bank, Grandmound, Skookumchuck, Claquato, Grand Prairie, Castlerock, and Freeport, to Monticello, in the State of Washington, late Washington Territory, and return, from on or about the 1st day of August, 1868, to the 30th day of June, 1870.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LAREDO, TEX.

The bill (S. 1538) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Laredo, in the State of Texas, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, on page 2, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "one hundred and sixty;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and to contract for the erection and completion thereon of a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States court-house, post-office, and other Government offices, in the city of Laredo and State of Texas, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $160,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NATCHEZ, MISS.

Mr. MONEY. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 1790) for the erection of a public building at Natchez, Miss.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I think we ought to go on with the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us go on with the Calendar.

Mr. DUBOIS. I do not like to object, but very soon Senate bill 1187 will be reached on the Calendar, and I am very anxious to have it passed. I think it is fair to all that bills should be taken up in regular order. I will not object, however. I beg pardon of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. MONEY. It will take but a moment to pass this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other governmental offices in the city of Natchez and State of Mississippi, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, not to exceed the sum of $75,000.

Proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

Proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary of the results of said examination and of his recommendation thereon, and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

If, upon consideration of said report and accompanying papers, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem further investigation necessary, he may appoint a commission of not more than three persons, one of whom shall be an officer of the Treasury Department, which commission shall also examine the said proposed sites, and such others as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate, and grant such hearings in relation thereto as they shall deem necessary; and said commission shall within thirty days after such examination make to the Secretary of the Treasury written report of their conclusion in the premises, accompanied by all statements, maps, plats, or documents taken by or submitted to them, in like manner as hereinbefore provided in regard to the proceedings of said agent of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon finally determine the location of the building to be erected.

The compensation of said commissioners shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but the same shall not exceed $8 per day and actual traveling expenses: Provided, however, That the member of said commission appointed from the Treasury Department shall be paid only his actual traveling expenses.

The building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon at Natchez, in the State of Mississippi."

IDAHO STATE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' HOME.

Mr. HEITFELD. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1187) granting to the State of Idaho 50,000 acres of land to aid in the continuation, enlargement, and maintenance of the Idaho State Soldiers and Sailors' Home.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 1578) for improving, repairing, and the erection of an addition to the public building at Springfield, Ill.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause the post-office and court-house building at Springfield, Ill., to be improved, repaired, and an addition constructed thereto, at a total cost not to exceed $150,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT ON EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the annual report of the Office of Experiment Stations, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, which includes a report on the work and expenditures of the agricultural experiment stations in the United States for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1901, in accordance with the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the said fiscal year.

The attention of Congress is called to the request of the Secretary of Agriculture that 6,000 copies of the report be printed for the use of the Department of Agriculture, and that provision be made to print such a report annually.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, January 29, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message will be printed and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. COCKRELL. Would it not go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The President requests that there be 6,000 copies of the report printed, and the Chair thought it better, under the circumstances, that it should go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right; let it go to that committee.

REPORT OF INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Industrial Commission, transmitting Volume XI of the reports of that Commission. It will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will it not be printed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All these volumes have been sent to the Committee on Printing, and it is presumed that the committee will report a joint resolution for printing the whole series.

Mr. COCKRELL. Nearly all of them have been printed. Some seven or eight volumes have already been printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are some seven or eight volumes that have been sent to the committee within the last week or ten days without an order to print. The Chair has no objection, as a matter of course, to the order to print.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought the order had been made to print the others when they were presented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. I think not.

Mr. COCKRELL. If not, let this volume take the usual course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has left the question of printing to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

IMPRISONMENT OF CERTAIN OFFENDERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 12, 1901, certain information as to whether or not national-bank officers or other persons convicted of crimes against the national currency act have been sentenced to imprisonment in houses of correction or jails instead of national or State penitentiaries, etc., which, on motion of Mr. TILLMAN, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

REPORT OF CAPITAL TRACTION COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a statement of the receipts and disbursements of the Capital Traction Company, together with a list of the stockholders, for the year ended December 31, 1901; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10368) to provide for the removal of snow and ice from cross walks and gutters in the city of Washington, D. C.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, in the liberty of debate which has obtained in the Senate a long time, no Senator, and very few habitues who look down upon us from the galleries, will be astonished that I shall not have much, if anything, to say about the bill under discussion, except by way, possibly, of comparison and reminder. I do not know that I should have gone into this matter at all except in a brief and extemporaneous way. All my remarks are more or less extemporaneous, but I should have gone into it without any serious preparation but for the unfairness, as I thought it, of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] yesterday. I am not prepared now to do the subject justice at all, because the embarrassment of riches, so to speak, with which my theme furnishes me has rendered it impossible in the brief hours since we adjourned last evening to collate, prepare, and get in an accessible shape the vast amount of very valuable information which I am prepared to give to the Senators from Massachusetts, and the other Senators incidentally.

Yesterday the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] felt called upon to vindicate the truth of history and present some facts from unimpeachable authority which controverted and overturned a statement made by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in relation to the relative number of troops furnished by Massachusetts and the States south of Mason and Dixon's line in the Revolutionary war. The junior Senator from Massachusetts, having listened to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] and to the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who in a most eloquent and feeling manner disclaimed any intention to make any odious comparison, at the expiration of the morning hour and the presentation to the Senate of the bill now under discussion, seized the floor it appeared to me in a rather arbitrary and unwarranted manner. Brushing aside the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], who was on his feet to vindicate his State and section and ignoring me—I had not made any move, but I proposed to follow the Senator from Georgia—he peremptorily, so to speak, presumed to parcel out the time, and indicated that he was willing for the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to go on with the discussion of the Philippine tariff bill, but that he did not like to have the time of the Senate wasted, or words to that effect, on this very interesting, ancient historical discussion.

When the Senator from Alabama kindly yielded to the Senator from Georgia, then the Senator from Massachusetts still retaining the floor proceeded to inject an entirely foreign matter to the subject then under discussion—General Wheaton's record—which had already been sufficiently ventilated on a previous day by another Senator, and that necessarily brought a response from the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. My gallant young friend from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] leaped into the fray and proceeded to read us of the minority a lecture, and charged us with conspiracy against prompt action and filibustering, and so on. So it was only very late in the afternoon, after an hour and a half or so of this sparring in regard to General Wheaton, that the Senator from Georgia obtained the floor and put into the RECORD what he had to say, a very strong and lucid statement from his point of view, and adding to the vindication of the truth of history. Then I wanted to go on, but the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] begged me to desist; he had some special reasons for wanting an executive session. So I had to delay my remarks until this morning.

The Philippine tariff bill is an important matter; that is, from the standpoint of those who are disposed and intend to relentlessly and remorselessly pursue the policy we are now following. It is true the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] very clearly demonstrated that the thing could wait a year. There is plenty of money for the carpetbaggers to squander over there. There is no lack of funds to carry on the so-called Philippine colony, or dependency, or whatever other thing it may be. But it is the intention of the Senator from Massachusetts and his colleagues to legislate on the tariff in regard to the Philippines. They feel under obligations to formulate their policy and get themselves before the country on that line of battle upon which they propose to make the fight.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts yesterday (I give him the entire credit, though the idea had occurred to me; but still I give it to him) declared that fortunately perhaps we had strayed into a discussion which was entirely germane to the Philippine tariff bill, and that nothing could be more beneficial and instructive than for the people of this country and its law-making body to have their minds revert to the origin of the Republic and of the struggles of our fathers, and incidentally to the similarity of conditions which existed in these States when they were colonies struggling against England and in the Philippines now struggling against us.

In entering upon the discussion of the part that South Carolina took in the Revolutionary war, I could wish that an abler hand and a better prepared man were here in my place. South Carolina has made more history, history of vast moment and importance in the evolution of the events which go to create free government, than any other State in this Union, and has written less of it. Barring three or four historians in the earlier days of the last century, who were living witnesses and participants in the Revolutionary struggle, and who were, therefore, within reach of facts and data which have since been swallowed up by time, the State's history makes a leap almost from the Revolutionary struggle to the civil war without any memorial in the shape of written record. It is only within the last five years that a man, a native of the State, one of profound erudition and a ripe scholar, has found the leisure or the opportunity or the inclination to take the history of that colony and of that State up and treat it comprehensively or at all adequately. He has not finished his work. He has already written three volumes the size of the one I hold in my hand, and he has only reached that period in the Revolutionary war when, in the year 1780, the theater of war was transferred actively to that State.

I pray that Edward McCrady, the author of this book, may live to complete his work and furnish to the students of history in the United States and elsewhere, who feel any interest in it, a story that is as replete with tragedy and romance and of deeds of high emprise as any that has ever been told or enacted in the world, and that it shall be completed by one pen. He is thoroughly fitted; he has the true historical instinct and willingness to delve into the masses of matter and material and sift out the truth. I shall, however, not quote much from him, because he has only reached in his story that part of the State's history which I feel more particularly called on at this time to present to this body.

I am sorry that the senior Senator from Massachusetts is not in his seat, because, after his most beautiful and eloquent utterance of yesterday, I desire to add to the feeling which has been expressed by the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Mississippi as emphatic disclaimer as they gave to any suspicion that he had any dream of casting any reflection or of making any odious comparisons.

We all acknowledge, every student of history must acknowledge, the glory of Massachusetts, its grandeur, its unique civilization, unique in that it has been able, although it occupies a small area of most miserable, poverty-stricken, rocky, stony soil, through which I last week traveled on the cars, and therefore I speak, from that and other visits, from occular demonstration—I say Massachusetts, although her people have been nursed in such a rugged cradle, or a cradle affording such unpropitious conditions, has been enabled by the greatness of her sons and her devotion to certain statesmanlike lines of governmental action to make that State the dominant, predominant factor in the affairs of this nation. Coming from the other family, or prong, you might say, of the English race, when they were divided between the Puritan and Cavalier, from a State which was settled by the Cavaliers, and for a long while, and even now, has inherited the feelings and sentiments and ambitions of Prince Rupert rather than of Cromwell, I can understand and realize just what Massachusetts has wrought in the forming of this Government and in shaping its destiny to the present condition. I therefore have no criticism to make of Massachusetts. I have no desire to cast any imputations on her or her representatives here.

By a strange coincidence the State of South Carolina and the State of Massachusetts are facing each other again in direct antagonism. They have been antagonists of old, and in other days South Carolina may have been wrong—I do not say she was—but at this time Massachusetts can not, without belying all her glorious past, be content with the position she occupies at this time. I thank God that Massachusetts has one representative in this Chamber, if South Carolina at this time has only one, who stands for those principles upon which this Republic was founded. I hope that her eloquent senior Senator [Mr. HOAR], while for the time he may be in the minority and be out of touch with the people of that grand Commonwealth, will continue to appeal to them, and in time show them the error of their ways and have that great State line up, as it has always done when properly appealed to and shown what was the right and what was the true road to liberty, to follow that path in the future as it has in the past, regardless of consequences.

I wanted to direct the attention of the senior Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that I have good authority, outside of my general knowledge of history, for giving the credit to Massachusetts which she can justly claim of being the cradle of liberty.

I hold in my hand a very precious book—precious to every lover of his country, inasmuch as it is the author's copy, presented in 1802 by the man who wrote it, Maj. Gen. William Moultrie, of South Carolina, to Thomas Jefferson, then President of the United States. There is printed on the back "Thomas Jefferson, President of the United States, from the author," and it came from Mr. Jefferson's library when Congress bought it.

This man, William Moultrie, is known in history by a few brief lines mentioning his daring defense of an extemporaneous fort constructed of palmetto logs upon an open beach within point, blank range of a very strong British fleet, which was accompanied by an army in transports, on the 28th day of June, 1776, before the Declaration of Independence had been promulgated at Philadelphia.

This man, I say, is known in history simply as the commanding officer of this fort; but he and the men under his command, all South Carolinians, raw militia though they were, behaved themselves so bravely that they drove off those ships, destroyed one, badly crippled the balance, and a large number of sailors and soldiers on them were wounded or killed. That victory thrilled this country from one end of it to the other, causing patriots everywhere to rejoice that the cause of right and liberty had triumphed there. But for the scarcity of powder there is no doubt the victory would have been more complete—many other ships sunk.

Moultrie was then a colonel in the South Carolina militia, and it is of record here that Gen. Charles Lee, who was in command in that portion of the country at the time, made strenuous efforts to induce Moultrie to withdraw from Sullivans Island. But for the action of Governor Rutledge—President Rutledge, as we called him, our first provincial governor, the "dictator," as he is known in our local history—but for Rutledge and Moultrie making strenuous opposition, in fact refusal, General Lee's counsels would have been followed, and the first battle of Fort Moultrie would never have been fought.

Lee's constant cry in his communications—and there are a dozen letters in this book from him—was that "you have no means of retreat; there is a deep estuary between you and the mainland, and, unless you can build a bridge over which you can get away, your fort will be knocked to pieces in half an hour, and what is going to become of you?" He did not believe in those palmetto logs and a little dirt thrown in the pens, which served as the beginning of modern fortifications, in which we have substituted earth as the most plastic and resisting material of which to construct batteries. The fort was thus constructed from the fact that the island at that time was filled with a growth of palmetto trees, some of them centuries old—for they grow very slowly—which were ready to hand, only needing the use of the ax to cut them down and into the proper length and notch them up into the structure of temporary breastworks with embrasures for the artillery.

I say it was the presence upon the island of the palmettos, which nowhere else are found in the State, except immediately along the coast—you do not find them inland even 10 miles—and the State of South Carolina from that day to this has been known as the Palmetto State. The palmetto wood is a spongy substance, which receives cannon balls and closes over them without a particle of splintering or disarrangement, such as would occur with any other wood in the world. When this warning was repeated by others Moultrie answered, "Then we will lie behind the ruins and keep them from landing."

Moultrie gives here the history of the flag under which he fought, saying that the uniform of the volunteers was of blue, that the regiment had voluntarily adopted, as a mark on their caps, a silver crescent, and he wanted some flag to fight under, so he ordered one made with a field of solid blue with a crescent of white in the dexter corner. I presume it was of silk, but there is no mention made of the material. That was the flag which, when shot down and falling outside the breastworks, a gallant South Carolinian leaped over into the front, where he was in full view and exposed to the British fire, picked it up, crawled back, and, as there was no staff handy, he took the cannon staff with which he was swabbing his artillery, and, placing the blue rag on it, he got up on the old flagstaff and lashed it to the remnant of it. Sergeant Jasper was the man whom we all recall as one of the heroes of the Revolution, who afterwards fell gallantly fighting at Savannah in the assault on that city.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to state in that connection that the State of Georgia has a county named after Sergeant Jasper?

Mr. TILLMAN. The State of Georgia has done herself credit in thus preserving the memory of a noble Revolutionary hero. I may do that State the credit to say that she has been more sentimental than South Carolina has been, for while we have 40 counties and are making new ones at a slow pace now, we have never honored one by giving it the name of Moultrie. I think it is a disgrace to South Carolina that she has not done it. She has honored Sumter; she has honored Marion and Pickens and Horry; but it was simply the fortunes of war which caused the primal hero, the superior officer, but a man who never flinched in any position in which he was placed, who was always judicious, brave, calm, and courageous, never to have had any similar honor bestowed upon him because he happened to be under somebody else. At the siege of Charleston he was surrendered a prisoner of war, and remained a prisoner on parole during that period of the State's history, from 1780 to 1782, when its bloodiest pages and its most glorious pages were written. I will add here that the palmetto became the State's emblem from that battle, and its State flag yet bears a palmetto tree and the crescent both in white on a field of blue.

But I want to get back to what General Moultrie says about the origin of the war. I wish my historical friend from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] were here, but I can not send a page or the Sergeant-at-Arms to hunt around for the Senator, so I suppose I shall have to go on and let him miss all this tribute which Moultrie pays Massachusetts, showing that he was not jealous—not that I accuse the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] of it, but the junior Senator appeared yesterday a little uneasy for fear Massachusetts might be robbed of some of the glory which, in the publication of that old report of General KNOX, he had endeavored to inject again into history as a kind of continuous misrepresentation and slander, and that he did not want it to be fully refuted and those statements shown to be erroneous, if not false.

I will read what General Moultrie says in the very opening page of his book, but I will state further that a moment ago, in a little passage with one of the Senators from Massachusetts, I remarked that I was going to read from some history and he said, "You have not written any history." I acknowledge that we have not written what we ought to have written, but I think, coming from a historian himself, that that was an assumption of a little too much glory and superiority, when he knew, as he must have known, of the existence of this book, The Memoirs of the American Revolution, by Moultrie; of this other book, The History of South Carolina during the Revolution, by David Ramsay, and of two or three others which were written, as I said, in the earlier part of the last century—one by Mills and another by Carroll—in which all of these earlier struggles, deprivations, and miseries through which the State went in behalf of liberty are depicted in a clear and most interesting manner. Here is what Moultrie says about the American Revolution:

> The American Revolution took its rise in Boston, the people of that province being grievously oppressed by the British Parliament, who had passed several laws to restrain their trade and shut up their ports, upon wh'ch they had several meetings of the inhabitants at Boston; and on the 13th of May, 1774, they came into the following resolution:

Then he goes on and gives the language adopted by the mass meeting of the citizens of Boston, calling on the other colonies not to import goods from Great Britain, or to have anything to do with Great Britain in the way of commercial relations. Then he proceeds to recite the effect upon the people of the State of South Carolina and the people of Charleston when they received this news from Massachusetts, a sister colony, situated in an entirely different way, but situated in a way to appeal to their sympathies as freemen and Americans. He recites the acts by which a convention was called of the citizens of the city. Feeling that they ought to have the cooperation of their fellow-citizens throughout the colony, that meeting adjourned until delegates could come from the back country.

The upshot of it was that South Carolina, through its colonial assembly, or provincial congress, as they termed it, made a declaration of war against Great Britain immediately after the battle of Lexington. After reciting the causes of complaint and the grievances which they had, or rather which Massachusetts had, but which South Carolina did not have, that congress went on to declare that the reason why it threw its destiny with Massachusetts was:

> IV. Because the formal military and naval forces lately sent from Great Britain to reenforce the army in Boston manifest the accursed design of the British ministry to endeavor to quell the American troubles by arms and not to quiet them by the laws of reason and justice. Thence, despairing of a redress of grievances by dutiful and peaceable application, long unavailing, presented to his Britannic Majesty, we see no alternative but that we submit to abject slavery or appeal to the Lord of Hosts in defense of the common and inalienable rights peculiar to Englishmen.

The cry rang from Maine to Georgia, "The cause of Massachusetts is the cause of us all."

I should say here in passing that if there was one colony which had been the favorite of the English king; which had been peculiarly prosperous and happy under the royal rule; which had absolutely no cause of grievance, no occasion to go to war or to resist the royal authority, it was South Carolina; but we have the impelling motive disclosed in the thrilling story here told. When it was shown that one colony, inhabited by our kindred in Massachusetts, was being trampled under foot, unjust taxation being levied upon it, soldiers quartered in the houses of its citizens, a port bill passed, or orders excluding from its harbor all vessels of commerce, South Carolina prepared to resist and declared its purpose to throw its destiny in with Massachusetts, because it had regard for the rights of man, it had faith and belief in the rights of its own people, and of every American to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, as was afterwards announced. It did not propose to see one colony driven to extremities and made a football for tyranny without expressing sympathy and getting ready to participate in its relief. The condition of South Carolina at that time was a peculiar one.

Mr. President, there are plenty of cloakrooms around, and there is full opportunity for conferences anywhere. I do not want anybody to listen to me who does not care to do so, for I did not expect in making this speech to be listened to, or to thrill anyone; but I should be obliged if Senators would adjourn their little conferences outside of the Chamber, and let me speak in peace to the empty desks. I know that Senators on the other side are not interested in the colonial history of South Carolina; they are not interested in the struggle for liberty of our forefathers. They say, "Oh, that is old; that is antiquated; that is ancient; you are wasting our time; you are filibustering;" but I will show you before I get through that if there is one thing to which the attention of the country should be called, or to which the minds and hearts of the calloused majority of the commercialized Republican party, the money-grabbing and money-loving party, should have its attention called, it is to the miserable, canting, hypocritical, damnable attitude it is now assuming. But if Senators will either address the Chair and get his permission to speak or retire out of the Chamber, I shall be obliged.

I shall not make any further complaint of that nature, and I shall not appeal to my brother Senators to give me that courtesy, which I always endeavor to give, although all of us sometimes step over the bounds. They may say, "Oh, we know all that." But you do not know all that. I am going to give you some facts in regard to the struggle in South Carolina, of which not one in a thousand or ten thousand of you has ever heard or knows anything about.

I want to say that South Carolina at the time of which I speak, besides being a happy and prosperous colony, with no cause of grievance to resist the royal authority, by reason of that very fact was seriously divided, its own people being arrayed on opposite sides, a large number believing that it was silly and foolish to take up arms—"silly," as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] said the other day to a Senator on my left who spoke of the Declaration of Independence.

These Royalists, or Tories, as they came to be called, felt that they owed no debt to Massachusetts; they ignored or were oblivious to the underlying principles of liberty, which had moved a large majority of their fellow-citizens, and therefore it was for a long time uncertain as to what would be the attitude of the large interior portion of the State called the Ninety-six country. The fact is that the Tory sentiment, or the Royalist sentiment, was so strong there that the Provincial Congress felt called upon to dispatch two of its most respected and well-equipped men—William Henry Drayton and the Rev. William Tennent—both good speakers, to the back country and explain to the illiterate backwoodsmen what the reason was that the coast country had felt called upon to stir this matter up and bring about a condition which presaged war.

They went into that country, following the valley of the Congaree and later the Saluda—into that region which had been settled largely by men from Pennsylvania, Scotch-Irish Presbyterians—and they so far prevailed in convincing the people that they gained over an overwhelming majority to an adherence to the cause of liberty. But in the winter of 1775, when Boston was being besieged by the American Army in the effort to drive General Howe out of it, the Tories gathered in force, several hundred strong, in the Ninety-six neighborhood, at the site of the fort which was afterwards constructed by the British near Cambridge courthouse, where there was a party of patriots of 100 in hastily constructed breastworks, and after three days' fighting, during which time those who were shut in without water had to dig a well forty-odd feet through tenacious clay in order to get water, there was a parley called, and it was agreed that certain people should be allowed to go home—that is, those who were being besieged—and if all would behave themselves they would have no further fighting.

But the Tories did not disperse, and the Provincial Congress, which afterwards became known as the General Assembly, had to send a force, which in the aggregate, before it reached Ninety-six, had been swelled by accessions from the various portions of the State and some from North Carolina to over 5,000 men, marching up into this disaffected region among these Tories to overawe them, and to convert or absolutely finish the conversion and allegiance to the patriot cause of those who were wavering. They marched in what is called the "snow campaign," because during their march in December we had something almost unheard of in the history of the State.

I am 54 years old, and I never saw more than 12 inches of snow there; but it is recorded that it snowed for thirty hours and that the snow was 20 inches deep on a level. And yet these ill-clad and poorly equipped men marched on through the rugged country, with the miserable roads which were then in existence, until they got within 20 miles of the camp of the Tories, some two or three hundred strong, when 1,200 picked men were rushed forward on the best horses and surrounded the Tories and captured the whole gang, thus overawing them and completing for the time being the acquiescence of the Royal adherents in the colonial power of the Congress-men, as they were then called. They called the Tories "Kings-men;" they called the patriots "Congress-men."

Those 5,000 are not mentioned in General Knox's report. They are not even estimated or guessed at. And later on I find in this book the record of the organization of 6 regiments of regulars—2 of infantry, 1 of rangers, 1 of artillery, and 2 of riflemen. There is no mention made of them in General Knox's report; yet their officers' names are given by Moultrie; he was in command of one of the regiments which in 1776, eight months later, fought the battle of Fort Moultrie. But the records of history—these so-called records of history—are sometimes so lacking in truth and reliability it is no wonder that, although General Knox possibly tried to do the best he could, he could not get the names, because there was no record in the War Department; just as we find nowadays, that if the muster-in was not had, and the man sworn, and the names taken down, and the roll forwarded, there is no record in the War Department, and therefore a great many men are coming here every day with petitions and appeals to us of one kind and another, which we kindly listen to generally, to "complete the military record" and straighten them out.

But these South Carolinians were not thinking about pensions or endeavoring to do anything except to defend their homes and to set about formulating a system of government which would either make Great Britain recognize their rights or else they intended to set up for themselves, and they were not solicitous about making out rolls and sending them to General Knox or anybody else. These six regiments I speak of were only in the Continental pay and on the Continental rolls after September, 1776, by resolution coming from the Continental Congress asking it, and indorsed and approved by the colonial legislature.

I wish to quote here from Ramsay's History of South Carolina, or the Revolution in South Carolina, what was the status generally in South Carolina away from the coast, and largely the status throughout the country. Says Ramsay:

> The distinction of Whig and Tory took its rise in the year 1775. Both parties in the interior country were then embodied, and were obliged to impress provisions for their respective support. The advocates for Congress prevailing, they paid for articles consumed in their camps; but as no funds were provided for discharging the expenses incurred by the Royalists, all that was consumed by them was considered as a robbery. This laid the foundation of a piratical war between Whigs and Tories, which was productive of great distress and deluged the country with blood. In the interval between the insurrection of 1775 and the year 1780, the Whigs were occasionally plundered by parties who had attempted insurrections in favor of royal government. But all that was done prior to the surrender of Charleston was trifling when compared to what followed.
> After that event political hatred raged with uncommon fury, and the calamities of civil war desolated the State. The ties of nature were in several instances dissolved, and that reciprocal good will and confidence which hold mankind together in society was in a great degree extinguished. Countrymen, neighbors, friends, and brothers took different sides and ranged themselves under the opposing standards of the contending factions. In every little precinct, more especially in the interior parts of the State, King's men and Congress men were names of distinction. The passions on both sides were kept in perpetual agitation and wrought up to a degree of fury which rendered individuals regardless not only of the laws of war but of the principles of humanity. While the British had the ascendancy their partisans gave full scope to their interested and malicious passions. People of the worst characters emerged from their hiding places in swamps, called themselves King's men, and began to appropriate to their own use whatsoever came in their way. Every act of cruelty and injustice was sanctified, provided the actor called himself a friend to the King and the sufferer was denominated a rebel.
> Of those who were well disposed to the claims of America there were few to be found who had not their houses and plantations repeatedly rifled. Under the sanction of subduing rebellion, private revenge was gratified. Many houses were burned, and many people inhumanly murdered. Numbers for a long time were obliged either entirely to abandon their homes or to sleep in the woods and swamps. Rapine, outrage, and murder became so common as to interrupt the free intercourse between one place and another. That security and protection which individuals expect by entering into civil society ceased almost totally. Matters remained in this situation for the greatest part of a year after the surrender of Charlestown. When General Greene returned to South Carolina in the spring of 1781 everything was reversed. In a few weeks he dispossessed the British of all their posts in the upper country, and the exasperated Whigs once more had the superiority. On their return to their homes they generally found starving families and desolate plantations. To reimburse their losses, and to gratify revenge, they, in their turn, began to plunder and to murder. The country was laid waste, and private dwellings frequently stained with the blood of husbands and fathers, inhumanly shed in the presence of their wives and children.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts, whose profound historical research and knowledge, I should think, are possibly equal to those of his colleague, although the latter is an historian, has told us that no such condition existed in Massachusetts. After the evacuation of Boston by General Howe the war became a foreign war. We all know, as a matter of common history—that is, in the schoolbooks—that in the earlier periods of the war for independence the Tories or Royalists of Massachusetts, and of possibly several other New England regions around, went into Boston to be in touch with the King's army. They were too uneasy to live among their neighbors and friends who were patriots; therefore they took what they could gather up and hurried to the capital. They were there by the thousands, and when Lord Howe evacuated the city it took a large number of ships to furnish them transportation; but they went with him to Halifax, and most of them never returned because it was not healthy to go back to Massachusetts after having openly sympathized with Massachusetts' oppressors. Counting Lexington and Concord as one running fight in which the British were severely punished, Bunker or Breeds Hill was the only other battle in Massachusetts. From the year 1776 to the end of the war there was no conflict in Massachusetts. Her people knew nothing of real war.

But in South Carolina the condition existed, as is here depicted, of internecine strife and civil war in its most horrid form, and that is the reason why it is, you will see as I unfold the story, that the fighting, the actual conflict of arms, the bloodshed in that one colony alone, the big battles and the little battles combined, are nearly equal to all the other battles in the United States or all the other twelve colonies.

I recall by way of tradition numbers of stories that were handed down to my mother by old people whom she had known in childhood, and she, being born in 1808, had been in touch with those who had participated in all this miserable rapine and outrage and murder, and many are the nights I have sat and listened to her recital of the events of those terrible times. I recollect an old mulberry tree, which was dead at the top and almost dead everywhere else, by the side of the big road on the plantation where I was born, in a red field, called "murder field," where they told me they had hung a Tory. I recall also a shelving rock on that same plantation—away remote and in a dense forest then—where my grandmother's brother, George Miller, had the smallpox when he was in hiding.

The country was in the possession of the British, and his sister would take the little medicine and food she could get and put it in a pail, with which she went to the spring, down a steep hill, where the spring was in the woods, and taking precautions not to be followed, would deposit the pail in hiding and take the food and physic and then go down through the forest to this rock and attend to her sick brother. That was a mere sample.

I have heard of the outrages perpetrated by the Tories and their British leaders or officers or allies in robbing the women, cutting open the beds and throwing the feathers in the yard, just out of pure wantonness, shooting the chickens and hogs in order to produce starvation, if possible, and things of that kind.

I tell you, Senators, that these other portions of the country with which I have been acquainted in reading the history of the Revolution were not subjected to similar conditions. Nowhere else that I know of did they exist, except in a very limited degree. In suffering and in bloodshed the people of South Carolina are to-day entitled to the palm as having endured more of the horrors of war and exemplified more of the glories of patriotism, under conditions the most trying, of any colony of the lot.

In addition to all these miseries and horrors, Ramsay goes on to say:

In consequence of these civil wars between the Whigs and Tories—the incursions of the savages—

Mind you, the Cherokee Indians were then across the Upper Savannah River and upon the headwaters of the Tugaloo and the Oconee, incited to invade the colony by British emissaries—

In consequence of these civil wars between the Whigs and Tories, the incursions of the savages, and the other calamities resulting from the operations of the British and American armies, South Carolina exhibited scenes of distress which were shocking to humanity. The single district of Ninety-six—

Mind you, that was a sparsely settled region in Piedmont—

The single district of Ninety-six has been computed by well-informed persons residing therein to contain within its limits—

This was at the end of the struggle—fourteen hundred widows and orphans, made so by the war. Nor is it wonderful that the country was involved in such accumulated distress. The American Goverment was suspended, and the British conquerors were careless of the civil rights of the inhabitants. They conducted as though interior order and police were scarcely objects of attention. The will of the strongest was the law. Such was the general complexion of those who called themselves Royalists that nothing could be expected from them but outrages against the peace and order of society. Though among the Tories in the lower parts of South Carolina there were gentlemen of honor, principle, and humanity, yet in the interior and back parts of the State a great proportion of them was an ignorant, unprincipled banditti, to whom idleness, licentiousness, and deeds of violence were familiar. Horse thieves and others whose crimes had exiled them from society attached themselves to parties of the British. Encouraged by their example and instigated by the love of plunder, they committed the most extensive depredations. Under the cloak of attachment to the old Government they covered the basest and most selfish purposes. The necessity which their indiscriminate plundering imposed on all good men of defending themselves did infinitely more damage to the Royal cause than was compensated by all the advantages resulting from their friendship.

Right here, as the junior Senator from Massachusetts is very anxious for me to draw the moral as I go along, I will say that it is the history of all conquering armies, that where they have resorted to cruelty, to wanton bloodshed, to a trampling down beneath the heel of military power of the people, to an absolute failure to recognize any of the laws of war or any of the obligations of humanity, as is being done to-day, according to the united voice of Christendom, by England in South Africa, they only spur on those who love liberty to an undying purpose, to perish and go to a better world in defense of liberty and their homes rather than surrender.

I would ask that Senator and his colleagues who stand here declaring their purpose that the Philippine islanders shall submit unconditionally, without one scintilla of a promise, or before there is any enunciation of a purpose that is humane, whether they are not themselves aggravating resistance, and precipitating a condition in the Philippines which, according to our own generals, has bred hatred intense and universal, not only of the flag, but of every man who has a white skin, and whether they are not bringing about a condition of perpetual war there.

When we ask you to announce your policy, to say what you intend to do, you answer, "Let them submit first;" and then when they look at your treatment of Porto Rico and of Cuba, they are face to face with a proposition that they have no rights which you feel called on to respect—none whatever; that you treat them absolutely as chattels, as cattle, or as "property," as the Senator from Wisconsin contended the other day. Then, I say to you, while you undertake to say that our discussion of this question here is encouraging insurrection, or rebellion, if you please, and that we will be responsible for the lives of soldiers who will be sacrificed in this unholy and damnable effort to suppress every spark of hope and love of liberty on the part of that people, that you yourselves are the murderers of our troops who will have to pour out their blood in that soil in doing this work of subjugation, because you refuse to recognize the fundamental principles upon which this Government rests.

You refuse to recognize or to recall or to remember the struggles of our fathers under similar conditions when English tyranny proposed to oppress us without any explanation, to levy taxation without representation or anything else, to ignore us as being brothers or fellow-citizens, and to treat us as chattels.

I think it is very germane. I think if other Senators will pursue the same line of thought and follow it up, and if we can get you back for once and gag you and force down your throats a small dose of liberty and the feelings and principles and hopes and aspirations and purposes of the men of Massachusetts and the men of South Carolina in the Revolutionary war, we will have done our country service.

Therefore I think the senior Senator from Massachusetts builded wiser than he knew when he injected the question of revolutionary honors into this debate unthoughtedly, without any ulterior purpose of odious comparison, but still fortunately.

As a sample of the methods that were pursued by the conquerors, I will read you the orders of the British general, a gallant soldier, as Wheaton is. Mind you, after the siege of Charleston and its capture, which, by the way, I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts was surrendered by a general from Massachusetts and not by a South Carolinian—General Lincoln: and I will say further, as an exemplification of some historical facts, that Charleston never has been taken by sea. No power that has ever been marshaled has been able to reach the city from the ocean. The British tried it twice and had to retire, and in looking through these books and reading of Morris Island and Fort Johnson and of Fort Moultrie and of Long Island and Fire Island and all those places around that historic spot, every one of which is redolent of historical reminiscences and action, I could not but think of the civil strife between the North and the South, when the men in blue marched through and sent their monitors and vessels of war and their great armaments. The city was never captured until it was attacked from the land and surrounded, so to speak.

By the way, there is a little exposition going on there now, and those of you who have not any history at home, or have so little history that you want to reach out and gobble some that does not belong to you, if there be any such here, if you want to get in an atmosphere surcharged with history, where every spot, if it could speak, would recite some deed of daring or of infamy, should visit that exposition. I think there is no place on this continent that in that respect approaches this old city. It is lacking in progressiveness; its commerce is more or less dead; it is primeval in many of its methods, but it is inhabited by a high-spirited, noble, and chivalrous people. They are there, and they have their history and their hospitality; and if anybody wants to drink history by the quart, or by the gallon, or by the barrel, they had better go down there.

Here is Cornwallis's order, under which many of these infamies were perpetrated, and which, in my judgment, caused the loss of the colony to the King.

I have given orders—

that the inhabitants of the province who have subscribed, and have taken part in this revolt, should be punished with the greatest rigor, and also those who will not turn out, that they may be imprisoned and their property taken from them or destroyed. I have likewise ordered that compensation be made out of their estates to the persons who have been injured or oppressed by them. I have ordered, in the most positive manner, that every militiaman who has borne arms with us and afterwards joined the enemy shall be immediately hanged. I desire you will take the most rigorous measures to punish the rebels in the district in which you command, and that you obey in the strictest manner the directions I have given in this letter relative to the inhabitants of this country.

An explanation is necessary right here. After the surrender of Charleston and the defeat of Gates at Camden, which followed immediately afterwards, and the complete cessation of all forms of resistance on the part of the Continental Army or the militia or anybody else, with the Whigs gone into hiding, or gone across the Savannah into Georgia or up into North Carolina, the feeling of hopelessness, of despair, together with the specious promises and seductive efforts of the Tory leaders and British officers, induced a good many—I do not know how many—to take the oath of allegiance, to subscribe to the Royal authority, and pledge it their support. Some of these men, under the most dreadful provocation, had broken their parole, so to speak, or had in effect become deserters from the British army, you might say technically. Take Colonel Isaac Hayne, who had subscribed to the oath under a pledge that he would not be called on to fight against his countrymen, and who was then arrested and ordered to join the army and fight his own people, and who in that dire extremity simply retired from the military forces, made his escape, and went forth to battle with his own people, if fight he had to, rather than fight against them.

He was captured and executed under this order of Cornwallis. There were many others who were caught and butchered. The result was that later on, as I may show (or I may forget to show it, so I will tell it now, although it is not possibly exactly in proper order), a great number of men who had they been let alone and allowed to pursue their avocations in such peace and quiet as they could get under the conditions, might have remained inactive, being called on to fight against their country and their fellow-countrymen, decided that if fight they must they would fight for home and country; so that in the later years, after the State had been overrun and the resistance became sporadic and spasmodic and epidemic, as it were, these men were the most bitter of all the men who fought the British. They fought, as the phrase was, with a halter around their necks, and the consequence was that they never surrendered; and when they got a Tory or a Briton in their power they butchered him. It was a war to the death, and therefore the record is one of extreme cruelty and bloodiness.

I have here something referring to the Philippines. I must pacify the Senator from Massachusetts by once in a while referring to the bill under discussion. I am asked which Senator. I dislike to say Senator LODGE, and I forget to say the junior Senator. I will say once for all that unless I specifically mention the senior Senator I am talking at and to and about the other man. [Laughter.]

I have just read you Cornwallis's order, and its effect in driving men into the patriot ranks and recruiting the army of Greene, and of Marion, and of Sumter, and of Pickens with those who preferred to fight for home and country, if fighting they had to do, rather than join their country's enemies.

I want to read you something which the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], I believe, this morning presented as the last act, or act No. 292, of our carpetbag government in the Philippines, that Commission, with Mr. Taft at its head—a very honorable gentleman, no doubt, who draws a salary of $20,000 a year, however, out of the Filipinos. I want to contrast the Cornwallis order with the act of the Commission to see whether it is an instrument of tyranny, or the instrument of affording the blessings of liberty to these poor benighted wretches. This is how they use the autocratic authority vested in them by the President and vested in the President by the Spooner amendment to the last Army appropriation bill.

I hope the senior Senator from Massachusetts will do me the kindness to listen and see if there is not considerable similarity between Cornwallis's methods in South Carolina in 1780 and 1781 and our blessed rule in this archipelago of ours:

SEC. 2. Every person owing allegiance to the United States or the government of the Philippine Islands and having knowledge of any treason against them or either of them, who conceals, and does not, as soon as may be, disclose and make known the same to the provincial governor in the province in which he resides, or to the civil governor of the islands, or to some judge of a court of record, is guilty of misprision of treason, and shall be imprisoned not more than seven years and be fined not more than $1,000.

Listen! You say to these Filipinos, "Turn yourselves into a lot of spies and traitors to expose your countrymen or your kinsmen or your enemies, if you want to inform against somebody." You propose to set in motion the enginery by which the French Revolution drenched the guillotine in its torrents of blood, when personal vengeance, or jealousy, or envy, or some damnable purpose brought about an "information" being lodged against somebody. You demand that these poor devils, who are helpless there in our grasp, must be guilty of all the odious crimes which have been abhorred of men since men were men—treachery, betrayal, spying.

SEC. 8. Every person who shall utter seditious words or speeches, write, publish, or circulate—scurrilous libels against the Government of the United States or the insular government of the Philippine Islands—

Circulate—

Under this law, now, after having denounced this gang as a lot of carpetbaggers, if I should happen to get over there what would become of me? [Laughter.] If my attacks here in calling a spade a spade, as I am doing or endeavoring to do, as I see it, would lay me open to the charge of scurrilous libel against the Government of the United States or the insular government of the Philippine Islands, then I expect I will land in Fort Lafayette or some other fort pretty soon, or be exiled to our St. Helena—Guam—or which tend to disturb or obstruct any lawful officer in executing his office, or which tend to instigate others to cabal or meet together for unlawful purposes, or which suggest or incite rebellious conspiracies or riots, or which tend to stir up the people against the lawful authorities or to disturb the peace of the community, the safety and order of the government, or who shall knowingly conceal such evil practices, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 9. All persons who shall meet together for the purpose of forming, or who shall form any secret society, or who shall, after the passage of this act, continue membership in a society already formed having for its object in whole or in part the promotion of treason, rebellion, or sedition, or the promulgation of any political opinion or policy—

We have padlocks on men's mouths in this Capitol. Now, we are undertaking to padlock nine million people and keep them from thinking—shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

SEC. 10. Until it has been officially proclaimed that a state of war or insurrection against the authority or sovereignty of the United States no longer exists in the Philippine Islands, it shall be unlawful for any person to advocate orally, or by writing, or printing, or like methods, the independence of the Philippine Islands or their separation from the United States, whether by peaceable or forcible means, or to print, publish, or circulate any handbill, newspaper, or other publication advocating such independence or separation.

What becomes of the boasted liberty of the press? Can the Springfield Republican or the Boston Herald, I think it is, circulate in the Philippine Islands? I should like to ask the senior Senator from Massachusetts to answer me if he will. I will wait until the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BURTON] has ceased his chat. [A pause.] Now, I will ask my question again. I will ask the senior Senator if under this——

Mr. BURTON. I will state to the Senator that I did not know he was speaking entirely to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. TILLMAN. I was speaking to him, and called his personal and special and respectful attention. I did not intend anything except a little fun at the Senator's expense; that is all.

Mr. BURTON. I am willing that you shall do that, if you do not do any more harm.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope to God I will not do any more harm by calling to your mind more of this in regard to liberty. You come from a State, you know, which was bathed in blood on account of certain ideas in regard to colored people, which you seem to have forgotten.

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCCUMBER in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. I will state to the Senator that if he is alluding to what he did the other day——

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, no; not that specially. That is only one of many things.

Mr. BURTON. I will state that no Kansan is proud of that. We are not proud of having committed murder in Kansas at any time.

Mr. TILLMAN. You just confine yourself to being proud of committing murder in the Philippines now.

Mr. BURTON. I think the Senator understood me. There is quite a difference with regard to the sentiment in Kansas and what seems to be the sentiment in South Carolina about that. I did not expect, of course, to take part in this debate, and I am very sorry that my conversation with the Senator from Massachusetts interrupted the Senator from South Carolina. I did not know that he was intending to speak to the Senator from Massachusetts, and, as I was going away, I wanted to speak to that Senator for a moment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not intend to try to drag him into the debate. I withdraw everything I said about Kansas, altogether, for the time being. We will have that fight at some other time.

Mr. BURTON. After I have been here longer.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, if the senior Senator from Massachusetts will answer me, I should like to ask him the question. I will read that section of the act again for his benefit.

Until it has been officially proclaimed that a state of war or insurrection against the authority or sovereignty of the United States no longer exists in the Philippine Islands it shall be unlawful for any person to advocate, orally or by writing or printing or like methods, the independence of the Philippine Islands or their separation from the United States, whether by peaceable or forcible means, or to print, publish, or circulate any handbill, newspaper, or other publication advocating such independence or separation.

I ask him, if that is now the law of the land in the Philippine Islands, can the Springfield Republican and the Boston Herald—I think it is, or the Globe—circulate there? Is it the Herald or Globe? You have one paper in Boston, thank God, that is holding the beacon light up on Faneuil Hall and has not been submerged by my commercial friends' new-fangled liberty. Which paper is it? Well, the Springfield Republican I know of. Will the Springfield Republican be allowed to circulate or would the Senator's speeches be allowed to go over there?

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator ask me a question about that?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir; I am asking you now as a lawyer. I am a tyro in the law, and I simply would like to get the Senator's opinion as to the legal status in regard to our speeches or anybody else's speeches, or any newspaper that dares to say of the Philippine Islands as was said of the American colonies, "that they are and of right ought to be free."

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to be drawn into a discussion about the Massachusetts newspapers. The Senator has mentioned several Massachusetts newspapers. But I will answer any other question of the Senator that I can.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am afraid if I dip into that bucket for any more light I will not get it. [Laughter.]

I knew my younger colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was a diplomat and a very adroit and skillful fencer, almost equal to Sir Andrew Aguecheek, for instance, but I had not supposed that my learned friend, who has the honor to hold the senior place as a Senator from that State, would object to giving me a simple legal opinion.

Mr. HOAR. It is a little difficult in listening to my honored friend from South Carolina to know in what part he is joking and in what part he is in earnest.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wanted to know whether the Springfield Republican, which now presumes to oppose the imperialistic policy upon which we have entered in the Philippines and advocates the freeing of that people, will be allowed or can be allowed to circulate in those islands under this act of the Taft Commission.

Mr. HOAR. I decline to be drawn into any discussion whatever about the Springfield Republican in the Senate of the United States. If the Senator will ask me whether I think that order is an abominable order, I will answer that question. I think it is.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am glad to get that end of the Senator's opinion, if I can not get the other. [Laughter.] Well, our speeches surely can not go there. I think they are going to be printed in English, and those people over there do not know anything but Spanish, or Igorrote, or Mindanao, or some other outlandish tongue. So I suppose we will have to fight the Philippine battles before the American people, or rather the battle for Philippine liberty and freedom, and right here. Of course we have got the power to crush them, to oppress them, to obliterate them from the face of the earth, and to require that they shall submit absolutely and without qualification to our rule. If the people of the United States are in sympathy with it and propose to continue in that line, oblivious of the glorious past to which I have been alluding in the struggles of my own State and of the other colonies, that will have to be their fate, I suppose.

While I am discussing the question of allegiance to the King and the demand made by Cornwallis, and afterwards enforced ruthlessly—first, that they should submit themselves to royal authority and take the oath, later on join the British army, and then if they dared to recant or make any move indicative of no sympathy with that purpose of subjugation and to fight that they would be hung, ruthlessly murdered, as hundreds of them were—there is one shining example of constancy and of eloquent, indignant protest against the offer of a bribe that is not generally known to students of American history, and which is so high and noble in its patriotism and its manliness that I am sure every man here will be glad to hear it. We know of Arnold's betrayal of his country, of his treason, of his effort to surrender one of our important military posts, of his being purchased by money and the offer of a commission as brigadier-general in the British army, and we know if there is one name more odious in American history than any other, one that causes a sneer of execration to mantle the cheek of every man, woman, and child in this broad land now, it is the name of Benedict Arnold, the first commercial democrat of whom we have any record.

While General Moultrie was on parole, after he had been captured at the siege of Charleston, and was living in very straitened circumstances at Haddrell's Point, on the mainland across the harbor, along with a good many other officers—because there were several thousand troops surrendered then—he was a man of such high character, of such lovable manners, that, associating with the best people of the country, and, of course, with the British officers—many of whom were men of high culture and gentlemen, and who were really opposed to the war—he was approached in a seductive, cunning way by an officer of the British army, a former governor of the colony; and I will take the liberty of reading, and I am sure that Senators here will thank me for reading and calling their attention to this correspondence. Lord Charles Montague, who had been governor of the colony of South Carolina, on March 11, 1781, a year or more after Moultrie had been a prisoner of war on parole, wrote him this letter:

SIR: A sincere wish to promote what may be to your advantage induces me now to write; and the freedom with which we have often conversed makes me hope you will not take amiss what I say. My own principles respecting the commencement of this unfortunate war are well known to you, and, of course, you can conceive what I mention is out of friendship. You have now fought bravely in the cause of your country for many years, and, in my opinion, fulfilled the duty every individual owes to it. You have had your share of hardships and difficulties, and if the contest is still to be continued younger hands should now take the toil from you. You have now a fair opening of quitting that service, with honor and reputation to yourself, by going to Jamaica with me. The world will readily attribute it to the known friendship that has subsisted between us; and by quitting this country for a short time you would avoid any disagreeable conversations, and might return at leisure to take possession of your estates for yourself and family.

The regiment I am going to command, the only proof I can give you of my sincerity is, that I will quit that command to you with pleasure, and serve under you.

Senators will recall the fact that at that time commissions in the British army were had by purchase. It was not a question of merit or ability, but it was just simply that somebody, the scion of some noble house or some wealthy man who wanted a commission in the British army, bought it, and a regiment was practically his personal property. So Lord Charles Montague, in speaking as he does, spoke within his rights and his power to carry out his agreement.

The regiment I am going to command, the only proof I can give you of my sincerity is, that I will quit that command to you with pleasure, and serve under you. I earnestly wish I could be the instrument to effect what I propose, as I think it would be a great means toward promoting that reconciliation we all wish for: a thousand circumstances concur to make this a proper period for you to embrace: our old acquaintance: my having been formerly governor in this province: the interest I have with the present commanders.

I give you my honor, what I write is entirely unknown to the commandant, or to anyone else; so shall your answer be, if you favor me with one. Think well of me.

Yours, sincerely,

CHARLES MONTAGUE.

General MOULTRIE.

You will confess that that was a very insidious way of approaching a prisoner, with his State overrun and desolate, and with the hand of resistance apparently palsied or dead. But what did Moultrie say? Now, listen:

HADDRELL'S POINT, March 12, 1781.

MY LORD: I received yours this morning by Fisher. I thank you for your wish to promote my advantage, but am much surprised at your proposition. I flattered myself I stood in a more favorable light with you. I shall write with the same freedom with which we used to converse, and doubt not you will receive it with the same candor. I have often heard you express your sentiments respecting this unfortunate war when you thought the Americans injured; but am now astonished to find you taking an active part against them; though not fighting particularly on the continent, yet seducing their soldiers away to enlist in the British service is nearly similar.

I will mention here that I find in the early part of these memoirs that this regiment was composed largely of men who, under stress of circumstances, had taken the oath of allegiance and who had then been coerced into joining the British army, under the promise that they should not have to fight against their countrymen, and who were being carried to Jamaica to relieve a regiment that was coming to take its place.

My lord, you are pleased to compliment me with having fought bravely in my country's cause for many years, and in your opinion fulfilled the duty every individual owes to it; but I differ very widely with you in thinking that I have discharged my duty to my country while it is still deluged with blood and overrun with British troops, who exercise the most savage cruelties. When I entered into this contest I did it with the most mature deliberation and with a determined resolution to risk my life and fortune in the cause.

The hardships I have gone through I look back upon with the greatest pleasure and honor to myself. I shall continue to go on as I have begun, that my example may encourage the youths of America to stand forth in defense of their rights and liberties. You call upon me now, and tell me I have a fair opening of quitting that service with honor and reputation to myself by going with you to Jamaica. Good God! is it possible that such an idea could arise in the breast of a man of honor? I am sorry you should imagine I have so little regard for my own reputation as to listen to such dishonorable proposals; would you wish to have that man whom you have honored with your friendship play the traitor? Surely not. You say by quitting this country for a short time I might avoid disagreeable conversations, and might return at my own leisure and take possession of my estates for myself and family; but you have forgotten how I am to get rid of the feelings of an injured, honest heart, where to hide myself from myself; could I be guilty of so much baseness I should hate myself and shun mankind. This would be a fatal exchange from my present situation, with an easy and approved conscience of having done my duty and conducted myself as a man of honor.

My lord, I am sorry to observe that I feel your friendship much abated, or you would not endeavor to prevail upon me to act so base a part. You earnestly wish you could bring it about, as you think it would be the means of bringing about that reconciliation we all wish for. I wish for a reconciliation as much as any man, but only upon honorable terms. The repossessing my estates, the offer of the command of your regiment, and the honor you propose of serving under me are paltry considerations to the loss of my reputation. No, not the fee simple of that valuable island of Jamaica should induce me to part with my integrity.

My lord, as you have made one proposal, give me leave to make another, which will be more honorable to us both. As you have an interest with your commander, I would have you propose the withdrawing the British troops from the continent of America, allow the independence, and propose a peace. This being done, I will use my interest with my commanders to accept of the terms and allow Great Britain a free trade with America.

My lord, I could make one proposal, but my situation as a prisoner circumscribes me within certain bounds. I must therefore conclude with allowing you the free liberty to make what use of this you may think proper. Think better of me.

I am, my lord, your lordship's most obedient humble servant,

WM. MOULTRIE.

Here is a man who was a major-general, whom it was sought to seduce as Arnold had been seduced. Arnold had fought gloriously at Quebec, at Saratoga, and at other places; a regular lion in battle, but for some fancied wrong of being overslaughed or from jealousy or for some other ignoble and mean purpose, sold himself for gold and a commission. He afterwards went to Connecticut, I think it was, and ravaged the seacoast, and died in ignominious poverty, the object of hatred to all mankind.

We ought to put a statue to General Moultrie in the Hall of Statuary here, or in some other hall, and let the youths of America, when they come here, see written in letters of gold, "How can I hide myself from myself."

Next we have a continuation of the story of the war and South Carolina's part in it.

We all know that during 1780 the Continental Army in the North dwindled to such miserable proportions, was so inefficient, so ill supplied with arms and men and munitions, that, although the English army in New York had been depleted by a large force sent to Cornwallis in South Carolina, which was the theater of war, Washington sat himself down upon the heights above the city and could not move hand or foot toward the capture, and, in fact, there was not a solitary battle during those twelve months by the main army of patriots.

We have here, from the correspondence of Washington, the fact brought out that Washington did not believe in volunteers or militia.

On the one hand—

it is clear from Washington's letters from the beginning to the end of the war, echoed also by Greene, that he underrated the value and efficiency of a volunteer force; that his dependence was entirely upon a regular army of enlisted and paid soldiers. He placed little or no reliance upon the patriotism of a private soldier. He desired a strong army to establish a government. So his friends in Congress were for founding and maintaining a strong and permanent army, while on the other hand those who were jealous of the existence of an army, fearing that if independence from England was established by such a body that it would be the groundwork upon which a monarchy perhaps would be erected, contented themselves with opposing and thwarting all efforts to strengthen it, while proposing nothing themselves upon which to carry on the war.

The allied armies, Continental and French, went into winter quarters without a battle having been fought—the former in such a condition of discontent as again to break out in open meeting in the first of the coming year.

Writing to John Mathews on the 23d of October, informing him of the appointment of Greene, who had declined longer to act as Quartermaster-General of the Army, to the command of the Southern Department, Washington observed: "You have your wish in the officer appointed to the Southern command. I think I am giving you a general, but what can a general do without men, without arms, without clothing, without shoes, without provisions?"

Then the historian goes on—

Let us compare the results of the two systems upon which the struggle for liberty had been carried on North and South, during this year 1780, in which the Southern States were regarded as conquered, and sum up what had been done in South Carolina, not only without enlisted or paid men, without arms, without clothing, without shoes, without provisions, but without even a general?

I will state that it is of record that Mr. Madison, in the Continental Congress, proposed a basis of peace. So hopeless of the final result were the patriots and so lukewarm and lacking in enthusiasm and fixity of purpose were the Northern people that Mr. Madison proposed a resolution that the colonies or States of South Carolina and Georgia—they were colonies then, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] contended the other day that while we could not cede a State we could cede a colony—but I suppose the balance of the eleven colonies, if they had seen fit, and England had been willing, could have adopted Mr. Madison's recommendation that South Carolina and Georgia, which were conquered and were under the heel of the conqueror, helpless, should be surrendered to the British Crown as a peace offering for the balance of the country.

Greene appeared in South Carolina, and what did he find when he reached there? Gates, defeated at Camden, had retreated to Charlotte, in Mecklenberg County, N. C., just over the line—

Greene arrived in Charlotte on the 2d day of December, 1780—

Moultrie, going on, says:

On the 8th the returns made to him of the army amounted to 970 Continentals and 1,013 militia and a respectable cavalry, which was the security of his army. Most of the Continentals were the remainder of the Maryland and Delaware lines that had been defeated near Camden on the 16th of August; they had been four years in the service, and were as good troops as any the British had; they were half-starved, unpaid, and ill-clad, and had been in this situation for several months, yet there was no murmuring and no desertion.

McCrady, speaking of what had come about under the two systems of warfare, and going on to point out the difference between the Southern militia, the Southern hunters, the Southern planters, farmers, and cattlemen, gives this record:

There had been fought in South Carolina during this year, in all, 34 battles, great and small, including, as one, the siege of Charlestown, which lasted from the 20th of March, when the British fleet crossed the bar and passed Fort Moultrie, to the 12th of May—that is, fifty-three days.

Mind you, that was before Greene got there, or rather a large amount of this fighting was done before Greene came down with his great name and his military fame, as a tower of strength, to encourage the drooping spirits of the patriots. Going on, McCrady says:

So that during this year, while the Continental Army under Washington was lying around New York in hopeless inactivity and discontent and the French fleet and army cooped up harmlessly in Newport, there had been actual and active fighting in South Carolina for eighty-six days out of the three hundred and sixty-five, or about one day in every four. The siege of Charleston, and the accompanying affairs of Salkehatchie, Ponpon, Rantowle's, Monks Corner, and Lenuds's Ferry, Buford's defeat at the Waxhaws, and the battle of Camden were battles and engagements in which Continental troops were engaged. The other 26 actions were fought entirely by volunteer bands of the people organized under leaders for each special occasion—the unpaid men of the Carolinas and in Georgia, of whose names, even, there was no muster roll or record.

The scene of these engagements covered, under Marion, the Horrys, and James, the whole country between the Pedee and Santee; under Sumter, Davie, Bratton, Lacey, Hill, Taylor, and the Hamptons, that principally between the Catawba and the Broad, but extending into Lancaster on the one side and Spartanburg and Union on the other; while Williams, Clarke, and McCall, extended it from the Broad to the Savannah. In addition to these engagements which took place in South Carolina during the year, there had been fought just beyond the line, in North Carolina, the battles of Ramsour's Mill, Charlottetown, and Cowan's Ford, and in Georgia the siege of Augusta. But restricting the examination for the present to the operations in South Carolina alone, the following statistical table of the engagements which took place within the limits of the State will best illustrate the magnitude and importance of the results accomplished by the uprising of the people themselves without the aid of Congress.

Here follow tables of the names of those engagements, the dates when they occurred, the number of killed and wounded on both sides, and the prisoners lost, all taken from the official records:

[a] The names of none of the men who fought in these 26 engagements appear in Knox's Report. [b] Routed. [c] Several.

Now, while I am speaking about the battles, as I said a moment ago, the fields of conflict in the State of South Carolina, big and little, are in number nearly equal to those of all the other States put together. I will speak of the big battles, the pitched battles, the battles in which armies, not squadrons or regiments or loose bands, were brought together. Taking them in their order, or possibly not in their order of sequence as to time, but rather as to locality, we will commence with Moultrie's fight at Fort Moultrie, when he drove off the British fleet (1); the siege of Charleston (2); Gates's defeat at Camden (3), which followed; next Hobkirks Hill (4), where Greene was defeated; later Eutaw Springs, where he was the victor (5); then we have the siege of Ninety-six (6), in which great valor was displayed on both sides. Greene had to retreat because Lord Rawdon was hurrying to the relief of the British forces, but there was a general assault, which was very bloody. Carrying the list up, we come to Cowpens (7), where under Morgan there was the most complete annihilation, barring one, in the history of the war, and the best general or the best officer, as was supposed, in the British army, certainly in South Carolina—Tarleton—that dread and terror of the people, had lost nearly his whole force, every particle of his infantry, artillery, and baggage, and lost some of his cavalry, but made his own escape.

In passing, I will give an anecdote in regard to that escape which is on record. It is said that this British officer, who was something of a dandy, and, being young and handsome, was somewhat in favor with the ladies, even those who were rebels, so to speak—Tarleton attended a ball in Charleston a year later, after the British were cooped up. Speaking of Col. William Washington—no kin to George, but just a common farmer, who had the instincts and ability of a soldier, who was a good cavalryman, and who was in charge of the cavalry at Cowpens, a small handful of 75 or 100 mounted men, part of them militia, but whose charge won the day—Tarleton said to a lady, "I understand that your Colonel Washington is an illiterate, boorish, low sort of man, without any culture or education; that he can not write his name." In that retreat, when Tarleton was closely pursued, he and Washington had a personal conflict hand to hand. The pursuit was so close and Washington got so near to Tarleton that, in making a pass with his saber, he wounded Tarleton on the sword hand, and the lady, looking at the mark or the scar, with a smile, which was significant, said, "But he can make his mark, Colonel Tarleton, you must allow." [Laughter.]

Before Cowpens, however, there had been the most signal victory in the history of that war, or almost of any war. It was at Kings Mountain (8), fought entirely by raw levies or volunteers on our side, not a solitary trained officer or soldier in the lot, except the colonels probably, and they were all men of no military training or experience—Sevier, Campbell, McDowell, Williams, and Cleveland. These men, South Carolinians, Georgians, Virginians, Tennesseans—I do not see anybody here from Tennessee, but Tennessee had as large a part in that glorious victory as any State—Sevier, who led the mountaineers from the pastures of East Tennessee across the Alleghenies, was there. They surrounded Ferguson on the top of Kings Mountain, a mountain some four or five hundred feet above the surrounding plain, an almost impregnable position, apparently.

They were just simply running him down; they were afraid he would get away, and although his force outnumbered theirs, having assembled in North Carolina, at Gilberttown, they rushed forward pellmell, and when they got in sight of the camp they took the precaution to make Colonel Campbell commander; but each man commanded his own force, and they simply enveloped this British force of trained men upon the plateau on all sides, and not a man of them got away. It is of record that not a British soldier made his escape. In their treatment of them the patriots, fired with the desire for revenge for innumerable wrongs, were almost as cruel as the British had been. When the tories and the British threw up their handkerchiefs and waved them as a token of surrender, the bloody cry came back, "Remember Tarleton!" "Remember Buford and Waxhaw!" and they shot those men who had been the brutal murderers of their friends, and who had been ravaging with fire and sword all of South Carolina for a year. They shot perhaps 100 or 200 of them after they had surrendered. The officers had to jump off their horses and rush up and threaten to interfere with actual force to control the people, who were so outraged by the desecration of their homes and the depredations and villainies which had been perpetrated that their anger was almost inhuman.

The patriots numbered 910 and the British and Tories amounted to 1,100. Majuba Hill in South Africa is the nearest approach to Kings Mountain in the completeness of the triumph of raw levies over trained soldiers superior in number and on their own ground.

We have heard about the decisive battles of the war. Somebody—the Senator from Massachusetts, I believe—said yesterday that the battle of Concord was decisive. Maybe you are right. Concord belongs to you. There is no doubt of that. Of course, if the beginning of the war was practically under conditions in which the deciding of the event finally was from that point of view, you might say that the very fact that the farmers of Massachusetts had the courage and love of liberty to resist and to offer up their lives on the altar of liberty, thereby inspiring their brethren from the frozen North to as far south as white men live to take up arms in defense of the great principles involved in the cause, Concord was the deciding battle of the war.

Creasy says Saratoga was the decisive battle of the war, because Burgoyne cut loose from his base of supplies in Canada, marched up the Sorrel and up Lake Champlain, endeavored to penetrate the American center, as it was called, and to cut the colonies in two, leaving his base and throwing himself out to take what he could get and live off the country. Then the men of Massachusetts and of the surrounding States—farmers, mind you, mere volunteers, most of them—rushed to arms and enveloped him. Napoleon had been enveloped in Russia when he cut loose from his base, and later Cornwallis suffered the same fate. It is a dangerous thing for a military man to go into a hostile country and have no means to feed his army except the country that he expects to live upon. Sherman did it; but if it had not been for the control of the ocean by the Government of the United States and the means of supplying Sherman's army with provisions, munitions, and other things, and if the Confederacy had not been at that time nearly exhausted and in its expiring agony, it is probable that a repetition of the other campaigns of which I have spoken might have followed the march to the sea. One of the British writers on military science has expressed that belief; but that is a mere passing comment.

I want to say right here and now that when you recollect that after the battle of Concord and after the expulsion of the British from Boston, Massachusetts and New England had little or no war, except the foray along the Connecticut coast by Arnold and Tryon; that practically it was a foreign war, as the senior Senator from Massachusetts stated yesterday, so far as those people were concerned. New Jersey—I see its honorable Senator sitting here—had its share of the struggle at Princeton and Monmouth and other places, and New York had its share. I am not undertaking to monopolize anybody's glory.

As I said the other day, there is enough to go around, but when an attempt is made, without the slightest malice, to say that that war was won by other causes and from other sources than the coercion of the British, I want to put in my claim for Kings Mountain and Cowpens as having happened at a time when the American cause seemed most hopeless and dark, and when the people were dispirited, cowed, and almost ready to give up. Then came these two victories, complete and overwhelming, paralyzing the enemy, so to speak, causing him to draw back and to concentrate his forces because he had met something new. He defeated Greene at Hobkirks Hill; he had defeated Gates at Camden; he did not believe militiamen were any good. He was like—no, I will not say the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], because he said he believed the volunteers were the best soldiers in time of emergency, and we will all have to believe that if we ever have a real national crisis. But I want to read here what occurred before that battle of Kings Mountain, in which Ferguson was enveloped, his army destroyed, himself killed, and every man either butchered or captured by those militiamen, those wild levies, those untrained soldiers.

Moultrie, something of a military man himself, says this:

> This great victory at the Cowpens changed the face of American affairs and raised the drooping spirits of her desponding friends. In two actions, soon after each other, the British lost about 2,000 men—that at Kings Mount on the 7th of October and that at the Cowpens on the 17th of January, 1781. The latter was of more serious consequence to Lord Cornwallis, because it deprived him of 900 of his best troops.

Here is what Moultrie had to say about the militiamen:

> This battle, as well as many others under Generals Sumter, Marion, and others, proves that the militia are brave men and will fight if you will let them come to action in their own way. There are very few instances when they have drawn up in line of battle that they could be brought to stand and reserve their fire until the enemy came near enough. The charge of the bayonet they never could stand, and it can never be expected that undisciplined troops could stand so formidable an attack. Witness the affairs of General Gates at Camden and General Greene at Guilford Court-House.

But we have here a speech by Colonel Cleveland, a North Carolinian by birth, by the way, whose descendants now live in Spartanburg County, S. C., one of the heroes of Kings Mountain, who was in command of the North Carolina contingent of mountaineers who had come over from the western end of that State:

> My brave fellows, we have beat the Tories, and we can beat them again; they are all cowards. If they had the spirit of men, they would join their fellow-citizens in supporting the independence of their country. When you are engaged, you are not to wait for the word of command from me. I will show you by my example how to fight; I can undertake no more. Every man must consider himself as an officer and act from his own judgment. Fire as quick as you can, and stand your ground as long as you can. When you can do no better, get behind trees, or retreat, but I beg you not to run quite off. If we are repulsed, let us make a point of returning and renewing the fight. Perhaps we may have better luck in the second attempt than the first. If any of you are afraid, such shall have leave to retire, and they are requested immediately to take themselves off.

The result was that when the first attack was made by one of the contingents which enveloped Ferguson, with line of battle strung out, the British charged with bayonets and drove them back down the hill, but they had hardly got those fellows into the woods before there came another fellow—another militia colonel—who brought up his woodsmen. Ferguson went after them and drove them back; and then, lo and behold! there came another crowd on his left flank or his right flank, and then a ring of fire from blazing rifles all around drove the British general and his men back and forth like a shuttlecock, until his spirit was demoralized, his men threw down their arms and gave up the fight, and many of them gave up the ghost.

Cowpens and Kings Mountain may not have been the turning period of the war. I do not attempt to claim that they were. I only ask those who are going to analyze this question and endeavor to consider it from any fair standpoint not to forget the recital of these historic events which I have given you here in this brief and disjointed way, and which I suppose I ought to apologize to the Senate for having presented. But, as I said, I think it is apropos and entirely proper that we should recall now, of all times in our history as a people, the facts connected with our own struggle in the earlier years of the Republic, when, against the then most powerful nation in the world, we took up arms and for seven long and bloody years, dismal and hopeless a large part of the time, our forefathers struggled to found this Republic upon those principles which Jefferson has made immortal—that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. Marcou, the "Swamp Fox," and Sumter, the "Game Cock," fought as guerrillas, sallying from the woods and swamps by night and by day. Their prototypes in South Africa are called "robbers," and in the Philippines we call them "ladrones."

I say here and now, that this Philippine proposition to erect a tariff wall between one portion of the United States and any other portion, or between the United States and any country belonging to the United States, under the Stars and Stripes, is a departure from every principle which has brought this country forward in its glorious career to that condition which has made it the cynosure of all eyes, the envied of all nations, the country which we have proudly boasted was "the land of the free and the home of the brave," but which we to-day have turned into a despotism, going back, like a dog to its vomit, to the colonial times of England, to govern people arbitrarily and without law other than the will of the master, to levy taxes and to spend them, and to quarter troops on them and to send foreign officers and judges and everything else that was denounced by our fathers when this country started on its career.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], I believe, wishes to speak in regard to his amendment. If that is his pleasure, I hope he will do so.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like, inasmuch as the amendment I offered presents a new question perhaps, one that the Senate has not heretofore considered at least, to have a quorum of the Senate present, and it seems to be rather impossible to get it this evening. I will therefore, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Massachusetts, move that we go into executive session.

Mr. LODGE. It is perfectly agreeable to me, if the Senator desires to postpone his remarks until to-morrow.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; I think I could finish my remarks in an hour or an hour and a half easily, but it is too late and the Senators are not here, and I want particularly to have my side of the House present to hear what I have to say.

Mr. LODGE. Very well. The Senator desires, then, to go on to-morrow at 2 o'clock?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. Then I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I wish my colleague would yield to me for a moment.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

SALARIES OF CERTAIN UNITED STATES JUDGES.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to give notice that to-morrow morning, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, I shall move to take up the bill to increase the salaries of judges of certain United States courts.

REMOVAL OF SNOW IN THE DISTRICT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 10368) to provide for the removal of snow and ice from cross walks and gutters in the city of Washington, D. C.; which was read the first time by its title, and the second at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the removal of snow and ice from cross walks and gutters in the city of Washington, D. C., as required by the act approved March 2, 1897, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $5,000, one half to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-seven minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 31, 1902, at 12 o'clock m.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McCLEARY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. By direction, as the Chair understands, of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Minnesota

[Mr. MCCLEARY], reports an urgent deficiency bill and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10368) to provide for the removal of snow and ice from cross walks and gutters in the city of Washington, D. C.

Be it enacted, etc., That for the removal of snow and ice from cross walks and gutters in the city of Washington, D. C., as required by the act approved March 2, 1897, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $5,000, one-half to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will give us an explanation as to how the amount of money needed for this purpose is ascertained.

Mr. MCCLEARY. The estimate was submitted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, one of whom was present at the meeting this morning.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is the appropriation larger than the amount appropriated in years past for this same work?

Mr. MCCLEARY. It is of the average size of the appropriations that have been made for a series of years.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BELL. Is it understood that this bill is from the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. MCCLEARY. From a subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, in charge of appropriations for the District of Columbia.

Mr. BELL. Then, as I understand, the bill has not been before the Appropriations Committee at all.

Mr. MCCLEARY. No, sir; not before the entire committee, on account of its urgency.

Mr. BELL. I should like to ask, as a matter of privilege, has a subcommittee the right to present a bill?

The SPEAKER. That is a question the House has no knowledge of. This bill is brought in by unanimous consent.

Mr. BELL. No, sir; as I understand, it is brought in as coming from the Appropriations Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill, and unanimous consent has been given. It is a matter which the Chair can not control.

Mr. CANNON. It is not a privileged question at all. I understood unanimous consent was asked.

Mr. BELL. I understood the gentleman from Minnesota to say that the bill was brought in from the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. MCCLEARY. No, sir; I did not. I asked unanimous consent. If the bill were the work of the Appropriations Committee, it would be privileged.

Mr. CUMMINGS. May I ask a question?

Mr. MCCLEARY. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Has the gentleman any doubt at all that every member of the Appropriations Committee would vote for the bill?

Mr. MCCLEARY. Every member of that committee, I have no doubt, would vote for it in the usual course. The bill is brought in in this way simply because of its urgency.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MCCLEARY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BURGESS for two weeks, on account of important business.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees where the call terminated on the last legislative day.

The Clerk proceeded with the call.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to call up a bill from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman authority to do that from the committee under this call?

Mr. MANN. There has been no direct vote of the committee, Mr. Speaker, authorizing the bill to be called up, but it has been reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has not a right under this call to demand consideration of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

PROTECTION OF LIVES OF MINERS.

Mr. MOODY of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 8327) to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories," and put the bill upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. Has the committee authorized the bill to be called up at this time?

Mr. MOODY of Oregon. The committee authorized the chairman to call up the bill, but since he is not in his seat, I feel authorized, under the order of the committee, to call it up myself.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8327) to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories."

Be it enacted, etc., That section 6 of the act entitled "An act for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories" be amended by striking out "thirty-three hundred" and inserting "five thousand:" so as to read:

"SEC. 6. That the owners or managers of every coal mine at a depth of 100 feet or more shall provide an adequate amount of ventilation of not less than 55 cubic feet of pure air per second, or 5,000 cubic feet per minute, for every 50 men at work in said mine, and in like proportion for a greater number, which air shall by proper appliances or machinery be forced through such mine to the face of each and every working place, so as to dilute and render harmless and expel therefrom the noxious or poisonous gases; and all workings shall be kept clear of standing gas."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOODY] has been recognized.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I could not hear even the title of this bill, and ask that it be reported from the desk.

The title of the bill was again read.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. With the point of order reserved, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman who brings up the bill if it has been called up by the consent or order of his committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair submitted that inquiry to the gentleman when the bill was first presented, and was informed that the bill was authorized to be called up by the committee.

Mr. MOODY of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, this bill was authorized to be called up by the unanimous vote of the committee, and I ask to print in this connection the report of the committee upon the bill, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], who introduced the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman to desire to print in the RECORD, as a part of his remarks, the report of the committee upon the pending bill.

Mr. MOODY of Oregon. That is my request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[House Report No. 148, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

PROTECTION OF LIVES OF MINERS IN THE TERRITORIES.

The Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred House bill 8327, submit the following report:

In 1890 the "act for the protection of the lives of the miners in the Territories" was passed.

In that act the amount of fresh air to be forced into each mine was fixed after considering the allowance generally provided in the statutes of the various States. Since that time many of the State laws have been revised, and the air supply has been increased in nearly every instance.

The national law should keep pace with the progress of the State laws upon this subject, especially in view of the fact that the State legislatures are in a position to know intimately the needs of the miners.

The Indian Territory, where the greater portion of the coal in the Territories is mined, is wholly unrepresented in Congress, and in legislating for the Territory it is well to ascertain what State legislation has been found effective in the adjoining States. This bill proposes to amend the law by making the amount of air supply the same as is provided under the laws of Kansas, increasing the supply from 3,300 cubic feet per minute for 50 men to 5,000 cubic feet.

The object sought to be obtained by the original bill was to establish in the Territories the regulation of mining to such an extent that individuals or corporations owning or operating mines therein should be required to furnish such appliances and safeguards as would reduce to the minimum the danger to their employees as experience in other localities where similar operations have been carried on has shown to be effective to this end.

The following extract from the report on the act of March 3, 1891, shows the necessity for the proposed legislation:

"Coal, iron, the precious metals, and others not classed as precious are now or have all been the subject of mining operation in one or another of the Territories, but the surrounding conditions in each locality are different, the dangers to be guarded against varied, the methods of prosecuting this industry more widely divergent still, and however anxious the committee might be to act from the humanitarian standpoint in this regard, it was confronted with the fact that too stringent regulation must have the direct effect of retarding the development of mining interests in these Territories. It therefore seemed impracticable to frame any law which should be equally applicable to all classes of mining and inexpedient to enforce the carrying out of the provisions of the same, even were the attempt made; but inasmuch as the dangers to life are far greater in coal mines than in those of the metals, and of a better defined and more clearly recognized character, and legislation as far as attempted has sought to wrestle almost solely with this portion of the problem, it has seemed entirely practicable by proper amendment and addition to alter the bill presented to the committee so that it should apply only to coal mines, reserving, however, to the several Territories the right of legal enactment upon the subject, and when such enactment shall have been made that national regulation should cease.

"With this end in view, the committee have carefully considered those enactments in regard to coal mining which relate to the ventilation of mines, to the affording proper means of ingress and egress, regulation of hoisting machinery, the guarding against the employment of child labor therein, and proper and suitable supervision of such operations.

"Even under this restricted scope of the bill, if, as it is believed will be the case, it shall prove effective in averting disaster, it will have been wise legislation. The provisions contained are not tentative in character, but such as have had the approval of practical operation in various places, notably in Pennsylvania, where, more than in any other State, have regulations upon the subject been made. Added to this are merely such provisions in the way of machinery as are calculated to bring about the effective carrying out of the law, and thus render it not merely to act for the miners in name, but such in fact."

The committee also calls attention to paragraph 3849 of the Kansas labor laws, General Statutes of 1889, which reads as follows:

"Paragraph 3849. The owner, agent, or operator of every coal mine, whether shaft, slope, or drift, shall * * * provide and thereafter maintain for every such mine ample means of ventilation, affording 100 cubic feet of air per minute per person in all mines where the coal strata are 3 feet thick or over, and a proportionate amount for thinner strata, which shall be circulated wherever any person or persons may be working in said mine. The inspector may increase the amount, when necessary, to such an extent as will dilute, carry off, and render harmless the noxious gases generated therein; and all mines generating fire damp shall be kept free of standing gas, and every working place shall be carefully examined every morning with a safety lamp by a competent person before any workman is allowed to enter therein; and it shall be the duty of the owner, agent, or operator of every coal mine to provide and maintain air ways of sufficient dimension to supply the requisite amount of air."

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. MOODY of Oregon. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as may be at my disposal to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] who framed the bill.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the attention of the House for a very few moments as to the bill under consideration. This is a bill of very considerable importance, at least as far as the Indian Territory and the Territory of New Mexico are concerned.

In 1890 I introduced the original bill, of which the pending bill is amendatory. Up to that time no general law existed for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories. In the Indian Territory there was no law at all, because there was no local legislature with authority to enact such legislation. In the consideration of the matter I took as a basis for the amount of air required for each miner in one of these mines the amount required by other adjacent States which were similarly situated. The amount by the pending bill is increased, as will be seen, from 3,300 cubic feet per minute for each 50 men to 5,000 cubic feet.

Since 1890 there has been a marked increase in the amount of air required to be furnished, under the laws of the various States, and this bill proposes to increase the amount of air to be furnished, making the amount the same as in the State of Kansas. In Kansas the coal is very similar in character. It has a large amount of gas in it, and the circumstances are more nearly like those in New Mexico and the Indian Territory than in any other State in the Union. The miners of the Indian Territory ask for this bill. I introduced it at the last session of Congress at their request, but it was too late to secure its passage, and in the present session I have endeavored to get it before Congress in time to receive its early attention.

I call the attention of this House to the fact that in the Indian Territory, where there are probably more dangers to coal miners than in any other locality in the Union, owing to the gas in the coal, they have no representative in Congress, no one to whom they can appeal to lay their demands before this body. Inasmuch as I, in the Fifty-first Congress, prepared and introduced the original bill, they appealed to me. In their behalf I have introduced this bill, pressed it before the committee, and now speak for them on the floor of the House.

They further ask an additional amendment adopting the law of the State of Kansas, which is a very brief one, in regard to shot firers, requiring that the shots in each mine shall be fired by special firers, instead of being fired by all of the miners, and that all the miners shall go out of the mine before this is done. The necessity of a provision of this kind has been demonstrated by the death of many men in these various mines. Last week, in my own State, and in the district which I have the honor to represent, a terrible calamity occurred by what is known as a dust explosion. Twenty-two men were blown into eternity in a moment, owing to some mistake or accident in the discharge of a shot, which ignited the floating dust in the mine, causing an explosion that killed nearly every man in that part of the mine. The dangers of mining under the best of management and under the most prudent laws are very great. Any methods which may lessen these dangers are worthy of our serious consideration.

The Kansas provision in regard to shot firers requires that the shots shall only be fired once a day, and by shot firers specially employed instead of by the miners generally. This method where employed has not proved an entire success, because it has often occurred that the shot firers themselves have been killed; but it has been successful in this, that the other employees are out of the mine when the blasts are fired, and the only ones exposed to the accident are the firers of the shots. While this law does not wholly prevent such accidents in Kansas, it has reduced to the minimum the number of deaths ensuing upon such a calamity. And if my friend [Mr. MOODY of Oregon] will yield for that purpose, I desire to offer a brief amendment at this point, to be considered in connection with the bill, so that the Kansas law on that question, which the experience of miners in Kansas has demonstrated to be useful, may be incorporated in the statute. I have consulted some of the members of the Mining Committee upon this proposition, this request having been made since the bill was reported.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Oregon yield for that purpose?

Mr. MOODY of Oregon. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section the following:

"All owners, lessees, operators of, or any other person having the control or management of any coal shaft, drift, slope, or pit, employing miners to work therein, shall employ shot firers to fire the shots therein. Said shots shall be fired once a day on each day when any such shaft, slope, drift, or pit is in operation, but shall not be fired until after all miners and other employees working therein shall have been hoisted out of said mine. The violation of this act shall constitute a misdemeanor, and any person convicted of such violation shall pay a fine of not exceeding $500."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. LACEY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This appears to be a local police regulation. I should like to know if the Territorial legislatures have not authority to enact this clause?

Mr. LACEY. There is no Territorial legislature in the Indian Territory.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This bill appears to apply to New Mexico.

Mr. LACEY. It does apply to New Mexico, but there is a provision in the original act that if any Territory shall legislate upon the subject of mining, its legislation shall take precedence of this law. In New Mexico they have not legislated, but for the last ten or twelve years they have been operating under this Federal law rather than to attempt legislation of their own. As I understand, our legislation has been found satisfactory in New Mexico. This legislation originally became necessary in order to reach the Indian Territory, where there was no authority to pass any local laws. Alaska is similarly situated.

The legislature of New Mexico could relieve that Territory at once and for all time from the operation of this bill by taking up the subject themselves and legislating upon it; and there is a provision in the law that the Territory would be withdrawn from its operation; but that Territory has been operating under this law rather than attempt to legislate in its own behalf.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. One other question. Will not the effect of the enactment of this bill be to take away from the remaining Territories the power of legislation upon this subject?

Mr. LACEY. Not at all. The law of 1890 expressly provides that this law shall only be operative in those Territories that do not legislate upon the subject. This bill does not change the original law. This bill only amends this one section to adapt it to subsequent experience and to the legislation of a dozen States that have been dealing with the question.

Mr. RODEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LACEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RODEY. You have increased the amount of cubic feet of air to be put into a mine every second. How many States or jurisdictions require this same amount that you have provided for in this bill?

Mr. LACEY. Nearly all of them have now.

Mr. RODEY. I never heard of this bill until this moment, and therefore the gentleman must excuse me for asking this question.

Mr. LACEY. I am glad to have the gentleman's attention to it. Nearly all of the States have this high a minimum supply of air.

Mr. RODEY. Has there been any demand for the passage of this bill except from the Indian Territory?

Mr. LACEY. There is not, perhaps, a demand from the Territory of New Mexico, because the coal in the Territory of New Mexico is freer from gas than that in the Indian Territory. But Colorado, whose coal is very similar to the coal of the Territory which the gentleman represents, has this as the minimum amount of air. So that this law not only meets Kansas on the one hand as to the Indian Territory, but Colorado upon the other as to New Mexico, and the kind of coal mined in New Mexico and Colorado are very similar. The amendment has been asked by members of the mining associations and organized labor of those two Territories.

Mr. RODEY. Is this provision which you have in this bill, in reference to the miners coming out of the mine at the time that the shots are fired, generally adopted throughout the other coal-mining regions?

Mr. LACEY. That is a provision of the Kansas law. It is copied from the Kansas law, which has been in operation for a number of years, and it has been found to work well in Kansas. It has not saved the shot firers from death. A number of them have been killed; but when one of them makes a mistake in the operation of shooting he is the only man who suffers, as the balance of the miners are out of the mine and escape.

Mr. RODEY. Do you not think that in the mines of New Mexico, where they run maybe as much as two miles underground, that it would work a hardship on the proprietors of those mines to force every many man out of the mines when they got ready to fire a shot in some remote corner of the mine?

Mr. LACEY. Nothing like the hardship that it would be upon the men to be killed in the mines.

Mr. RODEY. Do you think it is possible in this way to avoid the dangers to the working of the other men there?

Mr. LACEY. It has been found that the time can be fixed immediately following the emptying of the mine. You will observe that the shots are to be fired at a given time. It has been the custom to fire in all the mines after the men have gone out, but where there are no shot firers one man stays back to fire off each shot, and thus a large number of men are exposed to the danger. In the recent explosion in the Indian Territory it cost the lives of about a dozen men, because the men were in the mines. If they had been shot firers these shot firers would undoubtedly have been killed and the balance would have been saved. It works no hardship to the owners of the mines, because they can fix the hour of the day when the shots shall be fired, at such a time that every man in the mine shall come out of the mine for his dinner or the closing of the mines at the noon hour or the end of the day; and when the shots are fired at the noon hour there is an hour for clearing the mine of gas before the men return.

Mr. RODEY. Will not this increase of the amount of air necessitate an entire change in the machinery in every mine?

Mr. LACEY. It will require a supplementing of the machinery, and many of them will have to put in new machinery that will enable them to furnish the amount sufficient to comply with the provisions of this bill.

Mr. RODEY. I would ask the gentleman if the mining inspector from New Mexico has said anything in respect to the necessity for an act like this in his recent report to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. LACEY. I do not recollect whether he does or not. I have not in mind what was said as to New Mexico, but this is in touch with the legislation in the adjoining States, such as Colorado, where the legislation is in close sympathy with the mining interests there.

Mr. RODEY. In New Mexico the legislature has never seen fit to interfere with the national act of several years ago, and therefore it would appear that miners and mine owners both consider it sufficient for all purposes there. We have had some few accidents brought about by gas or dust, but I am not sure that it was never alleged that the explosion occurred for want of air or on account of the firing. What caused the explosions I am not informed, save that I think it was said to be from fire damp.

Mr. LACEY. In all the dust explosions of New Mexico, did they not immediately follow the firing of the shot in every case?

Mr. RODEY. No, sir; I do not think so; that is, not immediately.

Mr. LACEY. Then they came from gas?

Mr. RODEY. In the White Ash mine an explosion occurred several years ago in which nearly 25 men were killed or injured. Some question arising out of the resulting damage suits went before the Supreme Court; but in that case it was gas, pure and simple, that caused the explosion, as my information has it.

Mr. LACEY. If there were 25 men killed a few years ago by an explosion of a mine there, then I think the necessity is more urgent from that Territory than I had been led to believe.

Mr. RODEY. I do not know that that number were killed. I do not remember the exact number. This bill is new to me. I never heard of it before this morning. I have no advice from home as to the necessity for it, and yet it is made to apply to New Mexico. It may be that it is wise to have a proper bill enacted for the further protection of the miners of New Mexico, but there seems to be no demand for it from that Territory, at least no one has communicated with me about it. It is now up for passage, and it is rather a hard position for me to be put in. Of course I appreciate that our own legislature could correct it under the authority contained in the original act of Congress, but it can not be done until next winter. If the bill is a necessity, I want it passed, but I am without information from home.

Mr. LACEY. Let me say, in this connection, that this demand does not come from a locality that is inclined to utilize questions of this kind in a political way, but has come from men who have no right to vote, who have no right of representation, and who must appeal to Congress as a whole, and therefore when I present this question from the miners of the Indian Territory I feel sure that there is no political purpose back of it in any form and that this is a demand which the necessities of the case have suggested. The statement made by the Delegate from New Mexico [Mr. RODEY] only confirms me in the opinion that New Mexico ought to have the benefit of this law if, as he says, in a single explosion 35 men were killed.

Mr. RODEY. I do not say that 35 men were killed; I am not certain about the number.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa has offered an amendment. Does he withdraw it?

Mr. LACEY. No. I ask that the amendment remain pending until the bill is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that order will be pursued. There was no objection.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. LACEY. I do.

Mr. PEARRE. The bill has come rather suddenly to my attention. I am not familiar with the act of 1890, to which the gentleman has referred. Will the gentleman kindly inform me whether there are any penalties in the act of 1890 or in this act to enforce the provisions of this act, of which I heartily approve?

Mr. LACEY. Yes, there are penalties provided—a maximum fine of $500. The penalties are not large, but they have been found sufficient to enforce the law. There is also a provision for inspectors, one appointed by the President in both Territories, whose business it is to look after the mines. I regard that as the most important feature of the original act, because it insures a proper inspection. This proposition is a modification of the law to adapt it to the experience of adjoining States and to meet the objections growing out of the terrible explosions that have taken place. I will print the original law in my remarks, as follows:

[PUBLIC No. 165.]

An act for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories.

Be it enacted, etc., That in each organized and unorganized Territory of the United States wherein are located coal mines, the aggregate annual output of which shall be in excess of 1,000 tons per annum, the President shall appoint a mine inspector, who shall hold office until his successor is appointed and qualified. Such inspector shall, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, give bond to the United States in the sum of $2,000, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties.

SEC. 2. That no person shall be eligible for appointment as mine inspector under section 1 of this act who is not either a practical miner or mining engineer and who has not been a resident for at least six months in the Territory for which he shall be appointed; and no person who shall act as land agent, manager, or agent of any mine, or as mining engineer, or be interested in operating any mine in such Territory shall be at the same time an inspector under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the mine inspector provided for in this act to make careful and thorough inspection of each coal mine operated in such Territory, and to report at least annually upon the condition of each coal mine in said Territory with reference to the appliances for the safety of the miners, the number of air or ventilating shafts, the number of shafts or slopes for ingress or egress, the character and condition of the machinery for ventilating such mines, and the quantity of air supplied to the same. Such reports shall be made to the governor of the Territory in which such mines are located and a duplicate thereof forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior, and in the case of an unorganized Territory directly to the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 4. That in case the said mine inspector shall report that any coal mine is not properly constructed or not furnished with reasonable and proper machinery and appliances for the safety of the miners and other employees, it shall be the duty of the governor of such organized Territory, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to give notice to the owners or managers of said coal mine that the said mine is unsafe and notifying them in what particular the same is unsafe, and requiring them to furnish or provide such additional machinery, slopes, entries, means of escape, ventilation, or other appliances necessary to the safety of the miners and other employees within a period to be in said notice named, and if the same be not furnished as required in such notice it shall be unlawful after the time fixed in such notice for the said owners or managers to operate said mine.

SEC. 5. That in all coal mines in the Territories of the United States the owners or managers shall provide at least two shafts, slopes, or other outlets, separated by natural strata of not less than 150 feet in breadth, by which shafts, slopes, or outlets distinct means of ingress and egress shall always be available to the persons employed in said mine. And in case of the failure of any coal mine to be so provided it shall be the duty of the mine inspector to make report of such fact, and thereupon notice shall issue, as provided in section 4 of this act, and with the same force and effect.

SEC. 6. That the owners or managers of every coal mine at a depth of 100 feet or more shall provide an adequate amount of ventilation of not less than 55 cubic feet of pure air per second, or 3,300 cubic feet per minute, for every 50 men at work in said mine, and in like proportion for a greater number, which air shall by proper appliances or machinery be forced through such mine to the face of each and every working place, so as to dilute and render harmless and expel therefrom the noxious or poisonous gases; and all workings shall be kept clear of standing gas.

SEC. 7. That any mine owner or manager who shall continue to operate a mine after failure to comply with the requirements of this act, and after the expiration of the period named in the notice provided for in section 4 of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not to exceed $500.

SEC. 8. That in no case shall a furnace shaft be used or for the purposes of this act be deemed an escape shaft.

SEC. 9. That escape shafts shall be constructed in compliance with the requirements of this act within six months from the date of the passage hereof, unless the time shall be extended by the mine inspector, and in no case shall said time be extended to exceed one year from the passage of this act.

SEC. 10. That a metal speaking tube from the top to the bottom of the shaft or slope shall be provided in all cases, so that conversation may be carried on through the same.

SEC. 11. That an approved safety catch shall be provided and sufficient cover overhead on every carriage used in lowering or hoisting persons. And the mine inspectors shall examine and pass upon the adequacy and safety of all such hoisting apparatus.

SEC. 12. That no child under 12 years of age shall be employed in the underground workings of any mine. And no father or other person shall misrepresent the age of anybody so employed. Any person guilty of violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not to exceed $100.

SEC. 13. That only experienced and competent and sober men shall be placed in charge of hoisting apparatus or engines. And the maximum number of persons who may ascend or descend upon any cage or hoisting apparatus shall be determined by the mine inspector.

SEC. 14. That it shall be lawful for any inspector to enter and inspect any coal mine in his district and the work and machinery belonging thereto at all reasonable times, but so as not to impede or obstruct the working of the mine; and to make inquiry into the state of the mine, works, and machinery, and the ventilation and mode of lighting the same, and into all matters and things connected with or relating to the safety of the persons employed in or about the same, and especially to make inquiry whether the provisions of this act are complied with; and the owner or agent is hereby required to furnish means necessary for such entry, inspection, examination, and inquiry, of which the said inspector shall make an entry in the record in his office, noting the time and material circumstances of the inspection.

SEC. 15. That in all cases of fatal accident a full report thereof shall be made by the mine owner or manager to the mine inspector, said report to be in the writing and made within ten days after such death shall have occurred.

SEC. 16. That as a cumulative remedy, in case of the failure of any owner or manager of any mine to comply with the requirements contained in the notice of the governor of such Territory or the Secretary of the Interior, given in pursuance of this act, any court of competent jurisdiction, or the judge of such court in vacation, may, on the application of the mine inspector, in the name of the United States and supported by the recommendation of the governor of said Territory or of the Secretary of the Interior, issue an injunction restraining the further operation of such mine until such requirements are complied with, and in order to obtain such injunction no bond shall be required.

SEC. 17. That wherever the term "owner or manager" is used in this act the same shall include lessees or other persons controlling the operation of any mine. And in case of the violation of the provisions of this act by any corporation the managing officers and superintendents, and other managing agents of such corporation, shall be personally liable and shall be punished as provided in act for owners and managers.

SEC. 18. That the mine inspectors provided for in this act shall each receive a salary of two thousand per annum, and their actual traveling expenses when engaged in their duties.

SEC. 19. That whenever any organized Territory shall make or has made provision by law for the safe operation of mines within such Territory, and the governor of such Territory shall certify said fact with a copy of the said law to the Secretary of the Interior, then and thereafter the provisions of this act shall no longer be enforced in such organized Territory, but in lieu thereof the statute of such Territory shall be operative in lieu of this act.

Approved March 3, 1891.

Mr. PEARRE. The penalties in the act of 1890 will apply to the provisions of this act for the purpose of enforcing it, as I understand. Otherwise the provisions of this act would be absolutely futile.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. LACEY. I do.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What provision have we in the bill for the appointment of inspectors, and who pays them?

Mr. LACEY. The President has appointed them, and they are paid by the United States. The original bill was passed on the last day of the Fifty-first Congress—too late for an appropriation. I earnestly called the attention of the House and the Senate to the danger growing out of the explosions in the Indian Territory, but the bill passed too late to be put in operation, and before the next meeting of Congress a most terrific calamity occurred at McAlester. President Harrison, by special message, at the beginning of the next Congress, called attention to the fact of this explosion, and explained why he had not put the law in operation—because the appropriation had not been made, as the bill passed too late, to put it in effect—and asked Congress to make a special appropriation, which the Fifty-second Congress did.

Since that time the inspectors have been enforcing the law—first in Utah, New Mexico, and the Indian Territory. The law will soon be operative in Alaska, because I think there will be coal enough (1,000 tons) taken out next year to bring that Territory also within the provisions of the law. Utah, of course, has gone out from under this law by being admitted to the Union, leaving now only two Territories in which the law is being operated through the national machinery.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let me ask one further question. Have the miners of the Indian Territory asked for the passage of this bill?

Mr. LACEY. They have. They asked it in the last Congress, but, unfortunately, not till the closing days of the session. I introduced a bill for them, but it was too late to secure action at that time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is this bill framed in accordance with their desire or request?

Mr. LACEY. In answer to that question I will say that I communicated a copy of this bill to the president of the Mine Workers of America, at Indianapolis, the other day, and received a letter from him saying that he had submitted the matter to the delegates from the Indian Territory and from the region affected by the proposed law and that they were earnestly in favor of it, but hoped that the shot-firing provision would be added, because they regarded that as even more important than the other parts of the proposed law.

I yield back the floor to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOODY of Oregon. I yield two minutes to the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. EDDY].

Mr. EDDY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make only a single statement in regard to this matter; and that is, that this morning I received a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, calling attention to the necessity of this proposed legislation and recommending the passage of this bill with amendments. I yield back the time to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOODY of Oregon. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH].

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, in relation to this bill I want to say to the gentleman from New Mexico that, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has said, a law of this kind has practically been in effect in the State of Colorado for quite a while. After the most mature deliberation there is no objection whatever on the part of mine owners or miners to such legislation. They have agreed on this matter, and the practical operation of the measure in the State of Colorado has been most beneficial.

Mr. RODEY. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor, of course, of all proper protection to the miners. My only doubt is as to whether the expected or supposed benefits of this legislation will not prove useless to them, while subjecting them to great expense. If, however, there is anything wrong with the measure, we can correct it in the Senate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Or in your legislature.

Mr. LACEY. Yes; each legislature can adopt its own law on the subject.

Mr. MOODY of Oregon. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE] for three minutes.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, in the very short time allowed to me I desire to express my hearty approval of the provisions of this bill. I have not had an opportunity to examine fully the act of 1890, providing protection for the miners in the Territories of the United States, nor have I had an opportunity to fully analyze this bill. But I have had time enough to see that the bill contains features that are absolutely essential for the protection of the health and lives of a great body of worthy workingmen throughout the Territories of the United States.

I understand and appreciate the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the Congress of the United States has not the power to legislate with regard to this same matter in the States themselves. I profoundly regret that such is the case under the Constitution and laws of the United States. Were the fact otherwise, we might have a thoroughly uniform system for the protection of the health and lives of miners. As it is now, miners in the various States are subjected to the whims of the State legislatures. There is, therefore, no well-regulated law providing systematically for the regulation of mines and the protection of the health and lives of miners uniform throughout the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the important thing in securing health to the miners is to see that they shall have plenty of fresh air. In the mines of some regions there is more foul air than in others, and in such cases, of course, greater precautions, more stringent legal regulations, are necessary than in sections where the air is not so bad. If you will go through one section of my county, in the Sixth district of Maryland, you will discover there numerous men—not only old men, but men who have just crossed the threshold of manhood—whose health has been impaired by asthma arising from the foul air of the mines, resulting from the fact that the necessary ventilation has not been provided. I can say to the credit of our State and its legislature that at almost every session new provisions are being embodied in our laws for the purpose of more fully protecting the health and lives of our miners. I therefore give my hearty approval to this particular measure. No subject of legislation has a more just claim upon the attention of the legislatures of the various States and Congress. The health and safety of the citizen should be the first consideration of the Government.

This bill does not, in my opinion, contain all the salutary features it ought to embrace. It would have been better to go more specifically into this matter, and to provide not only that there should be good ventilation, but to provide particularly in the law that that sort of a system of ventilation should be provided as experience has shown will secure the best ventilation. Mr. Speaker, I should like to discuss this matter more fully but my time will not permit. This bill should be passed, and I shall take great pleasure in voting for it.

Mr. LITTLE. I should like to make a brief statement.

Mr. MOODY of Oregon. I yield to the gentleman one minute.

Mr. LITTLE. I merely desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that, residing as I do near the Indian Territory and being somewhat familiar with the conditions there, I most heartily approve the provisions of this bill. It only adds additional safeguard around the men who work under ground. As legislators we can have no higher responsibility than that resting upon us to pass proper laws to secure the lives and safety of the men who labor in the coal-mining business.

Place around them all the protection possible, and still their vocation is a perilous one; but if the provisions of this bill are faithfully enforced the danger will be reduced to a minimum and will bless a large class of faithful, honest men.

I do not see, Mr. Speaker, that the provision of law which this bill seeks to enact can do any harm or hurt to any one of the Territories. The legislation seems to be carefully guarded, and, as I understand it, has been asked for by all persons engaged in the mining business.

It is humane in character, and, as far as I am advised, there is no opposition to its enactment, can involve no loss to the operators of these mines, and is only a safeguard to preserve the lives of the men engaged in them. It is a humane provision of law, a provision which should be enforced without legislation, and, indeed, there are many of the mine operators of the country who do enforce such enactments now.

I can not see, therefore, that any harm can be done to any industry, either in New Mexico or in the Indian Territory, or any other part of the country, by enforcing the requirements of this act. I believe that it is a provision that should be adopted, and I hope it will meet the approval of the House.

Mr. RODEY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is aware of the fact that a similar provision for protecting the lives of the miners is already in operation under the Territorial laws?

Mr. LITTLE. I think the gentleman is correct in that; but this can do no harm; it only adds additional safeguards. As far as I am informed, New Mexico has already made such a provision on the subject, and there is something of the same character in the Indian Territory, which this bill only seeks to amend.

Mr. RODEY. I yield a minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FLYNN].

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I hope there will not be any objection to the bill. I regard it as a wise provision, and one that should be adopted.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] some years ago presented to the House, and had passed, a bill with reference to the protection of miners in the Indian Territory. That bill has been most beneficial in its effects. It has met the approval of all the people who are engaged in the mining industries in that part of the country. It has been found of immense value to them, but experience has shown that this law needs amendment. I hope the House will pass this bill, which I regard as one of great importance, and as a necessary amendment to the preceding legislation.

Mr. RODEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MOODY of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment proposed by the committee—to add, after the amendment, the words "And any person or corporation violating the provisions of this act shall be liable in damages for the death or personal injury of any person killed or injured by such violation."

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that the previous question has been demanded and ordered.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Then the amendment would not be in order?

The SPEAKER. Not when the previous question is ordered.

The amendment offered by Mr. LACEY was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. MOODY of Oregon, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The call of committees was resumed and concluded.

THE CENSUS BILL.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on the Census to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill (H. R. 10308) to provide for a permanent Census Office.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MADDOX. I would like to ask if this bill is privileged, or if the motion of the gentleman is a privileged one, and, if necessary, I desire to be heard upon that point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman that this is a motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider a bill and does not involve any question of privilege such as the gentleman suggests. The gentleman has the right to make the motion under the rules of the House, and it is for the House to determine for itself whether it will or will not adopt the motion.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the gentleman calls up a bill from a committee and makes a motion with reference to it, and my question is whether he presents a matter of privilege which can not be contested.

The SPEAKER. It is not called up as a matter of privilege, as the Chair understands it. The gentleman makes a motion which under the rules he has a right to make, and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill to which he has referred.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole to consider a bill called up by the gentleman from Illinois, which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Census Office temporarily established in the Department of the Interior in accordance with an act entitled "An act to provide for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses," approved March 3, 1899, is hereby made a permanent office.

SEC. 2. That the work pertaining to the Twelfth Census shall be carried on by the Census Office under the existing organization until the 1st day of July, 1902, when the permanent Census Office herein provided for shall be organized by the Director of the Census.

SEC. 3. That the permanent Census Office shall be in charge of a Director of the Census, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive an annual salary of $5,000. It shall be his duty to superintend and direct the taking of the Thirteenth and subsequent censuses of the United States and to perform such other duties as may be imposed upon him by law.

SEC. 4. That there shall be in the Census Office, to be appointed by the Director thereof, 3 chief statisticians, who shall be persons of known and tried experience in statistical work, at an annual salary of $2,500 each; a chief clerk, at an annual salary of $2,000, who, in the absence of the Director, shall serve as acting director; a disbursing clerk, who shall also act as appointment clerk, at an annual salary of $2,100; 1 stenographer, at an annual salary of $1,500; 3 expert chiefs of division, at an annual salary of $1,800 each; 6 clerks of class 3; 10 clerks of class 2; and such number of clerks of class 1, and of clerks, copyists, computers, and skilled laborers, with salaries at the rate of not less than $900 nor more than $1,000 per annum, messengers, assistant messengers, watchmen, and charwomen, as may be necessary for the proper and prompt performance of the duties required by law. The disbursing clerk herein provided for shall, before entering upon his duties, give bond to the Secretary of the Treasury in the sum of $25,000, which bond shall be conditioned that the said officer shall render a true and faithful account to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury quarter yearly of all moneys and properties which shall be received by him by virtue of his office, with surety, to be approved by the Solicitor of the Treasury. Such bond shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be by him put in suit upon any breach of the conditions thereof.

SEC. 5. That all employees of the Twelfth Census Office, at the date of the passage of this act, above the grade of skilled laborer shall be, and they are hereby, placed under the provisions of the civil-service act approved January 16, 1883, and the amendments thereto and the rules established thereunder; and all new appointments in the Census Office hereby created shall be made in accordance with the requirements of the civil service act above referred to.

SEC. 6. That all the provisions of the act of March 3, 1899, relating to the Twelfth Census, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall remain in full force and effect for the taking of the Thirteenth and subsequent censuses.

SEC. 7. That section 8 of the act of March 3, 1899, is hereby amended so as to read as follows: That after the completion and return of the enumeration and of the work upon the schedules relating to the products of agriculture and to manufacturing and mechanical establishments provided for in section 7 of this act, the Director of the Census is hereby authorized to collect statistics relating to special classes, including the insane, feeble-minded, deaf, dumb, and blind; to crime, pauperism, and benevolence, including prisoners, paupers, juvenile delinquents, and inmates of benevolent and reformatory institutions; to social statistics of cities; to public indebtedness, valuation, taxation, and expenditures; to religious bodies; to electric light and power, telephone, and telegraph business; to transportation by water, express business, and street railways; to mines, mining, and minerals, and the production and value thereof, including gold in divisions of placer and vein, and silver mines, and the number of men employed, the average daily wage, average working time, and aggregate earnings in the various branches and aforesaid divisions of the mining industry. And the Director of the Census shall prepare schedules containing such interrogatories as shall in his judgment be best adapted to elicit the information required under these subjects, with such specifications, divisions, and particulars under each head as he shall deem necessary to that end; and all reports prepared under the provisions of this section shall be designated as "Special reports of the Census Office." For the purpose of securing the statistics required by this section, the Director of the Census may appoint special agents when necessary, and such special agents shall receive compensation as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 8. That there shall be a collection of the statistics of the births and deaths in registration areas for the year 1902, and annually thereafter, the data for which shall be obtained from the registration records of such States and municipalities as possess records affording satisfactory data in necessary detail, in the discretion of the Director, the compensation for the transcription of which shall not exceed 2 cents for each birth or death reported.

SEC. 9. That in the year 1905, and every ten years thereafter, there shall be a collection of the statistics of manufactures, confined to manufacturing establishments conducted under what is known as the factory system, exclusive of the so-called neighborhood and mechanical industries; and the Director is hereby authorized to prepare such schedules as in his judgment may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section; and that the Director of the Census shall annually collect the statistics of the cotton production of the country as returned by the ginners; and that the Director of the Census shall make, from time to time, any additional special collections of statistics relating to any branch of agriculture, manufacture, mining, transportation, fisheries, or any other branch of industry that may be required of him by Congress.

SEC. 10. That section 17 of the act of March 3, 1899, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. That the special agents appointed under the provisions of this act have equal authority with the enumerators in respect to the subjects committed to them under this act and shall receive compensation at rates to be fixed by the Director of the Census: Provided, That the same shall in no case exceed $6 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3 per day during their necessary absence from their usual place of residence: And provided further, That no pay or allowance in lieu of subsistence shall be allowed special agents when employed in the Census Office on other than the special work committed to them, and no appointments of special agents shall be made for clerical work: And provided further, That the Director of the Census is hereby authorized in his discretion to employ the clerical force of the Census Office for such field work as may be required to carry out the provisions of sections 7, 8, and 9, in lieu of employing special agents for that purpose; and such employees when so employed shall be allowed, in addition to their regular compensation, actual necessary traveling expenses and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3 per day during their necessary absence from the Census Office."

SEC. 11. That the printing office established in the Census Office is hereby abolished and the outfit and equipment therein shall be turned over to the Public Printer; and the Director of the Census is hereby authorized and directed to have printed, published, and distributed, from time to time, bulletins and reports of the preliminary and other results of the various investigations authorized by law; and all of said printing and binding shall be done by the Public Printer at the Government Printing Office.

SEC. 12. That the supplemental acts amendatory of the act of March 3, 1899, approved February 1, 1900; May 10, 1900; June 2, 1900; February 23, 1901, are hereby repealed; and all provisions of the act of March 3, 1899, inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the interest in the bill will center largely in the different sections in it, and will be developed in the debate under the five-minute rule, I should like before we enter upon the consideration of the bill at all to come to some understanding as to the length of time for general debate. I apprehend that the questions involved here are so familiar to every member of the committee that general debate is really unnecessary aside from an explanation of the bill itself, and I will therefore ask that general debate be limited to one hour; that the time be equally divided between those who favor the bill and those who oppose it, and then that the bill be taken up under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to one hour, one-half of which shall be allotted to those in support of the bill and one-half to those in opposition to the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDOX. I shall have to object to that proposition, unless we can have a general understanding about this.

Mr. HOPKINS. What does the gentleman desire? I will try to meet his wishes.

Mr. MADDOX. I do not know for myself whether there is anybody on this side of the House who wants to talk about this measure or not, but so far as I am individually concerned, thirty minutes will do me. Now, I do not know whether anybody else over here wants any time or not.

Mr. HOPKINS. We can regulate that under the five-minute rule, if there is anybody aside from the gentleman who desires it, and the gentleman can control the time in opposition.

Mr. MADDOX. There may be somebody on this side who desires more time.

Mr. BURKETT. I will object to any limiting of the time for general debate at this time. When we have heard the statement of the chairman, it may develop some reasons for general debate, and it may not. I will object to any limitation at this time.

Mr. HOPKINS. Suppose we agree upon one hour and a half?

Mr. BURKETT. No; let us hear your explanation.

Mr. MADDOX. I want to say to the gentleman that since I have called attention to this matter there may be some other gentlemen who want to be heard on this question, and I think we had better hear the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, and then see what we can do.

Mr. HOPKINS. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I think for the purposes of everybody interested it would be much better to have a definite understanding as to the length of time that general debate shall run. Would the gentleman be satisfied with an hour and a half—three-quarters of an hour on each side?

Mr. MADDOX. I will say that so far as this side are concerned, we will be content with an hour over here for general debate.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] be content with that?

Mr. BURKETT. You had better go ahead with your explanation. Your explanation of the bill may develop something.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, in response to the gentleman's request, that this matter has been hurried along unnecessarily, reported out of the committee in a very short time, after a couple of days' investigation, and we have not seen it until this morning. I think it is due to this House that we should not tie our hands with an agreement before we know what is in the bill and what it is about and what its provisions are. It may be that I shall not require more than ten minutes for myself, but I object to any limitation now.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will ask my friend if an hour on a side will suit him? That will satisfy gentlemen on the other side, and I will say to the gentleman that I will yield to him such time as he may desire.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not know that I will want over five minutes' time. I do not know what this bill is going to develop.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let us fix it at an hour on a side.

Mr. BURKETT. If this matter had been brought up in such a way that we might have had a few hours to investigate the bill, then there would have been no difficulty.

Mr. HOPKINS. You shall have all the time you want.

Mr. BURKETT. The discussion may develop a good deal, and it may not.

Mr. HOPKINS. I then ask unanimous consent to close the general debate in two hours, the time to be equally divided between the friends and opponents of the bill.

Mr. MADDOX. We want an hour over here.

Mr. HOPKINS. One hour to the other side and one hour to this side, and I will say to my friend from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] that I will give him as much time as he wants.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed in two hours, the time to be equally divided between the two sides of the House. Is there objection?

Mr. BURKETT. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the committee, I will take a few minutes briefly to explain the bill. I will say, however, that the report that was published in the RECORD this morning fully explains the character of the bill proposed here, the various provisions, and the expenditure necessarily incurred by the establishment of the bureau.

I shall not take very much of the time of the committee to speak of the importance or the necessity of establishing a permanent census office.

This is a question which has been before the people of this country for more than thirty years, and it is a question that has been favored by every statistician and every scientist in this country during that period. Every Superintendent of the Census since the taking of the Ninth Census has recommended the establishment of a permanent bureau.

These men who have been charged with the duty of taking the census under the Constitution of the United States have seen and appreciated the wasteful expenditure of money under these temporary bureaus, and they have seen that by the establishment of a permanent bureau there can be an actual saving to the Government, in addition to the fact that the materials that are obtained under the operations of the bureau will be vastly more important by reason of their greater accuracy and the scientific manner in which they are presented to the general public.

I take it that every member of the House who has given any thought to the subject whatever is in full accord with the views of the present Director of the Census in the idea that now is the opportune time to establish a permanent bureau. I take it that every gentleman who has investigated the subject at all will agree with me that it will be a saving of money by establishing the bureau as proposed in this bill.

When the Director of the Census first suggested this matter, he called the attention of the members of our committee to the extravagant expenditure of money in establishing some of the subheads in this bureau; and I violate no confidence in calling the attention of members of this House to the fact that in taking the agricultural census alone there was an expenditure of $600,000 more than would be required under a trained force of clerks for the same work.

As was stated by the Director of the Twelfth Census, not a person, from the highest officer down to the lowest clerk, had any specific knowledge upon the subject that would enable him to properly and economically plan the work and then see that it was properly executed. It was only by experience, groping in this direction first, and then in that, they were enabled to gather statistics and make a report as required by law; and it is by reason of such experience, had in this special department of the Bureau itself, that the Director came to the conclusion that in the interest of economy alone it was important to the interests of the Government of the United States that a bureau of this character be established.

Mr. BURKETT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. The committee had some hearings, as I understand it, in relation to this bill. I would like to ask the gentleman whether statisticians in general were called in? I have not been able to get hold of a copy of the hearings to see whether anybody outside of the Census Bureau and the Civil Service Commission were called in.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why does the gentleman ask that question?

Mr. BURKETT. I want to know upon what information the committee had acted.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman knows that well.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is that question asked in a factious spirit?

Mr. BURKETT. I asked it because I want information.

Mr. HOPKINS. I thought when the gentleman put that question to me I had answered him fully and he has full information on the subject. In preparing this bill and in presenting it to the House the committee have acted in accordance with the direction of the House. There was no authority in that direction to call in scientific gentlemen or any statisticians before the committee. We were directed to do a specific thing, and we have done it.

Mr. BURKETT. Did not the gentleman inform the House that they had had hearings?

Mr. HOPKINS. Of statisticians?

Mr. BURKETT. Of anyone.

Mr. HOPKINS. We had no authority to have hearings of anyone.

Mr. BURKETT. I also asked the gentleman who they had called for information, and he absolutely refused to answer.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman can not truthfully make that statement.

Mr. BURKETT. I make it all the same.

Mr. HOPKINS. The committee had only two parties before it. One was a distinguished member of the Civil Service Commission and the second the Director of the Census.

Mr. BURKETT. That is all I wanted to know.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman had that information long before this.

But, Mr. Chairman, it would be unnecessary to call in statisticians or any scientific gentlemen before our committee in order to bring this matter before the House. This is a subject, as I have already stated, that has been before the American people for the last thirty years, and it has been considered again and again by the different Congresses that have assembled here in this Hall during that period. I hold in my hand Senate Document No. 1, published in the first session of the Fifty-second Congress, that contains 180 pages of material that was gathered for the express purpose of demonstrating the necessity of a permanent census office, and it substantiates the correctness of the statements I have made here to-day.

This document can be had by the gentleman from Nebraska, and is accessible to every member of the House. In addition to that, I have also the report numbered 2393 of the House of Representatives, in the second session of the Fifty-second Congress, reported by Mr. Wilcox, from the Select Committee on the Eleventh Census, which contains the statement of such distinguished statisticians as Mr. Kendrick Upton, Thomas Donaldson, Joseph D. Weeks, Hon. Francis A. Walker, Dr. John S. Billings, Frank R. Williams, Carroll D. Wright, and J. A. Price.

All of these gentlemen unite in their recommendation for the establishment of a permanent bureau of this character. And I can say in passing, Mr. Chairman, that with all the investigations that have been had during the period I have just mentioned, I know of no statistician or scientific gentleman of this country who has taken the view that it would be economical for us to gather these statistics every ten years under a temporary bureau. They all unite in recommending that this bureau be made a permanent bureau.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that the vast material that was obtained under the Tenth and Eleventh censuses, much of it went for naught, after the expenditure of millions of dollars, because of the inefficiency of clerks and those who had charge of it, and their inability by lack of time to properly tabulate the figures they had collected, so that a large portion of that vast work was lost to the Congress and to the people of this country.

Mr. BURKETT. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. The gentleman states that it is the opinion of the experts taken heretofore that they ought to have a permanent census bureau. I have no question about that. But is it not also the opinion of Mr. Wright and Mr. Porter, given in these hearings, that when you make a permanent census bureau, you should make it include all the statistics of the Government, that it should coordinate and consolidate all the statistical work of the Government, and so have only one great statistical bureau?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Porter and Mr. Wright have disagreed as to the details. As to the propriety of establishing a permanent census bureau, they agree, but Mr. Wright has some views as to the details and Mr. Porter has others.

Now, that is a matter that is not before the committee, but it is a matter that can be properly considered by Congress at any time. The great object now is to establish a permanent Census Bureau, and then that office can be enlarged or curtailed as the experience and the wisdom of Congress may dictate. But we shall never reach the point desired by these gentlemen, and so much sought after by those interested in the statistics gathered by this Bureau every ten years, unless we first make the Bureau permanent. Then, as I say, the wisdom of Congress can determine whether the powers of that Bureau shall be enlarged to take in other bureaus, or whether it shall be kept within the limits proposed in the present bill.

Mr. BURKETT. One question more, if the gentleman will pardon me. Does this bill which he has prepared take in any other statistical bureau or department? In other words, does it provide anything additional for this Census Bureau to what the law already provides? To illustrate what I mean: There is a Bureau of Statistics and a Department of Labor—does this bill include any portion of those departments?

Mr. HOPKINS. No. This bill does not seek to abolish any bureau we have at the present time. It was not thought wise to go beyond the limits of the resolution which directed the committee to make the report. It was thought better to take this up because of its great importance and to limit it within the lines prescribed in the temporary law, enlarging it, as I will explain a little further on, in certain particulars, and then let Congress determine in the future whether the Bureau of Labor or the Bureau of Statistics or any bureau shall be consolidated with it.

The gentleman can see, if it were attempted to abolish any existing bureau, there would be antagonism at once. We are not prepared to say that it would be wise to do that at the present time. We are prepared to say it is wise to establish a permanent census bureau. We are prepared to say that it is economical, and we shall thus secure a trained lot of clerks and statisticians who will take this work up and present it to the Congress of the United States at the proper time in a more accurate and detailed way, and with less expense than the Government has heretofore been put to. So much on the question of the present census.

When this subject was before this House the other day a good deal of complaint was made by various gentlemen about the expenditure of money in the establishment of the bureau itself and of its expensive character as proposed under that bill. The committee who have had in charge the preparation of this substitute have endeavored to meet the demands of this House in that particular, and they have not only cut down the expenditures in a most radical way, but they believe they have so arranged the executive branch of this bureau that it will meet the wishes of every member of this House, unless there be some gentlemen who are totally opposed to the establishment of a permanent bureau.

Of course, if any member of the House thinks that a permanent bureau should not be established, the committee have been unable to meet his demands. But if the object is to protect the Government from the extravagant expenditure of money, the committee believe they have met this requirement in the bill now proposed.

We have, in the first instance, reduced the salary of the Director of the Census from $7,500 to $5,000 per annum. This bill is to take effect on the 1st day of July next, at which period, under the temporary law, the four great subjects of agriculture, manufactures, etc., that are now embraced in what are called the "census reports" under the law will be completed.

Then there is another branch of work, as gentlemen who are familiar with this subject understand, upon which the bureau has to embark, and this is to be taken up by the permanent bureau. After careful investigation we have felt that the head of this bureau could well afford to serve for a salary of $5,000 if the office is made permanent. We have been strengthened in our view on this subject by the fact that on examination we find the Commissioner of Pensions, the Commissioner of Patents, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and various other heads of bureaus, with one exception, receive salaries not exceeding $5,000.

The next recommendation that we make is the abolishment of the office of Assistant Director of the Census, now receiving an annual salary of $4,000. From the investigation we have made we think that this office is unnecessary; that if the bureau should become permanent, the chief clerk, who is to be the Acting Director of the Census in the absence of the Director, can take charge of and perform the temporary duties of that office quite as well as an officer created for that express purpose. So that there will be here a saving of $4,000 per annum.

Then we have provided for a reduction in the number of chief statisticians. Under existing law there are five of these officers at an annual salary of $3,000 each. We have reduced the number to three and the salary to $2,500 each. We believe this sum will secure the services of the men who are already in service there, or of men who will be equally efficient if the present incumbents should decline to serve; because, as members will recollect, if this bureau should become permanent these positions will be for life, or at least during good behavior or efficient service.

We have abolished the offices of purchasing agent, superintendent of printing, and geographer, together with four expert chiefs of divisions, at a salary of $2,000 each, and the salaries of the remaining three have been reduced to $1,800 each. We have abolished one stenographer and all of the clerks of class 4 who draw salaries of $1,800 a year.

We have also abolished 15 clerks of class 3, at $1,600 each; 18 clerks of class 2, at $1,400 each; 1 captain of the watch, and 2 messengers, making in all a reduction in round numbers of $115,000 per annum.

In making these reductions we have of course consulted with the head of the Bureau; and we are satisfied that when these reductions have been made the force that will be left will be amply sufficient for a permanent bureau. The clerks and employees under class 2 will necessarily be left to the discretion of the Director of the Census, because that is a force that will be expanded or contracted from time to time, according to the wants of the office and the exigencies of the Government.

But in order that there may be a proper check upon the Director of the Census so that the public can be assured there will be no extravagant expenditure of money in this direction, there is a provision to which I call the attention of members, that the Director of the Census must make his annual report to the Committee on Appropriations, over which my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] presides, and of which my distinguished friend from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] is a member. That committee will have practically within its control these lesser employees in this Bureau. Congress will always be able to provide against an excessive number of employees and against any unnecessary expenditure of money.

Mr. Chairman, if this force that we have provided is retained as a permanent force for the proper administration of this office, its expense will aggregate only $47,000 per annum, against one hundred and sixty odd thousand dollars at the present time. I call the attention of members to these figures in order to show that in providing for a permanent bureau we have put it upon an economical basis; we have provided a skeleton force that will be sufficient to discharge the duties of the Bureau from year to year, while the service will still be of such a character as to insure the best results when we come to take the enumeration of the population of this country under the Constitution of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is another reason why we should have a permanent bureau for the census, and that is because of the conditions which have sprung up in the last few years relating to the outlying possessions of the United States. We have a great work there to do, and if we do not establish a permanent bureau we must establish a temporary one, which will be expensive and unsatisfactory. All our work in Porto Rico, in the Hawaiian Islands and the Philippines must necessarily be performed by a census bureau, because these possessions have come within our jurisdiction since the last census was taken, and it is a matter of economy to provide, as the pending bill does, for this character of work.

It is the belief of persons who are familiar with the work, and who have expressed their opinions before the committee, that there will be a very large saving in the public expenditures by adopting the provisions of law which we seek to incorporate here upon the statute books, and by making the census a permanent feature of our Government, instead of making these provisions every ten years, as we do now. This allows the officials of the Government to begin their work in advance, so that the enumerators and other persons connected with the census may be provided, and in this manner a very large saving of public expenditures will be achieved.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, with his consent.

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I would like to ask as to the difference in expense as proposed by the pending bill and the bill heretofore presented for this purpose? Now, if the bill which the gentleman presents and which he advocates is adopted, I would like to ask the difference between this and the one which was passed by the House formerly—or rather the one which was before the House on a former occasion?

Mr. HOPKINS. There is a saving of $115,000, I would state to the gentleman from Georgia. Of course, there are certain expenditures involved in the taking of the census which can not be determined in advance, and nobody can give an exact estimate as to the cost. But my friend, of course, will understand that with the "watchdogs of the Treasury" always on the alert there will be no waste of money in the appropriation for taking the census.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Another question I would like to ask the gentleman, and that is if this provision of law takes effect, as I understand it, on the 1st day of July, 1902, for what length of time is the permanent Director of this census to be appointed?

Mr. HOPKINS. Of course, he will be appointed under the general law.

Mr. BRANTLEY. By whom?

Mr. HOPKINS. It is, I assume, the same as would apply in all such cases. He is appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. His appointment may be likened somewhat to the appointment of a fourth-class postmaster, whose commission runs during the pleasure of the President.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I only wanted to get the gentleman's assurance as to that point.

Mr. HOPKINS. Presumably, I take it, it will be the same.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have explained fully in the brief remarks which I have submitted and in the report of the committee the various provisions of this bill.

Mr. BURKETT. If the gentleman will permit me, I understand that on the 1st of July the force of which he speaks in connection with this Bureau is to be reduced—that is, so far as the executive officers are concerned?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is correct. But, of course, the clerical force is a different matter.

Mr. BURKETT. And that, of course, you can not tell what the reduction will be?

Mr. HOPKINS. It would be very difficult, if not impossible, to say exactly what the reduction will be; but, as I have stated heretofore, there will be a considerable reduction over the expenditures in the last census.

Mr. PRINCE. If my friend will allow me, I would like to interrupt him for a question.

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly; I yield with pleasure.

Mr. PRINCE. Have you limited the number of employees or the expense of the Bureau in this bill? As I understand my colleague, this bill covers a wider scope than the previous bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. My friend is in error.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up very much more time in general debate. I simply call to the attention of the members of the committee one other subject in the bill that was a fruitful source of discussion in the committee when the matter was before it the last time. The framework of the bill——

Mr. MADDOX. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MADDOX. I notice here that the Director of the Census shall annually collect statistics of the cotton production of the country as returned by the ginners.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. MADDOX. And that the Director of the Census shall make from time to time any additional special collection of statistics relating to any branch of agriculture, mining, and so on, that may be required by Congress. Why do you make cotton special and say that statistics shall be collected annually?

Mr. HOPKINS. Why do we make that special?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes.

Mr. HOPKINS. Because it is one of the greatest products that has enriched the United States, and people living in the Northern States, as well as those in the South, are interested in the actual production of cotton.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And the office is flooded with inquiries in relation to it.

Mr. HOPKINS. As suggested by my friend from Indiana, the Census Office is flooded with inquiries upon this subject, and I am safe in saying that there are more inquiries regarding that than any other one subject that it is proposed to consider under this bill.

Mr. MADDOX. I want to call your attention to another fact, that in this report you say that there have been a great number of communications from people, both producers and manufacturers, asking for this, and that you have included some of them in your report. Where are they found in your report?

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman does not find them there, I will give him some of the others.

Mr. MADDOX. They are not in here. Now, let me ask the gentleman if he does not know that the gathering of these returns from the ginners is in the interest of the speculator and not in the interest of the producer, and if it is not in the interest of the speculator alone?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry to hear any gentleman from the South indulge in a remark of that kind. The gentleman from Georgia is the first man in America that I ever heard who entertained the sentiment just expressed by him. The collection of these facts is in the interest of the planter, in the interest of the manufacturer, and in the interest of the laborer, and for them alone, and if the gentleman has any information other than that he is in touch with a class of people with whom I am unfamiliar, and with whom, I trust, every other member of the House is unfamiliar.

Mr. BARTLETT, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it not a fact, referring to the question asked by my colleague from Georgia, that the old way of obtaining statistics, with reference to the production, by the Agricultural Department was so misleading and unsatisfactory compared with the more recent method of obtaining information from the ginners pursued by the Census Department, that it was determined that this was the most reliable way of obtaining the information? And even if the information does benefit speculators, is it not unfortunately true that in this country the price of cotton is fixed in Wall street by the speculators?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, there is not any doubt but what the collection of these statistics is of immense value to the planters in the Southern States. It is of value precisely as the collection of agricultural statistics is of great benefit to the farmers in the Northern States. The collection and publication of these statistics from time to time enable our people to be the most intelligent and scientific planters and farmers in the world, and enable us to stand in the very front rank of progress and civilization. The establishment of a bureau of this kind and the collection of information of the character proposed in this bill are things that have made America what she is in the eyes of the nations of the world.

Now, as I said, the framework of the bill is in accordance with the bills under which the enumeration was had in the Tenth, Eleventh, and Twelfth censuses, so that I shall take no time in making any explanation of the provisions of the bill, so far as that branch of the subject is concerned.

I now desire to call to the attention of the members section 5 of this bill, which provides:

That all employees of the Twelfth Census Office, at the date of the passage of this act, above the grade of skilled laborer shall be, and they are hereby, placed under the provisions of the civil-service act approved January 16, 1883, and the amendments thereto and the rules established thereunder; and all new appointments in the census office hereby created shall be made in accordance with the requirements of the civil-service act above referred to.

I think that section is so plain and so specific in its character that every member will understand that this same force, which is now doing this splendid work in the Census Office, is to be placed under the civil-service rules by the enactment of this bill into a law, and will be absorbed in the other departments if they are not required to be retained in the census office itself.

This provision has been placed here in obedience to an almost universal demand of the House, and is based upon what is deemed to be for the best interests of the Government and of the public service.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Has the gentleman any estimate as to the number of employees who will be upon the rolls of the Census Office at the date of the passage of this bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. About 2,000.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Over 2,000. Now, would the gentleman from Illinois have any objection, inasmuch as the present civil-service laws require that preference shall be given to those States which have not their quota in the public service, would he have any objection, in order to remove any charge of favoritism in the creation of this Bureau in transfers to other Departments of the Government, to provide further that the employees in the Census Bureau at the date of the passage of this act who are made eligible for transfer or retention in the service shall be apportioned among the States in proportion to their population?

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is the general law now.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to my friend that that is a part of the general law now, and it would be entirely unnecessary to have that in. The gentleman understands, as well as I can express to him here this morning, that in the creation of this force in the Census Bureau there has been no favoritism shown. The employees have been selected on merit from the several States, so that each section has been properly and fairly represented, and during all the time that the present Director has been discharging so efficiently and so well the duties of that great office I have yet to hear a single criticism from that side of the House as to unfairness in appointments and promotions.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I have no criticism to make upon the Director of Census, but, as a matter of fact, 6 appointments were accredited to gentlemen upon that side of the House to 2 upon this side of the House.

A MEMBER. Eight.

Mr. BALL of Texas. A gentleman here says 8.

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, no.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Well, 5 or 6.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman is in error.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Five or six were accorded to gentlemen upon that side of the House and only two upon this side. I know that a great many members upon that side of the House have got ten times more than members upon this side.

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not yield at this time for a speech of that kind.

Mr. BALL of Texas. The gentleman stated a moment ago that the present law provided that they should be apportioned among the States. I would like to ask him if that law will be applicable to this bill, and if the bill provides that those persons upon the roll at the date of the passage of this act shall be subject to transfer, or be eligible to transfer, will it be a matter of favoritism as to who are transferred?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the gentleman that no favoritism will be carried into this legislation. No favoritism was shown to any section nor to any political organization in the creation of this great force; and the gentleman must understand that if this body of employees come under the civil-service law, they will be transferred under an Executive order. And the gentleman understands full well the present occupant of the White House is a believer in the merit system, and that an employee from his section will receive consideration as quickly as one will from the State of New York or from the State of Illinois.

Mr. RYAN. I would like to ask the gentleman if the employees in the printing division who will be there on the passage of this act will be included under section 5?

Mr. HOPKINS. I may be in error, but that is my understanding of the bill.

Mr. RIXEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in that connection. I understand that the provision of section 5 only applies to those who are employed in the service at the date of the passage of this act. Why should they not make eligible for appointment those who have stood the same examination, but who have been discharged from the Census Office? Why should not they all be eligible to appointment under the same provision?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the gentleman, for the good reason that they are only temporary employees.

Mr. RIXEY. Why should not they have the same advantage as the other employees in the Census Office who are to be placed under the civil-service laws?

Mr. HOPKINS. It was fully understood that they sought employment for thirty, sixty, and ninety days, and I do not think that they should have the same privileges accorded them. The gentleman thinks that this provision should apply to those men because they have stood the same examination that these permanent clerks stood. That does not meet the requirement. These people understood that they were only going in there for a limited time. They had that understanding when they entered the service.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman allow me right there? We are informed that there is to be a large number of these clerks discharged on the 1st of February. What effect will this bill have on the dismissal of those clerks on the 1st of February? As I understand it, they will not be eligible to appointment to any other department, whereas those who are retained will be protected under the civil-service act.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I have once stated to the gentleman, and I desire this to be my final answer to him on that proposition, any order that has been made for the discharge of clerks is an order that covers the temporary force. When they entered the service, they understood that the service was to be of a temporary character.

We are not legislating for people that have worked there for one, two, or three days; we are legislating for the great body of clerks who entered the service when it was organized, and have been a part of that machinery that has given us these splendid results that have been exhibited in these bulletins from time to time.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman allow me another question?

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PEARRE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether section 5 of this bill, covering the people into the civil service, will apply to those on the temporary force now employed at the Census Bureau and not yet discharged, as well as to those who pass the examination?

Mr. HOPKINS. The temporary force will be disposed of before this becomes a law. This will only apply to the permanent force.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; if it is not too hard.

Mr. CANNON. It is not too hard and I want to know. Section 5 says: "That all employees of the Twelfth Census Office at the date of the passage of this act above the grade of skilled laborer shall be, and they are hereby, placed," etc. Now, am I correct in supposing that a very considerable number were appointed as skilled laborers, and that this is merely a designation in the kind of clerk; that there are many on the roll that were appointed early in the service and are still on the rolls as skilled laborers?

Mr. HOPKINS. I am informed there are 200 on the rolls as skilled laborers.

Mr. CANNON. At what pay?

Mr. HOPKINS. Six hundred dollars.

Mr. CANNON. And they are performing clerical service?

Mr. HOPKINS. No, they are not performing clerical service in the sense that a $900 or $1,000 clerk is performing it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to ask if any of these persons sought to be retained by this bill are designated now as "laborers;" in other words, does this bill seek to retain any of those clerks designated as "laborers?"

Mr. HOPKINS. There is nobody appointed a clerk designated as a laborer.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. As a skilled laborer?

Mr. HOPKINS. No.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. There are some skilled laborers, and I wanted to know whether they are protected by this bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. No. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to take further time in the discussion of this bill. I have sought to explain its provisions to the members of the committee and get the matter before them. I have no personal pride as to whether this bill shall be adopted or rejected. As one member of the Committee on the Census I have sought to discharge my duty fully and fairly and put this matter before the House, and it is now for the members of the committee to say whether this bill shall be taken up and considered, or whether it shall be rejected. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has fourteen minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question: Whether under section 5 the supervisor of the Thirteenth Census and the enumerators will be under the civil service?

Mr. HOPKINS. I think not. The supervisors would, but the enumerators would not—at least that is the purpose of the framers of the bill.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I would like to ask if it is not true that all the persons employed in the Census Bureau understood at the time they took their work that they were employed temporarily? Did they not all have that understanding at that time? I would like to ask the gentleman further, if by transferring this great body of clerks to the classified service it will not work a very great injury and a very great injustice to a large number of persons who have qualified themselves for service in the employment of the Government, and who will be kept back and supplanted by reason of the transfer of these clerks to the classified service?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will state that the great majority of clerks were employed temporarily for a service designed to be temporary when the Census Bureau was created.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Was not the whole business regarded as temporary at that time?

Mr. HOPKINS. It was understood that they would perform their duties and remain in the service until the work provided for in the law should be accomplished.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time, and I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed in one hour, the time to be equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. MADDOX. Does the gentleman propose to give me that hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that general debate be closed in one hour.

Mr. BURKETT. I object.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] whether we can come to any understanding as to the time to be occupied?

Mr. LANDIS. I ask the gentleman from Illinois whether there is any particular reason why this bill should be rushed through in an hour or two hours?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, no—not if anybody wants to discuss it further.

Mr. LANDIS. It is evident that a number of gentlemen want to speak on the bill; others wish to submit interrogatories. It strikes me that it would be perfectly safe to allow the debate to proceed without any understanding at present as to its termination.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have understood that the debate on the bill would be largely concentrated within the five-minute discussion, when we come to consider the bill by paragraphs. If any gentleman wants to discuss the bill further in general debate, I am the last one to attempt to cut off such person. The only reason I propounded my question to the gentleman from Nebraska was that he seems to make objection to the proposed limitation of time, without designating any time that he would consider proper, whether one hour or two hours or any other number of hours.

Mr. LANDIS. I do not wish to speak on the bill, but the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] wants an hour.

Mr. HOPKINS. And I want him to have an hour.

Mr. LANDIS. I see no reason why he should not have.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman from Indiana understands, I hope, that I am perfectly willing to accord to the gentleman from Georgia the time he asks. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent, then, that we close general debate in an hour and a half.

Mr. BURKETT. I object.

Mr. HOPKINS. Very well; I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I have no idea of occupying myself any extended time; but I had supposed that on an important measure like this a number of Democrats at least would like to be heard. As for myself, I wish to enter my protest against this method of legislation. Yesterday this bill was brought in here and presented to the House with a request for unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD. Now, this morning we are called upon to dispose of it. I believe—or I will say I guess—that not fifteen men outside of the committee have had an opportunity to read the bill and the report up to this time. What do gentlemen of the House know about this bill? You are proposing to establish a bureau, to fix it upon the Government for all time. Now, I wish especially to call the attention of Democrats to a provision of our Democratic platform. Something has been said lately about that platform, and some of its declarations have been used to rally Democrats to vote in favor of the Nicaragua Canal. Let me call attention to this declaration:

> We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government, and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

That declaration was indorsed by the Democratic party in their convention of 1900. That is the declaration of the party that we propose to represent on this side of the House. Yet to-day we have before us a proposition to establish a bureau—to make it permanent—a proposition which men undertake to say will curtail expense; but I undertake to say that such will not be the result. It will be like the "bee course" of my friend from Ohio, referred to the other day, or like a wild-hog claim down in Georgia. As soon as it is established it will reach out for everything in sight, and, instead of a reduction of expenses, we shall find the expenses heaping up. That will be the result. It has been the result of every proposition of this sort that we have ever had before this body. What do these predictions or promises made in reports or speeches that certain things are going to take place after a certain bill has been enacted into law amount to? Do we not all see such promises or prophesies repudiated every session that we come here?

Why, Mr. Chairman, my mind recurs now to a bill which was passed in the House—the free homestead bill—which we considered here a few years ago and which was debated at length in this body, and I understand that another amendment is to be offered to that same bill to enlarge its scope. We had this thing before the House for the longest time, and every single member who spoke upon the bill, everything that was said about it, every paragraph of the bill in the House was calculated to give assurance that nothing further would be asked on the part of these homesteaders, and that the Government of the United States would not be required to expend another dollar in regard to the matter. And yet time and again members have come in here asking amendments to that law. We were told then that this provision was a wise one and that the money derived from these lands had been turned into the Treasury, and that, as a matter of fact, it was a money-making scheme on the part of the Government; and yet, as a matter of fact, what has been the result of that legislation? All of these prophecies, all of these promises, and all of these pledges have been set aside and Congress is asked that it shall again open up these lands for free homes to the people who have gone on these lands under the promise that they would not ask anything further from the Government of the United States.

Now, what is the condition which confronts us with reference to this bill? You do not propose to reduce the cost of taking the census. I tell you, gentlemen, that you will find out, if the bill passes, that it will not be four years before it will be used as an instrument of oppression in our section of the country, and mark what I say on that point. Why is there not ample time given for the consideration of a matter of so much importance? What is the necessity for rushing it through in this manner? What is the use of putting it through the House without proper consideration?

We are not pressed with business. We have been in the habit of adjourning here day after day with absolutely nothing to do. We are waiting, they say, for work from the committees. Here is a measure of vast importance which you propose to rush through the House without consideration. Here is a bill embracing many sections and a report covering fifty-odd pages—60 pages—which has not been considered or digested; a report and a bill with which we are absolutely unfamiliar and which is forced upon us in this extraordinary way. You propose to force this bill upon us without consideration. It was said that the bill has been published in the RECORD. Who has had an opportunity of reading it? We have not even been able to get a copy of the bill. We have had no discussion and can not have a full discussion of the bill. If we had time to consider it, if we had time to digest its provisions, if we had time to amend it, it would be a very different matter. What does any man here know of the provisions of this bill? You are providing for a permanent bureau of statistics. What force do you mean to employ?

Let me call your attention to another fact also in this connection. There is a bill pending here which came over from the Senate of the United States establishing a bureau of commerce, and under the provisions of that bill, as I gather from the newspapers of the country, this Census Bureau that we are now called upon to consider here is incorporated in that measure. Who has had an opportunity of examining the bill to ascertain the facts? What is the reason that we can not have time—ample time—to read the report in this case, to examine the facts, and satisfy ourselves as to the ground upon which we may take action with reference to the matter?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask my friend from Georgia how many offices this new bill creates?

Mr. MADDOX. I do not think anybody can tell just at present. We have had no opportunity of examining the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When was the bill reported?

Mr. MADDOX. The bill was filed on yesterday, and I doubt very much if a half dozen members have had an opportunity of examining it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have not had an opportunity to see the bill until just a few minutes ago through the House post-office.

Mr. MADDOX. Yes; through the post-office; and I agree with my friend from Tennessee in his suggestion that there has not been time for anyone to consider the bill properly. We find the report in the RECORD, but the facts and the exhibits upon which the report was based were not incorporated or put into the RECORD, and if they had been, who would have had an opportunity in this time to study them and enable him to act as a legislator ought to act on a bill of this character? The only information we have is from the report of the committee, and we have had no opportunity of examining that. Now, I ask again, why this pressure to force the bill through without consideration?

Mr. PIERCE. The power of Congress in a great many things is unlimited. If we are going into the field of future uncertainty we could apply that rule in almost any case.

Mr. MADDOX. Let me ask you a question?

Mr. PIERCE. Certainly.

Mr. MADDOX. Have you read and digested that report?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Mr. MADDOX. When?

Mr. PIERCE. I got it last night.

Mr. MADDOX. The report?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Mr. MADDOX. Where did you get it last night?

Mr. PIERCE. I saw it.

Mr. MADDOX. Where?

Mr. PIERCE. That does not matter. I saw it and read it and know what is in it.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman is better prepared than I am. I did not see it and did not know where to get it, and I apprehend that no other man on this side of the House knew where to get it except in the usual way—that is, after it is printed and filed in the document room out here. I got it as soon as I could through the regular channel and I have not been able to give it a careful examination. I asked on yesterday morning that this matter might be postponed until Friday, so that we could have at least one day to examine into this business and see whether it was a proper bill or not. I do not propose to stand here and vote blindly for any proposition in this House. How can I be expected to favor anything unless I know something about it. I do not intend to do it. Upon a careful examination of this bill, if I had time to examine and analyze it as I have a right to do, I might be as heartily in favor of it as any man on the committee, but there is no excuse for this haste and this rushing the matter through.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What is the occasion for this rush?

Mr. MADDOX. Nobody has answered that question. I do not know what it means. I suppose we will meet next Monday and adjourn over for two or three days, but this matter must be attended to at once, it seems, or not at all. Now, as I said before, we have had a bill from the Senate to-day that incorporates this very project. What are we going to do about that? That will have to be considered by this House, and when that proposition comes up we probably all of us will have had time to study this matter and to offer such amendments as we may think necessary to make it a perfect bill. I see no necessity of rushing this thing through until we fully understand it.

Now, if there is any gentleman on this side of the House who desires to say anything upon this bill, I will yield him time if he will make himself known. One of my colleagues on this side laughs. I do not understand it. This may be all right, gentlemen; but mark you, you will hear from it if it is not all right.

Mr. KLEBERG. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MADDOX. Certainly.

Mr. KLEBERG. I am against the bill, as well as the gentleman from Georgia. I think it is perfectly true that we have not had time to consider it. I believe that this is a proposition to add another useless bureau to the public service that is not necessary at this time. But I want to suggest to the gentleman that if he will endeavor to get a record vote upon this question, I will assist him in getting it.

Mr. MADDOX. I do not know whether we will get a record vote or not, but we will have it certainly if I can get it. I promise the gentleman that.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time, and will yield later to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia reserves the balance of his time.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

CENSUS BUREAU.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. KLUTTZ rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KLUTTZ] is recognized, being a member of the committee.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] says he will take ten minutes now.

Mr. KLUTTZ. I prefer to occupy the time now. The gentleman can follow me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KLUTTZ], who desires to proceed.

Mr. KLUTTZ. As a minority member of the Committee on the Census, I want to say that after the fullest investigation the bill before the House met the entire approval of all the committee, and of every Democrat and every Republican upon it. We gave to the matter such investigation as we could and as we thought the importance of the subject demanded. We had before us a number of gentlemen, including the Director of the Census and the Civil Service Commissioners, and we have endeavored to carry out the instructions of the House and to report at the earliest possible moment a bill in accordance with those instructions.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] complains that there is a rush here—that there is undue haste. I deny it, Mr. Chairman. We acted under instructions from the House, and as I understand legislative proprieties upon such occasions, it is the duty of a committee at the earliest possible moment to report back to the House when a matter is recommitted to it under instructions. We did that at the earliest moment, and I deny that there has been any undue haste or any rush in the consideration of this matter. The committee is acting under the almost unanimous vote of the House. I believe the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] was almost alone in voting in the negative upon the question of consideration.

So that if there is undue rush here, if there is haste here, it is not the fault of the chairman of the committee, it is not the fault of the Committee on the Census, but it is the fault of the House, and it is the House which the gentleman from Georgia should upbraid, and not the Committee on the Census. The gentleman says he has not had time to consider this matter, and he was asked properly by the gentleman from Tennessee, when he complained that he did not know what this bill proposed, if the bill itself does not contain in detail specifically the executive force that it is proposed shall constitute this bureau.

Why, the bill on the very face of it, and as explained by the chairman of the committee, gives the name, the office, and the pay of every official that is proposed to be retained, excepting only the charwomen and laborers, the number and the pay of whom must necessarily be left in the discretion of the Director.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KLUTTZ. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I notice section 5 of this bill is as follows:

That all employees of the Twelfth Census Office at the date of the passage of this act above the grade of skilled laborer shall be, and they are hereby, placed under the provisions of the civil-service act approved January 16, 1883.

Now, was the question before your committee as to the number of employees above the grade of skilled laborers and the number below that grade?

Mr. KLUTTZ. I will answer the gentleman that the number above that grade is about 2,000. I do not recollect the number below.

Mr. BURLESON. Two hundred.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am informed that the number below is 200.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that there are 200 in the class below skilled laborers.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman another question, and that is, if not all at least a majority of those who are employed as stenographers and typewriters in the Census Office are put down as laborers, and, if that is the fact, if the provisions of the civil-service law would not be emasculated by the passage of this bill as it reads now in section 5?

Mr. KLUTTZ. I think not, sir.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Now, I will give my experience. I recommended the appointment of a lady as a stenographer in that office.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee pardon me——

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee (continuing). And she was appointed. I observed in the notice of her appointment that she was put down as a laborer.

Mr. BURLESON. I am informed that she is classed as a clerk.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. She is classed in the appointment as a laborer; and that is what I desire information upon, if the gentleman from North Carolina can give it, and if not, I would call upon the gentleman from Illinois at the proper time.

Mr. HAY. I think I can give the gentleman the information he seeks. Has she stood an examination since she was appointed?

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. I do not know whether she has or not. She is not in the employ of the Census Bureau now, but she was not discharged. I want to support this bill, but I want to support it understandingly, and to know whether the provisions of the civil-service law apply to the persons now employed there?

Mr. HAY. I want to say to the gentleman that a great many who were appointed were appointed temporarily.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. HAY. They were appointed on trial and afterwards had to stand an examination, and upon passing their examination they were then put on as clerks.

Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee. Why can not we get that information before the House?

Mr. HAY. We have now gotten it before the House. A great many were originally put in as laborers who would be included under this act.

Mr. KLUTTZ. I have given such information as I can.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him this question? Under section 5, what persons enumerated under section 4 will be put under the terms of the civil-service law? Would it extend to the Director and statisticians?

Mr. KLUTTZ. No, sir; I do not understand that it applies to the executive force.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Do you understand from this provision that the supervisors and enumerators in the next census are to be under the civil service?

Mr. KLUTTZ. I do not know that I could answer that question definitely in advance. I take it, however, they would be under this section. Having yielded to questions by every gentleman, since I am sure there is no desire on the part of this committee to shirk discussion or to unduly rush this measure, I shall submit only a few remarks further, Mr. Chairman.

Now, I have endeavored to show that there is no undue haste on the part of the committee, but that with due consideration and due regard to the rules of the House this matter is now before the committee not as a privileged question, but by the command of the House itself.

As to the propriety and advisability of establishing a permanent census bureau, I take issue with the gentleman from Georgia. The gentleman himself says that his opposition to it rests not upon consideration of the subject, but because he knows nothing about it; and I take it that objections that rest not upon intelligent knowledge, but upon admitted ignorance of the subject, ought not to have much weight with this intelligent House.

As to the propriety of a permanent bureau of the census, we have printed for the House the unanimous consensus of opinion of statistical and scientific men, connected not only with the Census Bureau, but almost every other department at Washington, and I put their opinion and the weight of their opinion against the unsupported opinion of the gentleman from Georgia. Furthermore, I quote from the opinion of the President of the United States, who on page 42 in his message to this Congress, said:

For the sake of good administration, sound economy, and the advancement of science, the Census Office as now constituted should be made a permanent Government bureau. This would insure better, cheaper, and more satisfactory work in the interest not only of our business, but our statistical, economical, and social science.

I quote also from the last report of the Secretary of the Interior, on page 80, where he says:

The great accuracy and care required in securing and handling statistical data of all kinds can be obtained only through the medium of experienced and competent persons. The present system of organizing a census office every ten years does not permit of the keeping together of skilled statisticians, experts, and trained clerks, or of keeping open channels of statistical information.

The remedy which naturally suggests itself is the establishment of a permanent census bureau with a limited force which could be increased as the work of preparing for a new census is entered upon or diminished after the census is taken. The establishment of the census as a permanent bureau would undoubtedly be in the interest not only of economy and statistical science, but would result in more efficient work generally and permit of the early publication of the statistical data compiled.

So we cite not only the opinion of almost every statistical and scientific expert in Washington, but the opinion of the President of the United States, and of the Secretary of the Interior, in whose Department this Bureau is at present located. I take it that the House will give some weight at least to the opinions of the President and the Secretary of the Interior, and of these scientific men in nearly all of the departments of the Government. There is so little reason for any opposition to making this Bureau permanent that I shall devote no more attention to it.

The gentleman from Georgia lugs into this discussion the Democratic platform of 1900. I was as earnest a supporter of that platform as was the gentleman from Georgia. I acknowledge its force in all matters legitimately in the domain of politics, but I deny that this is a political question, or that any considerations of politics ought to enter into it. [Applause.] It is a question of business. It is a question of the best interests of this Government and of the people of this Government, and especially of the great agricultural and commercial classes, and gentlemen are hard put to it for argument when they must flaunt the Democratic platform over this side of the House in enforcing their arguments against the adoption of this beneficial measure.

I believe, as suggested by the gentleman from Virginia, that the adoption of the bill now before the House will be carrying out the very spirit and the very letter of the plank in the platform read by the gentleman from Georgia, because it is reducing the expenses of the Government, because it is lopping off officers no longer necessary to the service, and because it is reducing salaries by putting this great Bureau of the Government upon a solid and substantial business basis. I trust there is no one on this side of the House who can be moved by any such appeal as that, and I take it that the appeal was only made in the absence of a better ground for argument and of a better reason for opposition to the bill.

The gentleman furthermore, on the question of politics, undertakes to conjure somewhere out of the future a terrible bugbear, a horrible nightmare, which he sees in his distorted vision, and to warn Democrats, especially Southern Democrats, that there is something concealed in this bill, some jack-in-the-box, which at some future time is to be raised, as Saul raised the witch of Endor, to affright the Democrats in the South, and which he says is to be used contrary to their interest.

The gentleman has a keen supernatural vision, indeed, if he can find anything of that sort concealed in the language, the intent, or purpose of this bill, and I know him too well, I esteem him too highly, to believe that he intended by that any imputation on the minority Democratic members of this committee. I need not assure the gentleman that the intelligent Democrats, who constitute the minority of this committee, would be as alert to scent anything of that kind in the air as the gentleman from Georgia himself.

Congress may or may not, depending on its political majority in the next House—and I believe it is going to be Democratic [applause on the Democratic side], God grant that it may be so—Congress may or may not make any amendment to any bill passed by this or any succeeding Congress that it sees fit. This Congress has no power to bind any succeeding Congress and say what it shall do and what it shall not do, and I say in advance that we may give credit to succeeding Congresses for the exercise of as good faith as we may claim for ourselves.

Gentlemen complain that the statistics of cotton are taken by this Census Bureau, and that some terrible wrong has been or may thereby be done. Why, sir, there has never been for the Southern cotton planter—and I represent in part at least a cotton-growing constituency—anything done by this Government so valuable in its results, anything worth so many million dollars to the Southern cotton planter, as the accurate cotton statistics which have been taken by the Census Bureau. We know that the statistics taken heretofore by the Department of Agriculture—taken honestly, taken as well as they could possibly be taken under the system in vogue and with the agencies at the command of that Department—have been of little value.

Little weight has been given to them, and the speculators, as somebody has called them, in New York, New Orleans, Savannah, Liverpool, and the other great cotton marts have every year intentionally overrated the cotton crop by millions of bales, and upon such overestimated and false figures they have fixed the price of cotton in the hands of the cotton planter, and he has been compelled to sell at the price thus fictitiously fixed. Under the arrangements of the Census Bureau for taking these statistics the crop for the last year was correctly estimated, and the lie was directly given to the false estimate which had been put out by these men in the cotton markets of the world, who are interested in depressing the price of cotton. I say that so far from the taking of these cotton statistics being an objection, the provisions in that respect are one of the very best features of the bill. I may also add that the taking of these cotton statistics was largely at the instance of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], himself one of the largest cotton planters of his State.

The gentleman says, further, that we ought not act now because the Senate has passed a bill providing for the new department of commerce, under which the work heretofore performed by this Bureau is to be put. I am glad if that department is to be created; I am glad that the Senate has voted to establish it. I shall support, and I believe this side of the House will support, that bill when it comes here. But the fact that the Senate has passed such a bill, and that such a department is to be created, should not have any weight in the discussion of the bill now before the committee; because the Census Bureau is now a Bureau of the Interior Department, and if the department of commerce should be created under the Senate bill, this Bureau will simply be transferred to that department; it will make no difference, so far as the necessary provisions and regulations of the Census Bureau are concerned, under which of these departments the work may be done.

I do not care under which Department this business may be placed. When that question comes up I shall vote as I think the best interests of the public service demand, but the proposed creation of a department of commerce is no reason why this bill should be delayed or why we should hesitate in passing it, for, I repeat, the regulations which we adopt in reference to the taking of the census will be as necessary under the department of commerce as under the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BURKETT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question? From a statistical standpoint, in what particular is this bill an improvement over the census bill under which the Twelfth Census was taken?

Mr. KLUTTZ. If the gentleman will pardon me, I did not hear his question.

Mr. BURKETT. I asked in what particular, from a statistical point of view, this census bill now presented is better than the ordinary census bill, such as the act of March 3, 1899, under which the Twelfth Census was taken?

Mr. KLUTTZ. I will answer the gentleman frankly by saying that as to the method of taking the census, the appointment of enumerators and other subordinates, etc., we have made no change, because we thought it not wise to do so. By the time the next census will be taken entirely new and improved methods may be devised, and we have thought it well not to adopt any provisions which might hamper the Bureau in that respect.

Mr. BURKETT. But my question is, what improvement have you made in this bill as to the mode of taking the census over the mode heretofore adopted?

Mr. KLUTTZ. For one thing, we propose to establish a permanent bureau, and we reduce very greatly the expenses of that bureau. We have cut down the executive force. We propose to put the Bureau under civil-service rules, and there are some amendments as to the taking of statistics of manufacturing industries every five years instead of every ten years. If the gentleman will read the bill, and read it candidly, he will find that it contains a great many improvements as compared with any census law that we have ever had before.

Mr. BURKETT. The gentleman does not yet comprehend my question.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Possibly not.

Mr. BURKETT. If you propose to provide a permanent census bureau, certainly the same law which has heretofore made provision for a temporary census bureau would not be sufficient. Another point: Have you consolidated anywhere these statistics? Have you drawn the different branches of this work closer together? Have you centralized them at all? In what respect—I am not speaking of the reduction of force—in what respect, from a statistical point of view, will the statistics taken by your permanent census bureau be better, more instructive, more concentrated, than those taken under the previous law?

Mr. KLUTTZ. We have provided statistics of births and deaths; we have provided for manufacturing statistics every five years; we have provided to some extent the method to be followed hereafter in taking the census. We have made it possible to do what the gentleman wants to have done. By establishing a permanent census bureau we propose to make it possible by legislation hereafter, in the discretion of Congress, to centralize, if I may use the word, and intelligently consolidate the taking of statistics of all the departments of the Government—a thing which has not been done and could never be done under a merely temporary census force.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In what respect does this bill differ, and wherein is there a reduction of public expenditures, from the bill which provides for taking the census every ten years?

Mr. KLUTTZ. With respect to the point to which I have just been referring we retain the services of a sufficient number of experts, who are supposed to make such recommendations as they may think necessary and to afford a nucleus for the army of some 70,000 or 100,000 persons who are necessary to take the coming census. Everything that could be done has been done for the inauguration of this great work to make that census as correct as it can possibly be made under our system of government, and we have reduced the expenses of the Bureau $114,000 per annum.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman if the report of the various industries of the country, cotton, corn, and other products, are given in detail?

Mr. KLUTTZ. They are; and I will state to the gentlemen that cotton is given specially in detail.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the report differ, then, in any way from the provisions of the existing law, or from the old reports which were furnished under that law?

Mr. KLUTTZ. The provisions of the law are substantially the same. All of these reports are given in detail, and all of the agricultural products of the country will be found under their separate heads. Of course the practicability of gaining this information by writing to a man here or there throughout the country must be understood by anybody who gives the matter consideration as an impossibility. No man can give this information, which can be only gathered by specialists, as is proposed in this bill. The bill itself provides for furnishing the statistics in every department of commerce, every department of business throughout the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I impugn no man's motives who desires to oppose this bill. That is a personal matter with himself. He may have reasons for it that I can not understand. But, in my judgment, this is the nearest approach to a measure which will benefit the commercial and the agricultural classes throughout the country that has been devised in years. We may well differ upon it, but we ought to consider it in the light of the best interests of all of our people.

Now, after having occupied the attention of the committee for this brief while, I shall reserve the remainder of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. BURLESON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, with his consent, before he takes his seat.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Certainly.

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman pleases, I would like to inquire what he thinks of the report of Mr. Wright on this question. He says:

"No man, I do not care how great he is, how great a statistician or how great an administrator, can take a census creditably to himself or to the Federal Government under the present system. It can not be done. Our Regular Army is small, but it is the skeleton of a great organization. It should be so with the Census Office. The constant bringing in of raw men for statistical work does more damage to statistical accuracy and to the science of statistics than any one element." He argued in favor of a biennial census of industries. As to the bill prepared by Mr. Porter, his chief objection to it was that "it makes a law for the taking of the Twelfth Census. I think there is too much detail in it to be enacted several years in advance."

Mr. KLUTTZ. That is an additional strong argument for the passage of this bill.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of discussing this bill, but avail myself of this opportunity to present to the members of this House, and through them to the country, a petition signed by twelve hundred of the people in the city which I represent, the city of Worcester. Most of these petitioners are heads of corporations, companies, and individuals engaged in manufacturing and commerce, and also professional men. There is not the name of an agriculturist or a mechanic signed to this petition.

The city of Worcester, consisting of 120,000 inhabitants, has within its borders, I believe, a greater diversity of manufacturing and industrial interests than any other city of the same size in this country, and more active capital engaged and more mechanics employed at remunerative and living wages. And, as I say, I wish to present to this House, and through it to the country, the opinion of these people who have been greater beneficiaries of the Dingley tariff bill than any other set of men, or as much as any other set of men, in this country. The petition is as follows:

The undersigned business men of Worcester, Mass., represent that a reciprocal trade agreement with the Dominion of Canada, prepared on a basis of equivalent concessions, would be of great benefit to the business interests of the United States, and particularly of Massachusetts and New England, and they respectfully solicit your active influence to the end that such a treaty may be negotiated and ratified.

Coming with that petition, Mr. Chairman, is a letter which I wish to read, that it may become a part of my remarks. This comes from the Boston Chamber of Commerce, and is as follows:

BOSTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Boston, Mass., January 20, 1902.

Hon. JOHN R. THAYER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to lay before you, by direction of the committee on reciprocity of this chamber, the accompanying petition from the business men of Worcester, setting forth the importance of closer trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and soliciting your influence to the end that a reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada be negotiated and ratified.

I respectfully invite your attention to the following facts:

(1) That this petitition was prepared and circulated under the auspices of the Worcester Board of Trade, and that it, therefore, represents not only the sentiments of the individual signers, but the opinion of the business community as expressed by its representative business organization.

(2) That no attempt has been made to secure a petition large in point of numbers; that the petition, so far as we have been able to control the matter, bears the names of none but business men in active life and of standing and influence in the community; hence as regards this class, the petitions are both large and representative.

(3) That the desires of the business men of Massachusetts for closer trade relations between the two countries are based upon the belief, (a) that our trade with Canada could be materially increased, to the benefit of both countries, were a freer interchange of commodities permitted, and (b) that the large trade we now possess, and which may be at any time seriously injured, would thereby be permanently secured, to the benefit of all classes of producers.

(4) That this and similar petitions represent the earnest desires of the vast majority of the merchants and manufacturers of our Commonwealth is indicated by the unanimity of sentiment shown in every city into which they have been carried. The city of Worcester is a typical illustration. The petitions from that city contain the signatures of 1,200 of the largest and most important business houses and corporations of that city, while less than a dozen persons to whom application was made refused to sign them.

(5) That resolutions have been adopted by over 100 business organizations throughout the United States, urging early action upon this important question. I append a partial list of the organizations that have taken this action.

For the prayer, voiced by these petitions, we earnestly solicit your favorable consideration.

Very respectfully, G. PRESTON, Secretary.

This may be very dry and uninteresting to some members of this House, but those who are interested in New England and the manufacturing interests in the North will be glad to pay attention and note the change of opinion of those most interested in the provisions of the present tariff laws brought about by the changed conditions since the Dingley tariff law was enacted.

It is signed first by Philip J. O'Connell, mayor of the city.

The second name is Philip W. Moen, vice-president of the American Steel and Wire Company. Mr. Moen's name is known throughout New England and the world. His father was one of the progenitors of the old Washburn and Moen Wire Company, which, up to three years ago, employed some 4,000 people. Now, that company, like many smaller companies and corporations, has been absorbed by the American Steel and Wire Company. Among the other signers are:

Sprague, president Worcester County Mechanics' Savings Bank.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have called this to the attention of the House because I believe it is one of the most important subjects that will come before this Congress, if it ever gets here, which I very much doubt in view of the expressed opinion of many of the leaders on the other side of the House. There is a demand all over the country for greater and freer trade relations with other countries, especially with Canada, bordering immediately upon us at the north. And I want to tell my friends on the other side of the House that unless you give some attention to the demands for a change in schedules of the Dingley tariff, and some attention to the demands that are coming up all over this country for freer trade and for reciprocity, when the people come to speak in 1904 they will delegate the power of government to a party that will attend to these matters. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. TALBERT. I would ask the gentleman to please withdraw that motion. I would like to submit some remarks.

Mr. HOPKINS. Are your remarks on the subject of the bill?

Mr. TALBERT. Not exactly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will be entirely frank with my friend. Now, I have had an application from this side of the House, from a warm personal friend of mine, who desired to make an hour's speech on some subject. I said to him that I did not think it would be fair to the members of the House to do that, and I will appeal to my friend from South Carolina not to take up the time.

Mr. TALBERT. All right.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will withdraw my motion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, I have not had a great deal of time to consider the bill that is now before the House, for it has only been available this morning, but as I have listened to the chairman's remarks in reference to it I have been convinced that from a monetary standpoint, if no other, the House did well in recommitting with instructions the bill of a few days ago, for, as I take the figures of the gentleman from Illinois, this makes a saving to the Government each year of $115,000, beginning this coming July, or a total of $920,000 up to 1910. In short, in compliance with the demands of the House a few days ago, this committee has pared the bill down to that extent. There is that much saving in executive force alone.

The committee have eliminated a good many officers and decreased a good many salaries. I want to say, however, that this bill does not suit me exactly. I apprehend that it would not be possible for somebody else to draw a bill that would exactly suit me any more than it would be for me to draw up a bill that would exactly suit somebody else. I believe that what this House and the country wants is that the statistics of this Government should emanate from some one particular place; that there should be gathered under one head a great bureau of statistics, all the statistics of the Government, where you or I or anybody else could go and get that sort of information upon any particular subject. I believe that this ought to be worked out.

I believe that if this committee had taken more time than they have taken that they could have evolved some system by which the great number of statistical bureaus of the various departments could in a measure have been consolidated. For example, the Bureau of Statistics, under Mr. Austin, and the Bureau of Labor, and the Statistical Bureau over in the Agricultural Department, and various others have been grinding out statistics. Now, there has not been one of these offices given consideration; not a single one of these bureaus has been brought into the statistical department provided for in this bill. Instead of less, we will have more places doling out statistics.

The gentleman says we will start out with this bureau and eventually we will bring all these other departments under the Census Bureau. But, sir, there will never, never be so good a time to do that thing as at the present time; never will there be the great pressure to pass a bill consolidating and coordinating all the statistics of this Government into one bureau that there is to-day. When we come in six weeks after this bill is passed and say to the Bureau of Statistics, "We want to put you under the Census Bureau," there is nothing to push that side; but, on the other hand, to retain its identity there will be the friends and the personnel of that particular Bureau. They may not want to be swallowed up by the Census Bureau. There is nothing to-day to keep us from doing it. Mark my words, if this bill goes through it will simply create another great bureau of the Government, growing greater and more expensive all the while. It will never grow less, and it will simply mean another place grinding out statistics.

This bill can be traced back through genealogy to about 1850. It is practically a copy of a bill as old as 1850. All the census bills from that time vary in make-up but very little. Several years ago Mr. Carroll D. Wright, I think it was, formulated a bill for a permanent census. The bill now being considered is almost an identical copy, in so far as it goes, of the wording of Mr. Wright's bill.

I asked the chairman of this committee during his remarks a few moments ago whether or not the committee had called in any of the great statisticians before them when they were having hearings. He took exception to the proposition. I asked for information, because I think this House has the right to know whether this committee had availed themselves of the experience of Mr. Wright, a man who has devoted half a century, almost, in studying statistics and whose advice in formulating such a bill should be valuable. I wanted to know whether they had called in Mr. Austin, Mr. Wright, or Mr. Wilcox, or any one of a dozen other men that they might have called in and asked their advice in preparing this bill. His answer was that the committee had not.

Therefore we are led to believe that this bill is copied from that other bill that I have just mentioned, with just enough things in it to appeal here to individuals and to make it popular in this House. Now, there are a few things that Mr. Wright had in his bill a few years ago that are not in this bill.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman from Nebraska allow an interruption?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman alluded to Mr. Wilcox and Mr. Wright. Did not they both recommend a permanent census bureau along the line of this bill to-day?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes, they both recommended a permanent census bureau, but not along the lines upon which this bill is made.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the gentleman from Nebraska allow me a question?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the gentleman recognize the fact that the Select Committee on the Census was at work under specific instructions adopted by the House in accordance with the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska himself, which absolutely restricted them from considering the question of consolidation of bureaus?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. In other words, your bill follows the lines of the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska and under his instructions?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. I do realize that the committee was supposed to be working under instructions. Those instructions, however, were that they should prepare and introduce a detailed plan for a Census Bureau. It did not say just what plan it should follow, nor anything of that sort. For example, you might have provided that they should take statistics of agriculture every three, four, or five years, and you might have provided in your bill that in those States where they took statistics the Government could avail themselves of those statistics.

There are a good many such things in Mr. Wright's bill and which could have been placed in this bill. In the bill that Mr. Wright prepared there was also this sort of a clause, that no investigation should be undertaken by the Census Bureau that was not especially authorized by law. Then it authorized the Director of the Census, whenever he thought proper, to call for information from other departments. There are a good many things along that line that this bill might have contained. In further response to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RUSSELL] it does not occur to me that they were prohibited from evolving a plan whereby all the statistics of the Government could be brought into one great bureau.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, one further suggestion. The wording of the instructions adopted by the House, on the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska, was that "the committee should prepare and report back as a substitute therefor a bill providing for a detailed organization of a permanent census bureau." Now, by what logic the gentleman can construe that as instructions to the committee, or as a permission to the committee, to report a bill which would consolidate with the permanent census bureau any other bureau of the Government, I do not understand.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not understand that there was any limit in that motion as to what should go into this bureau nor what should not. The committee has put in agriculture; they have put in the deaf and dumb and various other things. They could as well have put in many other things, as I have stated.

Mr. RUSSELL. The committee has put in nothing that has not pertained to the census bureau as it has existed during the past census.

Mr. BURKETT. That is exactly the point I am making.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Do I understand the gentleman from Nebraska to be in favor of consolidating the Bureau of Statistics, the Bureau of Statistics of Labor, agricultural statistics, and the Geological Survey with this Census Bureau?

Mr. BURKETT. I did not say so; no, sir.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman does not say that he is in favor of it.

Mr. BURKETT. No.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Then why does the gentleman talk of it in criticising this bill if he does not want them put in?

Mr. BURKETT. If the gentleman from Maine will pardon me, I will make myself plain.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I hope so. I thought the gentleman was arguing that these bureaus ought to be consolidated. It impressed me as a good argument; but now I understand the gentleman does not want them consolidated.

Mr. BURKETT. I will try to make it plain, at least to myself. I take the position that it is not possible for any two or three men, in one or two days, to determine what bureaus of the Government ought to be consolidated. I take the position, and I hope the gentleman from Maine does, that if possible we ought to get all the statistics under one head. I do not want summarily to go up and take the Bureau of Statistics and chuck it into the Census Department, or the Bureau of Labor and chuck it into the Census Department, just in form as those bureaus are now organized. I maintain that the entire statistical system of the Government should be rehabilitated, reorganized, and readjusted into a completed, harmonious whole.

I believe that if we could establish a great clearing house for all and every kind of statistics, to which they would all go and from there come, that it would be what the people want and need. But, as I said in the beginning, I do not know that in the bill reported by this committee, amid the hurry and anxiety, you could go into such details and make such a consolidation.

My judgment is that if we had a commission appointed of three statisticians outside of Government employ—for instance, the professor of statistics from Cornell University, and acting with him eminent statisticians from other points, that they might meet together and plan some sort of a bureau which would consolidate and coordinate all the statistics of the Government. They should be men outside of Government employ, that they would be unmoved by any personal pride of their own particular bureau, and should report to Congress a completed and detailed plan of a bureau that would take in every statistical branch of Government service. The exhaustive study of the subject necessary to do this is not possible for this committee. As I said in the beginning, I do not know that this committee in the time allowed them could have drawn a bill more nearly in accordance with the resolution of the House.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not understand the gentleman to propose that we abdicate our powers in deference to these professors of whom he speaks. We do not want to assume or concede that we can not do this work.

Mr. BURKETT. Oh, no.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Their advice might be good.

Mr. BURKETT. Such men as I speak of have made a life study of statistics, abroad and at home. They would know about similar bureaus of every other nation, and they could certainly formulate a better statistical bureau for us than gentlemen not having knowledge of that kind. This bill will probably pass as it is. It contains some popular parts. It is a very great improvement over the former bill of a few days ago. It saves hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Government and contains much in detail for the organization of the bureau that is desirable. But I am of the opinion that our action is hasty; that the matter of creating a great governmental bureau is of such vast importance that much care and attention should be given to every detail.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I know the crushing weight of responsibility resting upon the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT]. I appreciate that the whole country looks to him to rescue it from the raid which has been inaugurated against the Treasury through the instrumentality of this bill reported by the Census Committee. I appreciate that he has grown bald and saffron-hued pining for economy and profoundly studying modern methods of gathering statistical data for census purposes. But, Mr. Chairman, unfortunately for the gentleman, he stands here in opposition to this measure, declaring he is for a permanent census, yet makes no suggestion for its improvement. Notwithstanding his profound study of this question, he directly clashes with every man who has given continuous and close study to this question during the past three decades.

The learned and able gentleman who presides over the Department of Labor, and who was at one time temporarily at the head of the Eleventh Census, speaking from his experience, after he had gone through the siege of accumulating data and properly treating it after its accumulation and submitting the result to the country, gave his deliberate judgment before a Senate committee that it would be economy for the Government to adopt some such measure as we now offer.

The same character of testimony was given by Mr. Robert P. Porter, the original superintendent of the Eleventh Census, and also by Gen. Francis A. Walker, the able superintendent of the Ninth and Tenth Censuses, who spoke after twenty years of experience as a student of statistics. Both gentlemen have urged measures drawn along the very lines suggested by the committee in this bill. They assure us it will very materially enhance the value of the statistics furnished and at less cost to the General Government. And yet, Mr. Chairman, the sage of Nebraska tells us that this measure must not be passed because it is not an economical measure. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that in the limited time the gentleman has been allowed he is able to overturn all the experience of Mr. Carroll D. Wright, of Mr. Robert P. Porter, and of Gen. Francis A. Walker, who have testified from their long experience in advocacy of this measure.

The gentleman says that the bill now under discussion has been formulated along the lines suggested by Mr. Wright. What amendment does he offer to perfect this bill? Absolutely none! Is it possible, Mr. Chairman, that he is indulging in cheap statesmanship? Is it possible that all this is merely an appeal to "buncombe" in Nebraska along the economical route? If so, I appeal to you on both sides, will you take the unsupported statement of the gentleman from Nebraska, or are you to take the statements of these expert statisticians, who have had years of experience and who speak from such experience. I believe you will accept the testimony of Messrs. Walker, Porter, and Wright and the other scientific gentlemen who have given special study to this question and who have spoken with a single purpose—to better the public service.

Now, one word in answer to a suggestion made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX], who is also a stickler for economy. He says he is opposed to this measure, or intimates that he is opposed to it, because it embodies a provision for the gathering of data in reference to the production of cotton. I am responsible, Mr. Chairman, for that provision in the bill. It is a fact well known to every producer of cotton that for years it has been contended that the price of this great staple has been depressed because of repeated statements made by stock manipulators that the cotton crop was largely in excess of what it really was.

It has ever been a fruitful means of depressing the value of cotton for the bulls and bears of the New York Cotton Exchange or the New Orleans Cotton Exchange to contend that the cotton crop was from one million to a million and a half bales in excess of what it really was. Under the provisions of this bill, through the instrumentality of the Census Bureau, careful and accurate statistics as to the amount of cotton produced are to be gathered, which, in my deliberate judgment, will save annually the cotton producers of the South a hundred times the cost of this Census Bureau for the next ten years.

This is the initial step for the erection of a scientific bureau for gathering statistical information. Ultimately duplication of statistics will be avoided, and this can only come by passing this measure as it is presented.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, in my judgment there has not been offered here a substantial reason why this bill should not pass. In my view, if it should pass, the opinions expressed by Mr. Wright, Mr. Porter, General Walker, and also the present able and efficient Director of the Census will be confirmed, and this will prove an economical measure and in thorough accord with the Democratic platform declarations read by my distinguished friend from Georgia. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I now ask that the bill be read by sections, for debate and amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and read section 5:

SEC. 5. That all employees of the Twelfth Census Office, at the date of the passage of this act, above the grade of skilled laborer shall be, and they are hereby, placed under the provisions of the civil-service act approved January 16, 1883, and the amendments thereto and the rules established thereunder; and all new appointments in the Census Office hereby created shall be made in accordance with the requirements of the civil-service act above referred to.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 13, page 2, after the word "thousand," the word "five" instead of "one;" so as to read "$2,500" instead of "$2,100."

The amendment of Mr. LANDIS was considered, and agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and read section 5, as follows:

SEC. 5. That all employees of the Twelfth Census Office, at the date of the passage of this act, above the grade of skilled laborer shall be, and they are hereby, placed under the provisions of the civil-service act approved January 16, 1883, and the amendments thereto and the rules established thereunder; and all new appointments in the Census Office hereby created shall be made in accordance with the requirements of the civil-service act above referred to.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out section 5 and substitute instead thereof the following:

"All new appointments in the Census Office hereby created shall be made in accordance with the requirements of the civil-service act approved January 16, 1883, and the President is authorized at his discretion to classify the employees in the Census Office according to the provisions of that act."

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the temper of the House on this subject was so clearly shown when this bill was last under consideration that I know how little likely the amendment I have offered is to pass; but I think that it should be adopted and should take the place of the pending section of the bill. My amendment in effect provides that the President shall have power, whenever he pleases, to cover the existing force into the classified service and that all new appointments shall be made according to provisions of the civil-service law. I presume that the President would wait until the force was reduced to its permanent size before acting. This bill, on the contrary, provides that all clerks in the service at the date of its passage shall at once be classified and eligible for transfer, and when the force is reduced, as the Director says it will be in a year, by about a thousand, then that thousand will be a part of the civil service and eligible to transfer.

Now, the only question is this: Should the 1,000 clerks who are going to be dropped in the next year be transferable to the other departments in the place of men who are on the eligible list, who otherwise could go there? Those men who are on the eligible list got there without any favoritism. They have come from every part of the country, just as these do, but they got there by a competitive examination, and no matter what the quality of that examination was, there is one fact about them which everyone will admit, that they got there, not by political favoritism or patronage, but simply by their merit. Their examinations were open to the whole country. But if these thousand clerks whom we have appointed get there, we all know they get there, not by open competition, but because they are friends of some Congressmen.

In other words, we put our favorites in and we keep out all those from the country who have competed and prevent their getting in. We give preference to our friends, and we keep out those who are not our friends. At the head of that roll are the old soldiers, who are entitled to preference. We keep them out, we let our friends in, and that is the only issue, it seems to me, and the only question for us to decide, and I think that the country will look upon us with some criticism if we say we prefer to keep the men from our districts, who are our friends, to whom we have given places, and keep out the men from our districts who have passed the civil-service examination and who by the law are entitled to go to the top of the roll and be appointed. That is the practical effect of it.

Mr. CANNON and Mr. THAYER rose.

Mr. CANNON. Will my friend allow me?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I will yield first to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Does my friend think, if section 5 was materially amended or stricken out, that this bill would have any greater chance of passage than I have of being translated?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Well, now, Mr. Chairman, I certainly trust that such a reflection as that upon the House of Representatives is not true. That intimates that the force that is going to carry this bill successfully through is the wish on our part to get places for our favorities.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is not that a reflection on my colleague from Illinois, and is he not now prepared to be translated?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I will not enter into that question, but the gentleman from Illinois, whether fit to be translated or not, is a wise and experienced statesman (and no one knows better the temper of this House), and his suggestion certainly confirms my argument, and we ought to be ashamed to pass a law if, as he intimates, the motive of the law is simply to put our favorites in office.

The question is, Are we passing this law for the good of the Census Bureau or for the good of the country, or are we passing it for ourselves? I think we would be properly open to the most severe criticism if that suggestion which the gentleman makes is founded upon facts. Now, I yield to my colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. THAYER. I should like to ask my colleague if it is not a fact that those now in the Census Department passed an examination two years ago equal substantially to the examination required for the other departments, and if they did, and have now had two years' experience which makes them specially efficient for clerical work, and if they were also taken from all over the States, as they were, why should they now be set aside and their places taken by raw recruits coming from substantially the same places?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I should be very glad to answer that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I ask for two minutes in which to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the Civil Service Reform Committee have his time extended for five minutes.

Several MEMBERS. Two minutes.

Mr. MANN. Make it five minutes. You are not likely to hear any too much civil-service law.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Now, the question of my colleague touches two points. First, he says, Did they not pass an examination equal to the classified-service examination? I frankly say I do not believe they did. I do not believe that in strictness or in impartiality the examinations were at all equal to the civil-service examinations. But admitting, for the sake of argument, that they were, the other question comes, Why have they not, having been there two years, become qualified just as much as the others?

The reason for that is this: In the first place, many of them are mere index clerks, punching cards. It does not so fit them for clerical work that we ought to assume they are just as good, though their experience has doubtless been of some advantage to them. But the fatal argument against them is that they have got there not because of a competitive examination, not at all because of any merit, but they got there because the gentleman and myself nominated them to their positions. They got there simply because they are friends of ours, and that is all.

Mr. WACHTER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him this question: Is it a disgrace that these clerks are our friends? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I trust not; but I do think it would be a disgrace if I should keep out for years others and fill with my friends places and positions which these others are entitled to by existing law. That is the point I am making; and it seems to me that the country would say that it was not right to keep men there simply because they are our friends, when the law provides that others in my district and in yours are entitled to the place.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If this bill passes, will not they be there under existing law just as much as if they were there under the civil-service law?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. If this bill passes. But to-day there are men in my district and in your district who are now eligible and who had the right to the place when they stood at the head of the list, and were told that they would have the appointment. There are now coming in applications at the rate of 300 a day, I am told, from all over the country, and there are men standing at the top of the list with a right to expect appointment.

Now, if this bill goes through, for a year not one of these will get a chance of getting into office. It seems to me these men there have some rights, and it seems to me in your district and mine the men who have taken this civil-service examination and who stand at the top of the list will look to us and censure us because we have waved them to one side when we have said, "You shall give way and you shall let these men whom we appointed by favoritism, not by any competitive examination, have the place which you under the present law are entitled to."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Does the gentleman say that these would not be as efficient clerks as those who come through the civil service?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Perhaps just as efficient.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then if they are our friends, and they are under the law, why not let them have it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It should not be simply because they are our friends, but the men who have stood these competitive examinations have been told that if they stood them they should come in.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Have they been told that?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly they have been told that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Who told them?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. The law tells them.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Are there not 10,000 to-day who have taken the examinations and been placed on the eligible list, and the time has worked out, and they are off the eligible list? Who promised them, and who violated every promise, and who spent the money of this Government to carry on these examinations, mere buncombe examinations, all over the country by these purveyors of patronage? [Loud applause.]

Mr. LANDIS. I would like the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LANDIS. I want to say that the gentleman from Ohio, who is usually accurate in figures, has underestimated the number who are waiting. The number is considerably over 20,000.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Then that shows that there are applicants by the thousands that come from all over this country, and who, by existing laws, have been told that those who were at the head of the list shall get the appointments, and this law will tell them no, they shall not have it, because our friends are given the positions.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. PIERCE. Does the gentleman know what percentage of the employees of the Census Office did not stand the examination, who had taken the civil-service examination? Do you not know that the census examination is a much more severe one than the civil-service examination?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. No.

Mr. PIERCE. I have a list here of twenty-odd men employed in the Census Office where they had taken an examination of 80 and 95 in the Civil Service Office, and they did not make but 50 in the census examination. I can give you the names of the men. [Loud applause.]

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I did not yield for a speech.

Mr. PIERCE. I simply wanted to correct you. You should know what you are talking about when you get on the floor. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following bills and resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3199) to amend the code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 16.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 4,000 copies in pamphlet form of the report on the "Iron ore deposits of the Lake Superior region," by C. R. Van Hise, being pages 305 to 434 of Part II of the Twenty-first Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for distribution by the Geological Survey.

S. 258. An act providing additional funds for the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal station at Browns Point, on Commencement Bay, State of Washington, under the direction of the Light-House Board; and

S. 3106. An act granting an increase of pension to Hugh R. Richardson.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 9342. An act to amend the code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901; and

H. R. 10368. An act to provide for the removal of snow and ice from crosswalks and gutters in the city of Washington, D. C.

CENSUS BUREAU.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HANBURY. I object.

Mr. HOPKINS. I object, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman from Massachusetts does not ask for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand whether the gentleman from Illinois objects or not.

Mr. HOPKINS. I objected, Mr. Chairman, because I understood that my friend from Massachusetts had expressed his views, and was content to stand before the House and the country upon his remarks. Of course, if he asks for time I would not object, but I do object when it comes from some other gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again place before the committee the request of the gentleman from Indiana, that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended five minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] is recognized.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection. I objected because I did not understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts himself demanded more time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the question of the disposition of the force in the Census Office was one of the most difficult and troublesome questions the committee had to deal with. There were presented conflicting views of the representatives of both sides of the proposition. No one questions that the clerical force in the Census Office maintains as high a standard of efficiency as the force in any other bureau connected with the Government.

No one questions the fact that if this force was absorbed through the civil-service law into other bureaus of the Government they would carry with them as high a standard of efficiency, as good a grade of work, as any other class of clerks. But the point was made before the committee—the point that was made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] in support of his motion—that if this force was put under civil-service law it would not be just to those applicants who are now standing on the eligible register, waiting for appointments in the public service.

It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that the civil-service system, as it is expressed in the laws in the statute books to-day, is founded on the principle that the individual applicant for office has no rights that are bound to be respected, but the paramount consideration, the overshadowing question, is, What is for the best interests of the public service? That should be the controlling inquiry.

It is true that twenty-five or forty thousand every year take the civil-service examination, and that 75 per cent go upon the eligible list, and that the appointments made from that register during the last six years have not exceeded in all branches of the public service over 7,000 a year; that more than three-quarters remain on the list, and when the period of eligibility expires they carry with them into private life their disappointment.

The force in the Census Office now is about 2,600, and about 400 of that number are skilled laborers. The probability is that within the next four or five weeks 700 or 800 temporary clerks residing chiefly in the city of Washington will be relieved from service, reducing it down to the neighborhood of 2,000 or 1,500. The chairman of the committee says 2,000. Probably 500 will be retained in the permanent bureau.

There will then be a corps of clerks in the census office who have passed a rigid examination, who have vindicated their right to appointment in the public service by from one to three years of efficient and satisfactory service in their respective posts of duty, a force of 1,500 that can be absorbed in less than four months, by the ordinary and established methods of transfer, into the various bureaus in the classified service.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; for a question.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Indiana make any estimate as to the number of employees in the Census Bureau to be covered into the classified service?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The chairman of the committee says about 2,000.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, the Census Office is constantly discharging employees because the work is being finished up.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Those are temporary employees. The chairman of the committee says that about 2,000 will be affected by this bill. About five or six hundred will be kept in the Census Bureau for a year or two.

Mr. MANN. What I want to get at is this: The gentleman says 2,000 will be affected by this bill. The bill says that all the employees are to be retained at the date of the passage of this act. Now, the employees are being constantly discharged, and with the statement which has been made here that nearly all the temporary clerks will be discharged by the 1st of July, there must have been some estimate made as to when this act will take effect. What I want to know is, What learned gentleman in this House has discovered when the Senate will pass the bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a matter the gentleman knows as much about as I do.

Mr. MANN. Then, how can you make these estimates?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MANN. I ask that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] be allowed five minutes longer.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I demand the regular order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the civil-service law, so called, was enacted in 1883. This day and this hour is the first time in the history of the legislation of this country that it ever has been possible to offer an amendment to the law called the civil-service law; and now the proposition comes from the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service Reform. Why? Because during all these nineteen years no committee of this House has ever dared to bring in here a bill that might be amended by striking out the entire concern by the roots. There have been thousands of bills introduced—bills repealing, bills amending, bills extending, bills perfecting what was claimed by its author to be a mere tentative measure—and yet during all these years no bill has ever been brought from that committee either repealing, enlarging, or in any wise affecting the civil-service law, for fear of the wrath of the legislative power of this Government.

Now, for the first time we are encountering a contest between the purveyors of patronage, the bureau of political patronage in this city, and the true test of merit of a real merit system. Here, as against the men who are to be selected through this machine, which no man on earth understands, we have brought under the hostility of the Civil Service Bureau a couple of thousand of men. Who are these men? Men, in the first place, selected from all the Congressional districts of the United States—a thing that the Civil Service Commission never tried to do. Witness, if you please, the fact that the District of Columbia, where some of these gentlemen have lived for twenty years, has a proportion of more than 5 to 1 as against a great many States of this Union. Here they are now, from all the districts of the United States. What are they and what are their claims? They are men and women who have come here first through the test of having been selected by Congressmen.

Mr. Chairman, I am not one of those who believe that a young man or a young woman who comes to me with a letter of recommendation from a Congressman is thereby branded as an improper person. [Applause.] It may be that the gentleman from Massachusetts may make bad selections; I do not deny it or affirm it; he ought to know himself how weak is the power of selection of a Congressman. But I say I do not believe that the body of representative men on this floor have recommended to the Director of the Census a single bad man or a single bad woman. How am I justified in that statement? Out of more than 6,000 clerks only 20—fewer than 25—have ever been discharged during the whole period of their service because of incompetency, inefficiency, or immorality. Show me such an aggregate of moral worth and merit coming from the hands of your patronage bureau. Is that the fact which has brought down upon these capable people the hostility of the commission of patronage?

Again, these people have served for two years under the stress and strain of the development of that great work, and they come to you now, with the recommendation of those superior to them, to show that they have not failed; that their services have been efficient and valuable. What is the proof of it? No bureau of this Government ever did the same work in the time and manner that the Census Bureau has done this work. I defy the Civil Service Commission to show where an equal number of men and women selected under this patronage bureau ever did 50 per cent of the work that has been done under the management of the Director of the Census in the same time. May this fact not be the fact which has brought this Commission in hot haste to punish these people?

They have come here, then, selected because of their localities, selected because of the recommendations of their Congressmen; and they have vindicated the selection of their Congressmen by standing an examination developing that they were fit for the places that they were seeking; and after two years of trial they stand demonstrating the fact that their selection was a proper one in the first place. And these are to be set aside—for what purpose? So that the high school children, the boys that get the highest grade at the hands of a purveyor of patronage somewhere, can come here and oust the men that have earned by their merit a position of consideration at the hands of Congress. [Loud applause on both sides of the House.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Debate on this amendment has been exhausted. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. FLEMING. I ask that the amendment be again read.

Objection was made.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 16, page 3, add: "Provided, That the employees in the Census Office at the date of the passage of this act, made eligible for transfer to other departments or retained in the service, shall be apportioned among the States in proportion to their population."

Mr. BALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the chairman of the committee reporting this bill [Mr. HOPKINS], in answer to my question during the general debate, stated that the purpose of the amendment I have just offered was covered now by the general law. While it was not the intention of these two gentlemen to mislead the House, the effect of their statements, if accepted as true, would be to do so.

Under the general law the Civil Service Commission (with which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has expressed himself as not being particularly in love, and to which I am not specially devoted) will have nothing to do with the employees in the Census Office when this bill becomes a law. The bill is simply a blanket order placing the census employees under the civil service rules as to discharges and transfers.

The Civil Service Commission will have nothing whatever to do with certifying any of the employees for a place in the service of the Government, either as to eligibility or competency, but all the employees of the Census Bureau not discharged before this bill becomes a law will have the preference over all persons who have successfully passed the civil-service examination and who are now eligible for appointment. I concede that the census employees are as capable as any of the employees in other departments.

The Director of the Census, Mr. Merriam, has required efficiency as a prerequisite to employment since he has been in charge of the Bureau. I have no criticism to make of the Director of the Census; he has shown conspicuous executive ability in the discharge of his duty.

I have no desire to charge him with a partisan administration of his office. Upon the whole, he has been as fair to the Democrats as a Democrat would have been to Republicans had positions been reversed. It is true, however, that while Democratic Representatives were accorded two permanent appointments, Republican Representatives received five or six. If this amendment is not adopted, pressure will compel him to let out Democrats and keep in Republicans.

Had the Director been free to act, there would have been no such disproportion as now exists. I believe he would have made appointments regardless of politics. But he could not do so, and if this amendment is not adopted he will not be able to resist influential pressure.

I would be willing to trust him, but I am not willing to trust the Senators and Members who have managed to get an undue proportion of the present employees to allow those retained to be fairly distributed among the appointees made from the several States. There is no question as to the fairness of my proposition.

Under the general law, Texas would be entitled to a greater proportion of appointments, as she is far behind in her quota in the Government, but I will be well satisfied to allow my State only equal chances in proportion to her population with all the other States.

The proposition is fair to the State of Ohio, which has never been able to get fair representation in the Government service [laughter]; fair to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] and his State, neither of which has fair quota of appointments [laughter]; fair to the smallest State and the greatest State; fair to the humblest and to the most influential members of this House, all of whom will be placed upon equality by the adoption of this amendment.

It will give the humblest clerk in the Census Office the same chance that the one backed by the most powerful influence has. You are now passing a bill to make the Census Bureau a permanent one, and the bill should provide for the retention of employees from the several States according to the quota which their population entitles them to. If it does not do so, mark my words, favoritism will come in and work great injustice to the clerks and the States from which they come.

Mr. HAY. I know that the Civil Service Commission appeared before the Census Committee and stated that it was one of their rules and regulations, and that they endeavored to make the apportionment in the classified service throughout the United States, and if these clerks are put under the provisions of that act they come under the rules and regulations provided for by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. BALL of Texas. One further question. Does not the gentleman know that if this bill is passed the Civil Service Commission will have no jurisdiction to certify these clerks, but these clerks will have the right of transfer, if they have got any influence to back them, and they will have the right to remain without reference to the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. HAY. They will have the right to be transferred. That is what this bill is for.

Mr. BALL of Texas. Under this bill he can keep all he wanted from one State, or from such States as he pleases——

Mr. HAY. Of course he will have some discretion, and of course ought to have some discretion about it. The gentleman well knows that nobody can be transferred from one department unless he is called for by the head of some other department, and therefore how could any man be benefited under the amendment proposed by the gentleman?

Mr. BALL of Texas. If the amendment proposed by me is adopted there will be a fair division of those who are retained for Texas and all other States, and if the bill goes through as it is he could discharge every man from Texas and retain any number that he chose from any other State.

Mr. HAY. He could do that anyway under your amendment.

Mr. BALL of Texas. He would not do that under my amendment.

Mr. HAY. He could not be discharged, except for cause, under the civil-service law.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question, and I want to propound the same question to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]. On page 4 of this bill, line 11, at the latter part of the line, I find this language:

To mines, mining, and minerals, and the production and value thereof, including gold in divisions of placer and vein and silver mines, and the number of men employed, the average daily wage, etc.

Mr. HAY. We have not reached that section.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand; but I want to ask this question now.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor and I refuse to yield for the question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understood the gentleman from Virginia had yielded to me for a question.

Mr. HAY. Well, I thought it was a question pertinent to the section we were discussing. I did not know it was about a section which we had not reached.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Since we have taken up this much time about it, you may just as well answer it now.

Mr. HAY. I have no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, I understand this is work which has been done by the Geological Survey for the last twenty years, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia——

Mr. BALL of Texas. I make the point that this is not germane to the pending matter, and I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will not take that matter up now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HAY. I yielded to the gentleman from Mississippi for a question. The gentleman asked a question about a matter which is not now under consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I had concluded that the gentleman from Virginia consented.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to call attention to the fact that there is no provision in this bill by which the proportionate representation of the various States shall be protected. It is stated under the civil-service law that each State shall be protected in its representation. I would call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that according to the report of the Civil-Service Commission, the last report made, Texas was entitled to 102 appointments and received 47. In other words, Texas received about half of the appointments she was entitled to. The District of Columbia, on the other hand, was entitled to 9 appointments and received 56.

Mr. BALL of Texas. That is what I wanted to remedy.

Mr. LANDIS. That is under the civil-service law.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I do not care anything about the civil service. I want to make a law here; and if it will have this effect, what objection does the gentleman have to it?

Mr. LANDIS. I have none.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I am not a civil-service reformer.

Mr. LANDIS. I simply want to submit this observation—that the civil-service law, under which this Commission should operate, specifically provides that these appointments shall be apportioned among the various States and Territories in proportion to their population. This Commission pays no attention to that provision of the law; and my judgment is that if this same provision were incorporated upon this census law, the Civil Service Commission would ignore it in the same way.

Mr. BALL of Texas. But Director Merriam may not.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, Mr. Chairman, just a word and then I desire a vote on this proposition.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has been recognized.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to say that section 5 has been prepared most carefully, and was presented by the gentleman from Virginia after it had been deliberated on by the Democratic members of the committee, and the Republicans as well. Now, if that section is adopted without amendment, it will make these clerks who are put in the classified service eligible to transfer, and the transfer is not limited to these Departments in Washington.

Clerks that come from the State of Texas would be eligible for transfer to the various classified post-offices in Texas, to the Railway Mail Service, to the customs and the Internal-Revenue Service; and it seems to me it is better to vote down all amendments on that section and leave it exactly as it is. No amendment offered in a hurried debate can so fairly and equitably represent the prevailing sentiment of the House and at the same time be just to the Government as this section itself.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I will suggest that debate is exhausted.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. There is pending a motion to strike out the last word.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will withdraw that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas will prevail. If that be a part of the civil-service law, surely no member of the House can object to its being inserted here. It is unfortunately true in some way that that provision apportioning the appointees under civil-service law to the several States has not been properly administered. Whether the fault lies with the members of the Civil Service Commission is quite another question. My information is that it lies with the partisan heads of the different departments of the Government, who, under the law, when they get three eligibles certified to them will turn down the two Democrats and take the Republican as the third man every time, unless some Democrat can trade for "pie."

Mr. Chairman, no member, under the spirit of the law, will take exceptions to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, and when the House refuses to accept that amendment and votes it down it shows that it does not intend to allow this apportionment to be made in accordance with the population of the States, as is just and fair. For one, Mr. Chairman, in my study and examination, as far as I have been able to make it, into the spoils system, which has been so long and persistently championed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], I can find nothing that I can commend.

Only a few days ago—and I beg your attention to this, for I want to give you an illustration of the spoils system—only a few days ago a little boy appointed by the Doorkeeper in this House as a page, and who had been doing some work very satisfactorily for me outside of his duties, and for which I paid him, came to me and with a tremor in his voice said, "I have lost my place." "Why," I said, "what in the world is the matter? I thought you were one of the most diligent little fellows on the floor." He said, "Yes; but I have lost my backer." In other words, here was a little boy, discharging his duty to the United States Government, a good, competent boy, and yet, because some Congressman had withdrawn his "backing" from him, the Doorkeeper of the House not only was allowed to discharge him, but was obliged to discharge him and put some other boy in his place; and the little fellow lost his place as a servant and employee in this House because a Republican member on the other side withdrew his "backing."

The little fellow no longer had a "backer," and consequently he had to go. That is your spoils system. Now, I say to the gentleman from Ohio, if by any accident or any bad taste on the part of his constituents he should be allowed to remain home and not be a member of the next Congress, under his spoils system every man and woman who held a place under his appointment in any department of the Government would be instantly discharged at the demand of his successor. Nothing but the protection of the civil-service law allows these men and women any kind of a certainty of retaining their places in the Government employ.

Mr. CLARK. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FLEMING. Very well.

Mr. CLARK. Suppose any of us lose our backers, then what happens to us? [Laughter.]

Mr. FLEMING. We are in a worse fix still. We get very little now and then we would get nothing. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask for a vote.

Mr. FLEMING. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the amendment be amended by striking out the word "State" wherever it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Congressional district."

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, I think there ought to be——

Mr. BALL of Texas. I accept the amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask for a vote.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that after the word "State" there be added "the District of Columbia and the Territories." This language has been inadvertently left out. My object is that the District of Columbia and the Territories shall have their just representation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that there be inserted in his amendment an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "States" insert "District of Columbia and the Territories."

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I ask that the amendment as proposed to be amended be read.

Mr. BALL of Texas. I accepted the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not accept the amendment. It is for the Committee of the Whole to decide whether it shall be adopted or rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi rise in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; I wanted to move to amend the amendment so as to include the Philippines, Porto Rico, and Cuba. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment would not be in order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLLIDAY] to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL].

The question having been put—

The CHAIRMAN. The noes appear to have it.

Several members called for a division.

Mr. THAYER. Let the amendment be read, so that we may know what we are voting on.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL] will be read, together with the amendment now being voted on, offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLLIDAY].

Mr. HOPKINS. I hope that all these amendments will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BALL of Texas moves to amend as follows:

At the end of line 16, page 3, add: "Provided, That the employees of the Census Office at the date of the passage of this act, made eligible for transfer to other departments or retained in the service, shall be apportioned among the States in proportion to their population."

Mr. HOLLIDAY moves to amend the amendment of Mr. BALL of Texas by striking out the word "States" wherever it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "Congressional districts."

The question being taken, Mr. HOLLIDAY'S amendment to the amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes 116, noes 94.

Mr. RODEY. I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether this provision now includes the Territories?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that gentlemen are endangering this bill by voting on these amendments.

Mr. RODEY. I move to amend by inserting "and the Territories" in connection with the amendment last read.

A MEMBER. And the District of Columbia.

Mr. LACEY. I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RODEY] be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the words "Congressional districts" the words "the Territories and the District of Columbia."

Mr. BALL of Texas. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be added.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. RUCKER. I object to the amendment so far as it applies to the District of Columbia.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. RODEY was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, as amended.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I move to amend by striking out the last word.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman from Mississippi, as I understand, rises to debate the question. I raise the point that debate is not now in order. We are voting now on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not the understanding of the Chair that the disposition of one amendment to an amendment precludes further debate on the amendment itself, or on a new amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas will be defeated. If his amendment makes no change in the existing civil-service law, then it is useless; if it does make any change in that law, then it endangers the final enactment of this bill. That is all I have to say.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi is withdrawn. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL].

Mr. MERCER. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Texas by adding:

Provided, That the distribution be based upon the vote cast in each Congressional district in the last Congressional election.

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER].

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 91, noes 115.

So the amendment was rejected. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BALL].

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 95 noes 122.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out all of section 5 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 5 of the bill as reported from the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this section of the bill contains two provisions. The first provision covers all of the employees of the Census Office, who may be such at the date of the passage of this act, into the classified service, and thereby permits their transfer from the Census Office into other departments or offices of the Government included within the classified list. The second provision covers the Census Office into the classified service and provides that all future appointments shall be made from the eligible list under the Civil Service Commission and regulations.

I must confess that I am very much surprised that gentlemen in this House, who have consistently opposed appointments under the civil-service law—such as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS]—are now willing to vote for this provision of the bill which covers an additional department of the Government into the classified civil service. If this bill is enacted into law, all future appointments in the Census Office, including all appointments which may be made at the taking of any future census, will be made through the Civil Service Commission, under the merit system, which gentlemen so profess to abhor.

Under this provision supervisors of census in the various Congressional districts, as well as enumerators, will be appointed from the eligible list of the Civil Service Commission, obtained through competitive examination. For the first time since I have been a member of this House an opportunity is presented for members here to vote upon a proposition extending the operation of the civil-service law and the merit system to a new department. Gentlemen who have been making speeches against the civil-service law when there was no opportunity to vote it down and have urged that the so-called merit system under the Civil Service Commission was not only bad in policy but disastrous in its operation are now intending to vote in favor of its extension. They have been ready with words of condemnation, spoken possibly for the benefit of aspiring office seekers of their districts, to denounce the civil-service law; but when this first opportunity to vote comes up, how will they vote?

That is not my objection to the section, however. I believe in the merit system. I think the civil-service law may properly be extended over the Census Department. I think it is wise to cover the Census Office into the classified service. It is not necessary to enact this section in order to accomplish that. If the Census Office shall be created into a permanent department, then the President has the power under existing law by Executive order to cover the office into the classified service. My objection to this section is the first provision, which covers the present force in the Census Office into the classified service for the purpose of permitting the employees there, who will otherwise be discharged from the Government service, to be transferred to other departments of the Government.

My objection to this is not based upon any lack of qualifications on the part of the present employees. No one acquainted with the present Census Office will doubt that the Director of the Census and his most efficient administrative force and employees have accomplished more work per capita than any other department of the Government within the same time. The present employees were subjected to a reasonable examination prior to admission, and even if they had not been, their experience in the office and their retention there sufficiently prove their qualifications. I have no doubt that the clerks in the Census Office are, on the average, fully equal in capacity to the clerks in any other department of the Government. Nor do I base my objection on the proposition that the transfer of these clerks to other departments will be an injustice to the persons now on the eligible list under the Civil Service Commission. The persons on the eligible list have no vested rights in the matter of appointments. They have taken their chances of appointment.

But, Mr. Chairman, this bill itself and the manner of its discussion and consideration in this House are a sufficient condemnation of this provision of the bill. Here is a bill to create anew a permanent department of the Government. The bill provides for the duplication of the taking of statistics. Much of the work that is now being done by the Bureau of Statistics in the Treasury Department, by the Labor Commissioner, by the Geological Survey, and other bureaus in the various Departments will be duplicated by the permanent Census Bureau, if this bill becomes a law.

But these provisions of the bill have not received consideration at the hands of this House and will not receive consideration. Why? It is because, sir, of the desire on the part of the gentlemen here "to take care of" two or three or four clerks which each gentleman now has in the Census Office. Public considerations are waived aside. The interest of the Government is momentarily forgotten. The proper consideration of the subjects to be controlled by the new department is made secondary. The whole interest of gentlemen seems to be to supply places for a few clerks who were brought to Washington for temporary employment and who now insist that they ought to be retained permanently or for life in the service, on pay, of their Government.

I do not believe the gentlemen here would be controlled by improper motives. Direct or indirect bribery could not pass a bill through this House. It could have no influence here. But the mere desire to catch a few crumbs from the table of the spoils system is hurrying through this House without reasonable consideration this bill. Probably the bill has merits. Possibly it ought to be enacted into law. The members of the House can not know whether that is true or not. No one could see the bill until this morning. No member of the House has had an opportunity to consider it in its relation to other departments of the Government. But all this stands for naught. In the face of the opportunity to provide jobs for two or three clerks, the different members of this House do not propose to let any consideration of the public interest block their path.

Mr. Chairman, there never has been a better illustration of the value of the civil-service act. Without that act we would be creating new offices, to be filled by our solicitation, without number.

Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who are now hurrying this bill, without proper consideration, through the House will be mistaken. They see before them rich and luscious-looking red apples in the form of patronage. But those apples are Dead Sea apples. They will turn to ashes in the mouth. Gentlemen have spoken in favor of this bill here to-day because, they said, the Director of the Census will treat us all fairly in the transfer of clerks from his department to other departments.

Why, sir, the Director of the Census will have nothing to do with the transfers. He can not originate or start in motion a single proposition for a transfer. Transfers from the Census Office to other departments can only be made when the request originates with the other department. No transfer can be made from the Census Office unless the clerk is employed in the Census Office at the time the transfer is ordered. There are not enough appointments being made into the classified service in the class of work which these census employees do to absorb all the number of the clerks who will be discharged from the Census Office in the course of several years. But the clerks in the Census Office who are not to be retained permanently are nearly all to be discharged by the 1st of July next, so that many gentlemen here are sure to be disappointed in the expectation that their clerks in the Census Office will be provided easy berths in other departments if this bill is enacted into law.

It would be bad enough, sir, to hurry this bill along if the consideration which members expect were sure to be received. I protest with all my strength against the enactment of important legislation because influenced by the hope of securing a little patronage. I know very well that my protest will not be heeded. I know that the die is cast and that this bill will be passed here without substantial amendment. Of course I am aware that one thing which has made the path of this bill easy is the uniform courtesy, consideration, and prompt attention to business shown by the Census Office and Director Merriam.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOPKINS. I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JENKINS. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

By Mr. JENKINS:

Amend section 5, line 10, by striking out of line 10 the following: "at the date of the passage of this act."

Mr. HOPKINS. I raise the point of order on that, that it is not germane to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point that all debate is closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed, but the opportunity to offer amendment is still open.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I know, but the gentleman is debating the amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. No; I was making a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The parliamentary situation is this: There is a motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], which is now pending, to strike out the section. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] offers an amendment in perfection of the section, which is in order, and takes precedence.

The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, a parlimentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS. Is debate on this amendment cut off?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. PEARRE. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. PEARRE. I will send up my amendment, so that the Chair can determine.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 5 by striking out all of said section after the word "thereunder" in line 14.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not now in order.

Mr. PEARRE. I will withdraw it and offer it later.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PEARRE. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 5 by striking out all of said section after the word "thereunder" in line 15.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. Strike out the language referred to by that amendment and insert:

Provided, That the act of January 16, 1883, and amendments thereto shall have no application in appointments of persons appointed in the Census Office after June 30, 1902.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment would not be in order until the amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Maryland, is disposed of. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of the section after the word "thereunder," in line 14, on page 3, and insert: "Provided, That the act of January 16, 1883, and amendments thereto shall have no application in appointments of persons appointed in the Census Office after June 30, 1902."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15, section 5, after the word "created," insert "except supervisors of the census and enumerators."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], striking out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 115.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That section 8 of the act of March 3, 1899, is hereby amended so as to read as follows: That after the completion and return of the enumeration and of the work upon the schedules relating to the products of agriculture and to manufacturing and mechanical establishments provided for in section 7 of this act, the Director of the Census is hereby authorized to collect statistics relating to special classes, including the insane, feeble-minded, deaf, dumb, and blind; to crime, pauperism, and benevolence, including prisoners, paupers, juvenile delinquents, and inmates of benevolent and reformatory institutions; to social statistics of cities; to public indebtedness, valuation, taxation, and expenditures; to religious bodies; to electric light and power, telephone, and telegraph business; to transportation by water, express business, and street railways; to mines, mining, and minerals, and the production and value thereof, including gold in divisions of placer and vein, and silver mines, and the number of men employed, the average daily wage, average working time, and aggregate earnings in the various branches and aforesaid divisions of the mining industry. And the Director of the Census shall prepare schedules containing such interrogatories as shall in his judgment be best adapted to elicit the information required under these subjects, with such specifications, divisions, and particulars under each head as he shall deem necessary to that end; and all reports prepared under the provisions of this section shall be designated as "Special reports of the Census Office." For the purpose of securing the statistics required by this section, the Director of the Census may appoint special agents when necessary, and such special agents shall receive compensation as hereinafter provided.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee. I find on page 4 of the bill, in the latter part of line 11, and ending with line 16, a provision about mines and mining, minerals and the productions and values thereof, and all that. Now, this is work that the Geological Survey has been doing for twenty years, and is doing to-day. I understand that the language was put in the original census bill for the purpose of having a comparison of results for one year between the census examination and the geological report. Now, if this work is to go on as work in the Census Bureau indefinitely, it involves indefinite duplication of work. But what I want to ask the gentleman to inform me is, how the language happened to be left in the bill and what is the intent of the framers of the bill in connection with it?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will state to the gentleman from Mississippi that the language is identical with the language of section 8, and that language was embraced in the bill at the solicitation, at the time, of the intermountain members of the House, who complained that this Department——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. One word right there, because it will help the gentleman to go on with his explanation. It was inserted as part of section 8, but only for one year.

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, yes; it was inserted on this same information, statements having been made that the Geological department did not have the facilities to go into it as extensively as proposed here, and that for its purpose it could take the figures selected or collated by the Census Bureau, and that there would be no further expense to the Government attending that; and my information is that this is more satisfactory and is more earnestly desired by those interested in this subject than to leave it to the imperfect work of the Geological Survey.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I should not have any objection to this language remaining in the bill for the purpose of comparison of results, upon report, for one year; some designated year—1903, or whatever the gentleman pleases; but if we are to be involved by this language in an indefinite duplication of work between the Census Bureau and the Geological Survey of the Interior Department, I think it is something that we ought not to do.

One word further. I hope the time has come, or will come, when this Bureau will be included in a department of commerce, and a part of this Bureau's work will be exactly this work designated. But I do believe before we enact it into a permanent legislation we ought to deprive the Geological Survey of the work. There is no use spending the Government's money twice on the same subject-matter.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Geological Survey is limited more particularly to the public domain, and I will state to the gentleman that it is necessary to leave this in, because, under the provisions of section 8 of the original bill, that work was not to be completed until after the 1st day of July, 1903. The object and purpose of putting it originally into the section exists to-day the same as it did when enacted by Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, having heard that explanation, this language ought to be added: "until July 1, 1902."

Mr. HOPKINS. Nineteen hundred and three.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Nineteen hundred and three?

Mr. HOPKINS. The Census Bureau could not get the report out before the 1st of July, 1903.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then I move that after the word "industry," in line 16, page 4, of the bill, there be added the words "until July 1, 1903."

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard a moment in opposition to that. The language embraced in this section gives the Census Bureau an opportunity to make investigation in different directions, and on a great variety of subjects, and to do it more systematically and accurately than it is possible for the Geological Department to do it. I think it would be quite unfortunate if this provision should be limited to 1903, because it will be much easier for the Committee on Appropriations in the future to cut off the Geological Department entirely than it would to cripple this investigation in its incipient stages in the Census Bureau. I will now yield to my colleague on the committee [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if this requirement for gathering of these particular statistics will not occur but once in every ten years under the law as it stands now?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is right; only once in ten years.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It does not occur annually?

Mr. HOPKINS. No.

Several members rose.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi, as he first raised the question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I heard the inquiry directed by the gentleman from Indiana to the gentleman from Illinois and the response. The response is a mistake. If this becomes the law of the land, then this ceases to be an inquiry once in ten years and becomes a constant and indefinite inquiry under the language I have just read. Now, for the purpose of making an inquiry once each year, I have moved that the words which I have suggested, "until July 1, 1903."

If the gentleman from Illinois does not think I have put it sufficiently large to enable the Census Bureau to finish that report, then I am willing to move to fix it at July 1, 1904. But if the gentleman from Indiana is right in his question, and if the gentleman from Illinois is right in his answer, and this is to be a report once each ten years, then we ought to indicate the period at which the examination and reporting shall cease. The gentleman from Indiana would have been right in his inquiry had we had nothing before us but the original law; but we have this language before us repealing the original law in so far as it is the necessary and natural intendment. What is the language? I read:

To mines, mining, and minerals, and the production and value thereof, including gold in divisions of placer and vein, and silver mines, and the number of men employed, the average daily wage, average working time, and aggregate earnings in the various branches and aforesaid divisions of the mining industry.

Now, that is absolutely without any limitation as to time or expense.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to say, if I can have the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi, that I quite agree with him as to the purpose of this provision in the original act, and I think that purpose should be carried out in this bill for a permanent establishment. But I call his attention to the fact that the provisions for all the statistical investigation is not to be carried out, the statistics are not to be collected and reported, until after July 1, 1902. At that time, under the provisions of this bill, we will have a small clerical force in the Census Bureau, assumed to be 500 or thereabouts.

Now, then, in order to prepare and publish these statistics of mining it will be absolutely necessary for the Census force, after 1902, to put a force upon this provision with reference to mines and mining, and I submit to him that perhaps it is not desirable to put this ahead of all other statistics provided for in this section. I would not like to have it restricted to the date the gentleman names. If he desires to make it perfectly clear that this is not to be a permanent work of the Census Bureau, he might propose an amendment that after the work is once done, as ordered by the original bill and as contemplated by this bill, then there should be no more of the statistics taken in reference to mines and mining.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is what I attempted to to do, but if any clearer language can be suggested I will accept it. I would like to fix the date in order to get a thorough vote on the original amendment. Mr. Chairman, I want to withdraw the language "July 1, 1903," and substitute "July 1, 1904," so that there can be no doubt about there being time enough.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is much better, but I submit that the gentleman's object would be accomplished if he extended that clear to the end of this decennial period, because it can only be done once in that time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the gentleman will follow the language of the bill I think he will find he is mistaken, because under the language of the bill (whether such is the intention of its framers or not) there can be annual reports on this subject.

Mr. RUSSELL. The gentleman is wrong, but I do not object to his amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Before I sit down, I want to ask unanimous consent to change the amendment I offered by striking out "1903" and inserting "1904."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment by substituting "1904" for "1903." Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, since we have been discussing this matter, Mr. David D. Day, of the United States Geological Survey, has called me out to the door and has explained to me that the work which this bill calls for, touching mines, mining, etc., is not only now being done, but for a number of years has been done by the Geological Survey.

He has written in his own handwriting on this bill, opposite the provision for this work, the words "work done." That being the case, I agree with the gentleman from Mississippi that this provision should be temporary, unless you wish to do away with part of the functions of the Geological Survey. Mr. Day says that the work contemplated here has already been done.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Permit me to suggest that Mr. Day meant to say that the material or the information for this work has been gathered, not that it has been collated or tabulated for publication.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. He says that this work has been done by the Geological Survey for years and years. I have known Mr. Day for several years. I know him to be a gentleman of information and intelligence.

When he says it is not necessary to create another department to do what the Geological Survey was created to do, is doing, and has been in the habit of doing, I think his statement is entitled to respect. Surely the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] does not want to have two different departments doing one and the same job of work, unless he adopts the idea of the gentleman from Mississippi, to have this work temporary and for the purpose of comparison. It seems to me, by all means, the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] should be adopted, in view of the evidence we now have before us.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have no objection to accepting the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi and limiting the effect of this provision to July 1, 1904.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. Has the chairman of the committee any objection to inserting after the word "mining" the word "quarries," so that we may get statistics as to the outcome of the forests of the United States—a matter of very great value, amounting to millions of dollars annually?

Mr. HOPKINS. I have no objection to that amendment. Let it be inserted by unanimous consent.

The amendment of Mr. GIBSON was read, as follows:

After the word "mining," in line 12, insert "forests."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. I move to amend further by inserting after the word "mining," in the sixteenth line, the words "and quarrying industries," and strike out the word "industry."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. The pending section provides that—

The Director of the Census may appoint special agents when necessary, and such special agents shall receive compensation as hereinafter provided.

The compensation provided for these special agents, in section 17, on page 6, of the bill, is "$6 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses, and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3 per day."

I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether these special agents are to be appointed annually, or are they to be appointed every ten years?

Mr. HOPKINS. They are not to be appointed annually; they are to be employed only for limited periods. Some have been appointed for five days, some for ten days, some for as many as forty days; I think that in all the work that has been done none have been appointed for more than forty days.

Mr. ROBB. What is there in the bill to limit the time of their appointment?

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman will turn to section 17, to which he has referred, he will find it provided, beginning with line 18—

That the Director of the Census is hereby authorized in his discretion to employ the clerical force of the Census Office for such field work, etc.

And further on it is provided that—

Such employees when so employed shall be allowed, in addition to their regular compensation, actual necessary traveling expenses and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3 per day during their necessary absence from the Census Office.

So that these special agents in the permanent bureau will not be employed at all, but the Director will use the clerical force instead of appointing special agents.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Virginia to say that the bill now before us does not authorize the Director of the Census Bureau, if the bill shall become a law, to appoint special agents.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman is in error. It does make such an authorization.

Mr. ROBB. I understand that the Director of the Census, under the provisions of the bill, may appoint special agents or such additions to the clerical force as he may desire; and in that regard I think the gentleman from Missouri is in error. I understand also that the power is given to the Director of the Census to appoint, or select at will, such clerical force as he may wish, under the provisions of this bill; that is to say, as far as the bill is understood in the House, there seems to be no limitation upon its power in that regard.

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman is mistaken. That section was in the original bill and was considered and changed by the committee, and it does not appear in the pending bill, and is not a part of the proposed legislation.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. RODEY. If the gentleman will allow me for a moment, I can well understand why such a provision—where the census is taken every ten years—might be operative with reference to the employees, and necessary; but I do not see why such a provision should be incorporated in the present bill, and I think it very objectionable.

It is an unnecessary expense in this connection, and I do not see any reason for incorporating it in the present bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, and read as follows:

SEC. 9. That in the year 1905, and every ten years thereafter, there shall be a collection of the statistics of manufactures, confined to manufacturing establishments conducted under what is known as the factory system, exclusive of the so-called neighborhood and mechanical industries; and the Director is hereby authorized to prepare such schedules as in his judgment may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section; and that the Director of the Census shall annually collect the statistics of the cotton production of the country as returned by the ginners; and that the Director of the Census shall make, from time to time, any additional special collections of statistics relating to any branch of agriculture, manufacture, mining, transportation, fisheries, or any other branch of industry that may be required of him by Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. In connection with the general purposes of the bill, and with reference to the pending section, I desire to occupy the attention of the committee for a very brief time.

I desire to refer particularly to the provision of the bill which provides—

That the Director of the Census shall make from time to time any additional special collections of statistics relating to any branch of agriculture, manufactures, mining, transportation, fisheries, or any other branch of industry that may be required of him by Congress.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is laid the foundation, pretty broad, for utilizing this Bureau. If this work is to be done, and done annually, and the special work requires a force of some 500 people in this Bureau to accomplish it, then it becomes a matter of serious import for us to consider the question of expenditures.

Mr. HOPKINS. My friend is in error——

Mr. CANNON. Oh, well, I know that it is hopeless to try to stay these expenditures. I am not criticising anybody, either. I know the work is to be done, and that there will be always work of this character.

I do not believe the committee could prepare it properly in three months' time, because you would have to take into consideration the work that is being done elsewhere of a similar nature, and when you found this work, abolish that. There are all kinds of duplications over here. Now, this proposes to utilize the Bureau for agricultural and manufacturing and all kinds of statistics, as Congress may require. Why, as I am reliably informed, there is one department of this Government, and a small one at that, where there are two divisions gathering the same statistics.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Not in the census.

Mr. CANNON. No, not in the census; but this bill utilizes the census for that, and then you will have three.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Only when authorized by Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Only when authorized by Congress; but with a force of 500 clerks you need not bother about its being utilized by Congress. [Laughter.] I am here to say what everybody knows, that if it had not been for section 5 this bill could not be passed. [Applause.]

I am not even saying now that some bill ought not to be enacted. But if there is anything on earth, it seems to me, that we have enough of and to spare it is statistics. They are being gathered by the Department of Labor, by almost every bureau in the Treasury Department, by the State Department, and there are two bureaus or divisions of statistics in the Department of Agriculture. The chiefs of divisions may run and glorify and duplicate their work. The statistics of mines and mining are duplicated here.

Now, I have no objection to putting it in here, but you do not abolish it at the other place; and you never will until, in the fullness of time, somebody has authority, outside of the city of Washington, who does not want these places and never expects to try to get them, to make intelligent inquiry, and until you have a Congress that would enact the result of that inquiry.

When people engaged in these industries here all about us are sending notes and cards to us because their occupation is about to be taken from them, you have got to as bad a state of affairs as could be well had. And there is no little thing that is so outrageous and so nearly scandalous as this thing of gathering statistics, and the work of the alleged scientists about the city of Washington.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That section 17 of the act of March 3, 1899, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 17. That the special agents appointed under the provisions of this act have equal authority with the enumerators in respect to the subjects committed to them under this act, and shall receive compensation at rates to be fixed by the Director of the Census: Provided, That the same shall in no case exceed $6 per day and actual necessary traveling expenses and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3 per day during their necessary absence from their usual place of residence: And provided further, That no pay or allowance in lieu of subsistence shall be allowed special agents when employed in the Census Office on other than the special work committed to them, and no appointments of special agents shall be made for clerical work: And provided further, That the Director of the Census is hereby authorized in his discretion to employ the clerical force of the Census Office for such field work as may be required to carry out the provisions of sections 7, 8, and 9, in lieu of employing special agents for that purpose; and such employees when so employed shall be allowed, in addition to their regular compensation, actual necessary traveling expenses, and an allowance in lieu of subsistence not exceeding $3 per day during their necessary absence from the Census Office."

Mr. SOUTHWICK. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 10 by adding:
"All employees of the Census Office shall be citizens of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with the amendments adopted, to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. PAYNE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10308) to provide for a permanent census office, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with amendments, and with the recommendation that as amended the bill do pass.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the bill and on the amendments to the final passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments? If not, they will be voted on in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, 11 members, not a sufficient number, rising in support of the demand therefor.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, it is quite evident that I was mistaken. I thought they wanted to record their votes in order to show their zeal for this bill.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Oh, no; we simply did not want to show you how badly you were beaten.

The question being taken, the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. HOPKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

SENATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles and the following Senate concurrent resolution No. 16 were taken from the Speaker's table, and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

PROTECTION OF LIVES OF MINERS.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, in the bill passed this morning (H. R. 8327), to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories," the words "fifty-five" should be stricken out and the words "eighty-three and one-third" inserted, so as to make it agree with the other computations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. 8327) was passed this morning, and also the vote for the engrossment and third reading thereof, for the purpose of making a correction of an error. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9 strike out "fifty-five" and insert "eighty-three and one-third."

Mr. LACEY. That will make it agree with the balance of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the adoption of this amendment?

There was no objection.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

There was no objection.

The attention of Congress is called to the request of the Secretary of Agriculture that 6,000 copies of the report be printed for the use of the Department of Agriculture and that provision be made to print such a report annually.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

ACTS OF PHILIPPINE COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. RAWLINS, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of War is directed to inform the Senate if the following has been passed by the Philippine Commission, and is being enforced as a law in said islands, and persons punished thereunder, viz:

"SEC. 2. Every person owing allegiance to the United States or the government of the Philippine Islands and having knowledge of any treason against them, or either of them, who conceals and does not, as soon as may be, disclose and make known the same to the provincial governor in the province in which he resides, or to the civil governor of the islands, or to some judge of a court of record, is guilty of misprision of treason, and shall be imprisoned not more than seven years and be fined not more than $1,000."

"SEC. 8. Every person who shall utter seditious words or speeches; write, publish, or circulate scurrilous libels against the Government of the United States or the insular government of the Philippine Islands, or which tend to disturb or obstruct any lawful officer in executing his office, or which tend to instigate others to cabal or meet together for unlawful purposes, or which suggest or incite rebellious conspiracies or riots, or which tend to stir up the people against the lawful authorities or to disturb the peace of the community, the safety and order of the government, or who shall knowingly conceal such evil practices, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. HALE. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

SALARIES OF CERTAIN JUDGES.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3287) to fix the salaries of certain judges of the United States.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does the Senator contemplate limiting debate under the five-minute rule?

Mr. HOAR. No; I do not understand that my motion limits debate to five minutes. If no Senator would want to speak more than five minutes on the bill I should be delighted with the limitation, but I suppose the motion does not limit it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following salaries shall be paid to the several judges hereinafter mentioned in lieu of the salaries now provided for by law, namely:

To the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States the sum of $13,000 a year, and to each of the associate justices thereof the sum of $12,500 a year.

To each of the circuit judges the sum of $7,500 a year.

To each of the district judges the sum of $6,250 a year.

To the chief justice of the Court of Claims the sum of $6,125 a year, and to each of the associate justices thereof the sum of $5,625 a year.

To the chief justice of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia the sum of $8,000 a year, and to each of the associate justices thereof the sum of $7,500 a year.

To the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia the sum of $6,750 a year, and to each of the associate justices thereof the sum of $6,250 a year.

That after the passage of this act no payment shall be made to any of the judges mentioned in this act for expenses.

That all of said salaries shall be paid in monthly installments.

That one-half of the amount of said salaries which shall be paid to judges of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia and to judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia shall be defrayed from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I should like to hear some statement from the Senator from Massachusetts as to whether this is the same bill that was reported by the committee during the last Congress, and if not, in what way it differs, and what reason there is for the proposed increase of salaries. Before I am ready to vote I should like to know something about the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have in my possession and in my head a good many statistics and details about this measure, but it is a matter upon which every Senator, I suppose, is well informed. It has been the subject of public discussion and of private discussion in the Senate for a good many years. I am sure the Senator from Arkansas, who put me the question, is well informed about it, because when I undertake to answer it he devotes his attention to something else.

Mr. BERRY. More interesting.

Mr. HOAR. More interesting to your mind, undoubtedly.

Now, Mr. President, I do not propose to enter into an extended statement on this subject. I agree that the judges of the great courts and the lesser courts of the United States—which are still great courts—always have been, and are, and always must be chiefly rewarded for their honorable public service by the public confidence which is implied in their selection and by the satisfaction of rendering the service.

But, nevertheless, it is due not merely to them, but to the people, that they be paid; that they be paid a sum which will enable them to support their families in such decent comfort and respectability as the social habits of our Republic require, to educate their children, and to lay up a reasonable provision for their widows and dependent children or grandchildren, if they leave such behind them. We have had the spectacle of the widows of two judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, who had lived only in fair comfort in Washington, in modest houses, such as mechanics in my city dwell in, having public subscriptions taken up for their support after their husbands' death—one of them a Chief Justice.

The present salaries are not enough for them. They are not equal to what the city solicitors in second-class cities get as salaries, when they are at liberty also to practice outside of their official duties. They are not equal to what the counsel of the important railroad companies get. The year's pay is not equal to what is regarded as a pretty moderate fee, and what clients pay cheerfully and without hesitation, by the counsel who practice before them.

When the salaries of the judges of the supreme court of Massachusetts were raised a few years ago, there was an objection made by a very able and generally intelligent man, a great personal friend of mine, who had been engaged in business as a large clothing dealer. It was a great many years ago. Our legislatnre was going to raise the salaries of the supreme court judges to $6,000, I think it was. In the middle of a vigorous speech against it, a speech which would have done credit even to my honorable friend from Arkansas, somebody got up and asked him to tell the house, if he had no objection, he being a large clothing dealer, what he paid to his head cutter, and, with a little hesitation, he replied, $7,500 a year. That was the end of his impression on the legislature.

I think it is true that in some parts of the country, very few indeed, I suppose in not more than four or five States altogether, the ancient, frugal fashions of our ancestors prevail, but in general the judges of the Supreme Court do not get the salary received by the judges of the supreme courts of great States like New York. In proportion to the necessary scale of living and the necessary traveling they have to do, they do not get what is the equal in value to them of the salaries of many of the justices of the supreme courts of the States, and yet they have the greatest jurisdiction in the world. Vast political powers are brought to them to be held within their appropriate spheres. Forty-five States and the nation, wielding the agregrate powers of 45 States and 80,000,000 people, are to be kept within their appointed bounds. Besides that, the vast and imperial powers of aggregated wealth, greater than the powers of States, greater than the powers of nations until within a very few years, must be brought to their bar as equals with the helpless citizen.

Now, these gentlemen—every one of them—could easily earn ten times the salary here proposed at the bar; and while I agree that what he could earn at the bar is not a fair test of what the judge ought to get, and that, as I said in the beginning, the chief compensation of the judge is the honor of the confidence of his fellow-citizens and the satisfaction of a great public service, yet I submit that he is entitled to a decent and honorable salary.

The committee have not reported what I believe a majority of the committee think ought to be done. They have not reported any increase in our own salary. I think they all share the feeling, which certainly I have myself, that I do not want to be talking about my own salary, and I want to turn from that subject to more important public questions.

The Senator or Representative is in the position that my friend from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] would be if, after having completed a valuable service for a client, the client should hand him a blank check, or throw him his purse, and say, "Fill out the check or take out of the purse as will suit yourself." That is the way we stand toward the people in this matter of our own salaries; and in that position my honorable friend from Arkansas would be sure to say, "I will take nothing which I am not sure you think I should take."

But when it comes to the judges we are bound in honor and by our oath of office to maintain those gentlemen in an honorable and decent and proper maintenance suitable to their great office, and this increase, which is simply 25 per cent all around, is far less than, for one, I think we ought to make it.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, during the last Congress, if I remember correctly, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] reported a bill proposing to pay the associate justices of the Supreme Court $15,000 a year and the Chief Justice $15,500. If I caught correctly the reading of the bill he has now reported—I am not sure, and the Senator did not state it—the proposition now is to pay the associate justices of the Supreme Court $12,500 and the Chief Justice $13,000. I do not propose to proceed at any length in answer to the argument made by the Senator from Massachusetts, but I submit that to undertake to fix the salaries of public officers upon the basis of what men recieve as presidents of great railroads or what it is supposed one of these judges could have made practicing law, would, in my opinion, be absolutely unjust to the Government and unjustifiable in every way.

The salary of the associate justices was fixed by law at $10,000 and that of the Chief Justice at $10,500. Every judge upon that bench at the time he sought or accepted the place knew what that salary was; he knew what he could probably make at the law, but he preferred to take the $10,000 a year with the honor that attached to the judicial office rather than to take his chances at the law. So I say he is not in any condition to complain that he is not getting a sufficient salary.

I had not referred to our own salaries, nor did I intend to refer to them, because I say the argument I have just made in regard to the justices of the Supreme Court will apply to every Senator upon this floor. I would not vote to increase our salaries, because we knew when we sought or accepted these places what the salary was. No man is bound to serve here if he thinks he can make more money at the law and prefers to take that course.

These judges get $10,000 a year, which is double the amount paid to a Senator or Representative in Congress, and yet the Senator tells us that the judges can not live upon that salary, and that their widows have been forced to rely upon public subscriptions. I believe that any man can live in a respectable way on $10,000 a year; and if these distinguished gentlemen had not thought they could do so they would not have accepted the appointment or would not remain upon the bench. I believe the honor of being a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States more than compensates them for the difference between the salaries they receive and what they think they could make at the law. They hold their office for life; they are not required to incur any additional expense every two or six years to secure a reelection. It is considered one of the highest places in this Government.

I do not presume the Senator will say that $10,000 a year has not secured talent equal to the occasion. There may be those who, in the light of some of the decisions of that court in the last few years, doubt whether or not the judges of that court are worth to the country what they receive. I think there is a large number of people throughout this nation who think that they are not worth the $10,000 a year now paid them.

I do not, however, propose to go into that branch of the case. I simply say, so far as the Supreme justices are concerned, who receive double the amount of compensation a member of Congress receives, that they can live on the salary paid them, and I believe that a Senator or Representative can live on the salary paid him. So long as the judges receive double that amount they have no right to complain.

I see no necessity for the passage of this bill, nor do I believe these judges have any such claim upon the country or upon Congress as would authorize them to ask that their salaries be increased either 50 or 25 per cent; and so, Mr. President, I shall not vote for the bill.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I am glad that this bill has been reported. I do not think in selecting the judiciary that the interest of the incumbent is the only consideration. The Government wants the best service, and lawyers who can fill those places creditably can earn, and do earn, in their private practice a much larger sum, more than double, and in some cases three or four or five times the amount of the judicial salaries.

We want a sufficient salary for the judges to enable the President to select from the first class at the bar. We do not propose to pay them such salaries as they receive from great corporations, which is from $25,000 to $50,000 a year. We do not propose that, because we take into consideration, as suggested by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], the honor and the dignity of the place and its permanency. That being taken into consideration, it is expecting too much to ask a first-class lawyer who is receiving from $50,000 to $75,000 a year to accept a judicial appointment with such a salary as that provided under the present law. The selection can not always be made from the first class at the bar, for we know very well that many have declined judicial office on account of the inadequate salary. We do not have that field fully open, and we want in these places the best talent that can be obtained.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me a question?

Mr. STEWART. Any question.

Mr. BERRY. Does the Senator, by the argument he is making, intend to be understood as saying that we have been unable to secure the best talent; that the present judges are inferior to the best lawyers in the United States; is that the statement the Senator makes?

Mr. STEWART. I did not make that statement.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator said it was well known that we were unable to get the best talent. Then, that being true, the inference would follow that we have not now the best.

Mr. STEWART. That is a very violent inference. We have succeeded very well, and we also succeeded very well when the salaries were much lower. When I first came here the salary was $6,000.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will allow me to suggest that the English House of Commons, which seems to succeed very well and seems to be a great body, does not pay its members anything; and I have no doubt we could get judges for nothing and Senators in abundance for nothing.

Mr. STEWART. Undoubtedly. When I first came here the justices of the Supreme Court were receiving $6,000 a year in greenbacks, and they were living in the humblest places imaginable. I visited them, and I commenced agitating this question at once. After a while we got the salary up to $8,000 a year, and then to $10,000, but we have never got it fixed at such a sum as has satisfied the judgment of the best men in the country. Talk with the bar, talk with the people, and you will find that they do not complain of these salaries. They want them higher. Although men have taken these positions, and great men have been upon the bench, and although they have lived as economically as they could, some of them left their families without anything.

I remember very well the daughter of one of the most distinguished Chief Justices working in one of the departments here after his death. He had lived economically and left a great record, of which anybody might be proud. They and their families are modest and economical in their mode of living, but the position they occupy makes it necessary for them to live up to the full amount of their salaries, so that when they die they have nothing to leave to their families. This is not such a position as we ought to require them to occupy. We desire to see them placed above want, we want them to have a fair compensation, and we want their compensation to correspond somewhat with the labor and the dignity of the office. I believe there is nothing that is more demanded than that our judges should have reasonable compensation. Of course we can get judges for nothing, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] suggested, but that is not our system, and we like our system best.

I do not believe that the compensation of Senators and Representatives is sufficient. I think it ought to be more, so that any economical gentleman might live with his family here in the city, which he can not do on the present salary. Senators and Representatives do not, however, like to vote to increase their own salaries, but that ought not to warp their judgment so that they will not consent to give a sufficient salary to properly maintain the judges in the position they occupy without too great a sacrifice on their part. We should not ask men to make such a sacrifice. Of course they are not going to get as much compensation as they would in private life, and while some of them are willing to make a sacrifice for the honor of the office, we should not ask them to sacrifice everything. We want them placed above temptation and in comfortable circumstances, so that they can maintain the dignity and perform the duties of the judicial office, which is more to the people than any other, for after all the great thing in any country is the administration of justice. When justice is fairly and fully administered in any country, the people know it and feel it, and they will love their country. The loyalty of Englishmen is inspired more by the conviction that they can get justice in their courts than by any other consideration. So we have had justice administered through our courts, and our country is loved.

We want to do now only so much as will keep pace with the price of living, keep pace with the progress of the country, and uphold the dignity and power of our courts, which come so near to the people. It is the administration of justice through the courts which makes a people contented and happy; which makes them patriotic, and makes them love their country. I do not believe there is a right-minded citizen in the United States who would say that this schedule of salaries on the whole is not fair, that it is not moderate, and that if any change is to be made there should be an increase. I believe that is the feeling of the country; it is so far as my experience goes, and I congratulate the Senator from Massachusetts on having brought in a bill so eminently just and proper. I hope it will pass without a vote against it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, the report submitted to the Senate by the senior member from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] speaks the views of the committee, though it is not a unanimous report. It was not brought in and is not supported here unanimously by the Judiciary Committee of this body. I am one of the members of that committee who did not support the bill now before the Senate.

I am not to be involved in any discussion as to the merits of the salary proposed by this measure to be paid to the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States. I am perfectly willing to admit that their services, in connection with the distinguished positions they hold, would warrant an increase in their salaries. Their salaries have been increased more than once, as stated by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]. Nor am I prepared to assert that they should not be increased further. I am perfectly willing to admit that they deserve more pay.

As to the judges of the subordinate Federal courts who are embraced in this bill, I have very great doubt as to whether they are not already paid enough. There is, however, one feature of the bill, which has not been alluded to by anybody, that commends it to my favorable consideration, and that is where the traveling pay is stricken out from the circuit judges and their salaries are fixed and determined. I think that is an eminently proper provision, because inequalities exist under the present system. All the circuit judges get the same amount of salary, but some of them get nearly as much in the shape of travel pay as the salary amounts to, while others get nothing. This bill proposes to cure that.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator means as much as the increase of salary.

Mr. BLACKBURN. As much as the increase.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator said "as much as the salary."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thank the Senator. Some of them get as much as the increase provided for in this bill over what the present pay would amount to.

Mr. COCKRELL. How is that done?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Because the law allows them $10 a day when not at home. You find one circuit judge who lives in one State while nominally he is a citizen of another State, but never stays there at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the effect of that?

Mr. BLACKBURN. He gets $10 a day for every day——

Mr. COCKRELL. Expenses?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; the law gives him $10 a day for every day he is holding court away from home. That is to cover his expenses. He draws his salary plus $10 a day for expenses when holding court away from home. In the instance to which I refer, the judge never is at home, because he does not live at home; his home is in one State and he lives in another.

Mr. COCKRELL. He holds court in another State?

Mr. BLACKBURN. He holds court in both States, because he is a circuit judge, and both States are in his circuit.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am glad to have the Senator interrupt.

Mr. HOAR. When the matter was up in the committee I was not able to state it to the committee with precise exactness, and nobody there understood precisely what it was; but I have now from the Department of Justice the exact statement, and it is this:

When a circuit or district judge assists in holding a term of a United States circuit court of appeals—

Confined to that; not any other court—at a place other than his residence, he is entitled to his actual expenses, not exceeding $10 a day. You are also informed that a United States district judge, when he is assigned to hold a term of court outside of his district, is entitled to be reimbursed his actual expenses, not exceeding $10 a day.

I have the reference to the statutes here, which I will not trouble my friend by reading.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am much obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts for inserting it. That is precisely the point I want to present to the Senate. In my judgment that feature of this bill is a good one, because it cuts off all of that allowance, makes the pay absolute, and fixes it in positive salary form. That I think desirable.

I might add that, so far as my information goes—and I think I am correctly informed—the law provides that this judge, whether he be a circuit or a district judge assisting in the holding of a court of appeals in some place other than his home, is allowed his actual expenses, not to exceed $10 a day. That is a part of the statute. I think I correctly state the practice when I say that in all cases that maximum allowance is granted and paid, and it amounts practically to an allowance of $10 a day in addition to the salary which is fixed by law. That feature of this bill I commend and approve. I think that is proper.

I am not, however, in favor of the passage of this bill, and I repeat that it is not because I am not willing to see the salaries of the justices of the Supreme Court and those of all the circuit and even the district courts increased beyond the present amount; but I am not in favor of this bill for another reason. I think that there should be an overhauling of the salaries of the officials of this Government. The disproportion is already great enough. I am opposed to increasing that disproportion as is proposed. A justice of the Supreme Court of the United States receives to-day twice as much salary as a Senator in this Chamber. Nor does it stop there. He receives that not only whilst he is in harness on the bench, but he continues to receive it until he dies of old age, or after he shall have gone upon the retired list. A Federal circuit judge receives more money than a Senator, not simply while he is on the bench discharging his judicial duties, but until he dies of old age, if he ever does.

Mr. President, the reason I withhold support from this bill, as I have before said, is because I think when this question of salaries is taken up, and when we undertake to deal with it at all, we should not do it in homeopathic doses, but we should have a general revision and regulation. The present rate of pay of officials of this Government, I take it, will be conceded to be indefensible. It admits neither of justification nor explanation. You have officers of this Senate, you have officers of the other branch of Congress, who receive more pay than a Senator or a Member of the House. You have clerical employees of this Government without number—I do not mean Cabinet officers, I mean subordinate officers in various departments of this Government——

Mr. HALE. Heads of bureaus?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I mean heads of bureaus and chiefs of divisions who receive more pay than a Senator. I do not think an argument is necessary in order to reach the conclusion that that is an indefensible and inexcusable schedule of salaries. I am ready to do the fullest measure of justice to every employee and officer of this Government; but, instead of taking the matter up in broken doses, let us be manly enough and fair enough to take up the whole subject and treat it as a whole.

I suspect that I have some idea as to why members of Congress are so timid in handling the question of their own compensation. In the Forty-third Congress a bill was passed increasing the salaries of Congressmen, both Senators and Representatives, from $5,000 a year to $7,500, and the franking privilege was stricken off, probably to appease a populace whose ire was feared.

That bill was repealed, and very promptly repealed, because the public did not relish the enactment of that law. It was branded as a back salary bill—a back salary grab—because that bill made the increase applicable to the then existing Congress, and resulted practically in increasing the pay of every Senator and every Representative $5,000—$2,500 for each year of the two years of that Congress. In my judgment the American people never would have made any objection to the passage of the bill for the increase in the salaries of Senators and Representatives, had it not been for that retroactive feature which it embraced.

However that may be, I have the right to assume that the men who are selected as the Representatives of the people or the Senators from the States have courage, candor, and manliness enough to deal with their own salaries with the same fairness and the same measure of exact justice that they deal with the salaries of every other paid official of this Government. I am ready to join hands with the Senator from Massachusetts and with every other one and take up this work of the general revision of the salaries of the officials of our Government. I am not willing to do what I even concede to be justice to one class so long as you absolutely neglect and ignore another class.

Here and now I want to say that for this reason, and for this reason only, will I not agree to increase the disproportionate pay between life-salaried officials and those who are paid only for the time they are in service from one-half to two-thirds of the amount given to the life-salaried class already. I do not intend to support this or any other bill that looks to the adjustment of the salaries of any specially favored class of our officials; but I am ready to go into the work of general revision and make the salaries of all fair, reputable, liberal, and decent.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator see that if he insists upon doing nothing for the judges, where we are all agreed that they should have some advanced pay, until we put Congress on the same basis, he is not likely to get anything done? I suppose the Senator realizes that if in this bill a provision is put increasing the pay of Senators and Representatives only to a point that would be just and reasonable the conditions are such that the bill with such an amendment would not go through?

I hope the Senator, who is an old legislator, and who says that the judges are not amply paid, will not in any way hinder the passage of this bill, which is good in itself, so far as it goes, simply because the other thing that is desirable can not now be accomplished.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am very glad of the opportunity of saying, in answer to the Senator from Maine, that I have no desire and I have no purpose to hinder or delay the action of the Senate upon this measure. I have tried distinctly to disavow any purpose of antagonizing this measure upon its merits, or I have declined to intimate that, in my judgment, it was not a justifiable increase of salary. I do not make that point at all, but I simply object or fail to support this bill because I think the disproportion between the present pay of those officials who are included in this measure is great enough in their favor, and I am not willing to increase that disproportion.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator that the disproportion exists, but you can not get the other.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator will allow me, I would suggest that I do not believe that—and I hold the same opinion now that I did in the committee when this measure was under consideration—I do not believe that this is the most popular feature that could be chosen and selected to present to the people. If you were going to prepare a general bill, overhauling and rearranging the salaries of all the officials of this Government, if you would undertake to select the most popular items and features out of it, I do not believe that an increase in the judicial salaries would be the one that would be selected. I do not think that that will commend itself to the American people with any more strength or force than the other features which have been eliminated from the measure as originally drafted and submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts. In other words, if we are hunting for what shall be the most popular measure we can offer, I think we made a mistake in eliminating the other features and confining it simply to an increase of the salaries of judicial officers.

Mr. GALLINGER. What were the other features? Did they include Senators and Representatives in Congress?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir; and they were eliminated by the action of the committee; not, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, that a majority of the committee believed that the salaries of Senators and Members of the House were sufficient, but because they believed this was the most popular——

Mr. HOAR. Oh, no. I beg pardon. I never said that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I certainly understood that to be the cause of the action of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BLACKBURN. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. I never said, thought, or dreamed of fixing this bill one way or the other because it would be popular. In my judgment the way to find out whether a bill is popular is to find out whether it is right. There is no other way in the world. But I was in favor of this modification of the measure because I thought a majority of the two Houses of Congress, of whom the committee is but an organ and servant in preparing legislation, would favor this and would not favor the other. That is what I have to say about that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Precisely, Mr. President, and I think that was exactly what I attributed to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator spoke about its being popular or unpopular.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No. I will repeat it. I think I did no injustice to the Senator's position. This is the bill of the senior Senator from Massachusetts; that is, a part of a bill introduced by the senior Senator from Massachusetts. Now, applying that crucial test of his, this was not the bill that he wanted, because it is not the bill that he introduced into the Senate and had sent to the Judiciary Committee. This is the emasculated remains of that bill. The bill which the Senator from Massachusetts introduced into the Senate and had sent to the Committee on the Judiciary embraced these other classes of Federal officials. Now, for some reason they went out of the bill, and it comes back from the Judiciary Committee in its present shape.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. There is before the Judiciary Committee one of the most important bills of the session, prepared by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], to rearrange the judicial circuits of the United States, which have become exceedingly inconvenient. I addressed to every Senator on this floor a communication asking his judgment about the proper arrangement of those circuits. I do not expect, when we report that bill, that the committee will sit down and say, "The 13 men in this room, or a majority of them, 7, think that one way of arranging these circuits is best." They will endeavor to make that bill, if they can, violating no principle, doing nothing wrong or unjust in it, a reflection of the judgment of this body. That is exactly what we did in this case.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator misapprehends my purpose, I am sure. I am not reflecting upon him for the action taken in the matter of the change in this bill or any eliminations from its original provisions. Quite the contrary. I mean to say just what the Senator has said, that the change made in this bill in committee, with his approval, was based upon the conviction that it would be more acceptable to Congress in this shape than in any other shape.

Mr. HOAR. That is it exactly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And that is all I have ever meant to attribute to the Senator.

Nor am I criticising him for that act at all. It was entirely proper. He did not want, as the organ of the Committee on the Judiciary, to come here with a bill that could not command the support of the Senate and the other House of Congress. He should not have wanted to do it. Far be it from me to complain or criticise his action. I say the bill appears before the Senate in its present reported form instead of in its original form because the Senator from Massachusetts, with a majority of the Committee on the Judiciary standing with him, believed it would be stronger before Congress in this way than it would have been in its original shape, and from that conclusion I dissent. I do not believe it is, and I repeat that if you wanted to make the strongest bill, the most acceptable bill, whether it be to the Senate or to Congress or to the country, I do not think it was wise to select and single out the judiciary, and let its benefits come alone upon that class of officials. I do not believe it has strengthened the proposition. That, however, is a mere matter of opinion.

I have said all I care to say, except to repeat what I have said more than once this morning. I do not wish to be understood as denying that the judges, whether Supreme, circuit, or district, embraced in this measure are entitled to more pay. I do not deny that proposition at all, but I do deny that their pay should be increased at this time, thereby increasing the disproportion, already too heavy, in their favor when you come to compare them with other officials of this Government.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I was not at all surprised by the statement of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] that he thinks the salaries provided for in this bill are just. He is a broad-minded man, a just man, and a generous man. But I am surprised at the reason he gives for antagonizing the bill, founded not upon any objection to what is in the bill, but based only upon the absence of provisions which he thinks ought to be in it.

Now, it is not a good reason why we should not give to the judges of the Federal courts what is confessedly a just reward for their labor that we, who hold the purse—Congress—have not, as the Senator has said, the moral courage also to vote adequate compensation to Representatives and Senators. The judges can not help us to do that. They can give us no more moral courage than we have. But we control the purse. They can have no increase of salary except by our action, and it seems to me only a fair proposition that we should give them the compensation to which all think they are entitled, and not deny them that compensation because we are not willing to give ourselves the compensation to which we think we are entitled, which we have the power to do.

Now, there is a reason for singling out the judiciary which would not apply to Congress, I think. Very many members of Congress conduct at home the business which they pursued before they entered public life—commercial and otherwise. Many members of Congress maintain their law firms, and in the vacation they try lawsuits and make professional earnings in matters entirely compatible with their public position. There are various avenues open to Senators and Representatives in Congress which are proper, and which the whole people would consider to be proper, by which in the vacation they may advantage themselves and make provision for their families hereafter. That is hardly so with the judges. In the very nature of things they are an isolated character of officials. They can not practice law in their vacations. Their opportunity to earn a dollar in the practice of their profession is gone, and not only that, but the avenues which are open to Senators and Representatives in Congress in the way of transacting business are not open to them.

These judges are as important, certainly, as any other officials of the United States. All in all we have been peculiarly fortunate in our Federal judiciary. None in the world, I think, is better, if, taken all in all, as good. These men go upon the bench. They work upon the bench, in the public service, and most of them work very hard and with great devotion, on salaries which are barely adequate and in some instances absolutely inadequate to maintain the dignity which is involved in the position they occupy, barely adequate to provide for the education of their families. When they reach 70 years of age the time for work in their profession is gone. They will have been too long from it. There is very little left for a judge who has retired to do in the way of making provision for his family.

It has been a very great grief to me—it has been a source of shame to me—that the widow of one of the greatest of our supreme judges was left practically without income. It is not a pleasant thing for a man to contemplate, and the mind of a man who is a judge ought to be free from such concern. They can not become rich, but they ought to have sufficient salaries to enable them to live decently and as such officials should live and to provide decently for their families and to make, by reason of a little economy, some fair provision for those whom they are to leave when they die. It may be the widow, it may be some invalid child, or what not. It seems to me it is not calculated to enhance the value of judges that the judge shall have ever present with him the fear that when the time comes for him to go he will have spent his whole life in the service of the public with simply compensation enough to enable him to live and with no opportunity to leave anything for those dependent upon him and for whom he should make provision.

I know a great many judges who, if they were off the bench, would be able to acquire a competence for their families. Some of these judges, if they were upon the bench in the State of New York, would receive a very much larger salary than is provided for in this bill. Talk about its being a popular bill—I think any proposition which is just and which proposes to pay to public officials like these a compensation which is no more than adequate will be popular with the American people. I believe they wish to pay to such servants in fair measure what they deserve.

Now, Mr. President, there is a reason why the proposition to increase the salaries of Senators and Representatives in Congress is a delicate one. That feeling which makes Representatives and Senators reluctant to do it is a creditable one. It is not altogether cowardice. We are temporarily the agents of the people. We are clothed by them with power to make appropriations. The money of the people is under our control, and it is not surprising to me that trustees here, public servants with power of appropriation, for public purposes, of the people's money, hesitate a little to use that power to increase their own compensation.

We all came here knowing what the salary was. I do not remember that many gentlemen have declined to come to the Senate because the salary was inadequate.

Mr. BERRY. How about Supreme Court judges?

Mr. SPOONER. I have known men to decline to become Supreme Court judges because they were not willing to sacrifice the future of their families for the honor of serving upon the bench until they had passed beyond the age during which they could earn a competence for their families.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, Rufus Choate declined the office and Benjamin R. Curtis resigned it.

Mr. BERRY. I will ask if there are not a number of citizens who have declined to be Senators or Representatives in Congress?

Mr. HOAR. The point was that the Government sought for the office two men of the greatest judicial reputations in the world. One of them refused and the other resigned on account of the inadequacy of the salary. So we did not get our choice.

Mr. SPOONER. And there have been others who have declined to accept the position because they cared more to make provision for their families, those dependent upon them, than they did for the honor of serving upon the Supreme Bench.

Mr. President, I share for one a great reluctance to vote for a bill, even though the compensation it provided were just, which would increase my own compensation. That is true, I think, with a great many members of the Senate and a great many members of the House.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to offer an amendment for the purpose of testing the sense of the Senate, and I propose to call for the yeas and nays on it. I want the Senator to comment upon it. The amendment I shall offer is as follows:

On and after the 4th day of March, 1903, the salaries of Senators and Representatives in Congress shall be $7,500 a year.

I propose to offer that amendment for the purpose of testing whether the Senate has come to the conclusion that this ought to be done, leaving out all back pay. It applies purely to the future. I will ask for a vote upon it without further remarks. I now offer the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the amendment will be voted down. I hope the Senate will deal with this bill to increase the salaries of judges as a distinct proposition, and I hope the Senate will deal with the proposition to increase the salaries of Senators and Representatives in Congress upon its own merits and by itself. I do not think, with our knowledge of the reluctance of Members and Senators to pass a salary bill for themselves, that we ought to load down and endanger the passage of this measure, which almost every man agrees ought to pass, by any amendment like that proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. I want to test the sense of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. And I shall vote against putting it on this bill.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] closed his argument by saying that almost every man agrees that there should be an increase in the salaries of these judges. I do not know whether he intended that to apply to the Senate or to the country at large, nor do I know how he is able to ascertain what every man in the country believes. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] says the people are demanding the passage of this bill. I have not heard of any such demand. I have not heard any petitions read at the desk. I have not seen accounts of any meetings throughout the country of any sort of organization asking for this measure; and therefore I say I do not believe the people are demanding any such proposition.

There is one other thing—and I want the Senator from Wisconsin, if he will, to give me his attention for a moment. He began by complimenting the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] by saying he was a broad man, a liberal man, a generous man, and therefore favored this increase. I do not think it can be said that those who do not believe in this bill are open to the charge of being either narrow-minded or ungenerous. I did not put my opposition on the ground that it did not increase the salary of Senators and Representatives. That is not my objection to the bill. The justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, if I remember correctly, were first paid $6,000 a year.

Mr. STEWART. Less than that.

Mr. BERRY. Less than that; and some of the great men and the greatest judges who have ever lived, men who rendered great decisions and rendered great service to the country, have been secured for less than $6,000 a year. The salary was then raised, I believe, to $8,000 a year, and then it was put up to $10,000, with the Chief Justice at $10,500.

Now, when Senators stand here and tell me that a man with $10,000 a year during his entire life—because the salary does not cease when he ceases to be a judge after having arrived at 70 years of age—can not support his family upon it, I tell them I believe they are mistaken in the situation. I believe that $10,000 a year with the honor of a lifetime position is sufficient for these men, and they ought not to be paid more. While there may be exceptions here and there, I believe that sum will command the very best talent. It is only here recently, when people began to measure everything by a dollar-and-cent basis, that gentlemen fail to consider the great honor of sitting upon the Supreme Bench of the United States. You do not consider that that is a lifetime position, but you seek to say to this country that men of ability can not live for $10,000 a year.

In regard to the other judges I said nothing, but the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], who, I am sorry, is not in his seat, made a remark to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], and I shall be glad if the Senator from Massachusetts will answer my question as I ask it. There is a statute which provides that district and circuit judges shall receive their actual expenses while holding court at other points, provided it shall not exceed $10 a day, and the Senator from Kentucky stated that those judges, in every instance, if I understood him, collected that $10 a day from the Government under that statute whether their expenses amounted to that much or not. Is that a correct statement?

Mr. HOAR. I did not hear the Senator from Kentucky make any such statement, and I do not think he made it, as I should have observed it if he had.

Mr. BERRY. I not only heard him make it, but I asked him if he made it, and he said he did make it, and that it was the truth. I think if you will ask him he will verify it. I stand here to say that if, under the statute read by the Senator from Massachusetts, any circuit judge or any district judge holding court elsewhere than in his own home took $10 a day when his actual expenses were less than $10 a day he took that from the Government to which he was not entitled. I think it is somewhat of a serious charge to bring against these judges, and that is the reason why I ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether it be true. He gave that as an excuse and as the reason why these circuit and district judges' salaries should be increased, because he said when away from home they were entitled under this statute to take, and, as I understood it, they always took, the $10 a day. We all know that throughout certain sections of this country it does not cost $10 a day.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. He has appealed to me. The provision I read applies in the case where the judge is attending the circuit court of appeals. In the case in the district court it is when he goes out of his own district. Now, in those cases the judges are summoned to important business centers. Courts are held in important business centers, and the judge must have for his convenience something more than the ordinary hotel accommodations which most people would require. He must have a room large enough to enable him to work with his books and to dictate to his secretary, to appoint hearings in the evenings or at chambers in the afternoons, in the daytime probably, but certainly in the evenings, and to receive members of the bar who come to him. I am not speaking of any social relations.

I do not believe there would be one case in five where such accommodations as a judge would require for the public business could be had for less than $10 a day. I am sure it could not be in Boston. I am sure it could not be in New York. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] will tell me whether it can be in his part of the country—San Francisco.

Mr. STEWART. San Francisco, no.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it is not for me to suggest what any other Senator shall say in debate. It is solely for his own judgment, but I am sorry that any Senator thinks it is his duty to make such an imputation on a judge of a court of the United States.

Mr. BERRY. To whom does the Senator allude as making an imputation—the Senator from Kentucky or myself?

Mr. HOAR. I said at first that I did not believe the Senator from Kentucky said it.

Mr. BERRY. I trust a page will find the Senator from Kentucky and ask him to come into the Chamber. If there is any doubt about what he said, I should like him to say. I want to say to the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to say one more sentence?

Mr. BERRY. All right.

Mr. HOAR. I think, myself, that neither of the Senators means to make any such imputation.

Mr. BERRY. I meant to say precisely what I did say. I say under that statute the judge is entitled to whatever his expenses may be, provided they do not exceed $10 a day. Does the Senator deny that, or is that an imputation upon the judge? Then I add further, and I did say it, that if the judge whose expenses were only $5 a day collected under that statute $10 a day he collected that which the law did not authorize; and will the Senator from Massachusetts deny that? Will the Senator take issue with that? I put the question to him directly and specifically as to whether he will take issue with that. If that be an imputation upon the judge, Mr. President, I have made it. I simply said that I did not think the reason given by the Senator from Kentucky as to why the salaries should be increased, because they were getting already what the increase would amount to by reason of the $10 a day, was a good reason.

Now, I do not know whether any judge ever charged more than his actual expenses or not, and I make no imputation upon any judge; but I repeat he is entitled to what the law gives him. The law says his "actual expenses," and the law means his actual expenses; and no judge should take more than that. I am absolutely certain that some judges whom I know would not take more than that.

Mr. President, I have but a word or two more to say. I shall not vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada, because I do not believe it ought to pass. I shall not vote to increase the salaries of these judges, because I believe they are receiving enough already. If that be narrow-minded, ungenerous, or illiberal, then I take the charge to myself.

I say that $10,000 a year for a Supreme Court judge, where the salary continues during his life, and it may be for years after he ceases to work, is sufficient. I say in addition to that that every Senator and every member of Congress, when he ran for the office, knew what the salary was to be. He was anxious to have the place at that salary and he has no right now to step in and take money from the Treasury that he may be paid more.

I say also that the same argument applies to every judge of the courts. When they accepted the place they knew the amount of salary. It is not the people of the country, as the Senator from Nevada would have you believe, who are clamoring for this increase. It is the judges themselves and their friends who urge it.

I do not believe that the bill ought to pass in either shape. I am against the amendment, and I am against the bill whether it is amended or not.

Mr. McCOMAS. Mr. President, this bill from the Judiciary Committee shall receive my vote. The objections made are that it does not go far enough as to Senators and Members of Congress, and that the difference resulting between the present salaries of Congressmen and the projected salaries of judges makes a disparity too great. If that be true, it is because of a certain line of consideration influencing the minds of Senators and Members of Congress, which I, in the brief time here, do not propose to consume minutes in discussing.

If it be true, as some say, that the salaries of Members and Senators should be increased, that field is open for discussion and for vote. If it be true that the salaries should not be increased and the disparity between what they receive and what is here given the judiciary is too great, that can be remedied at another time. I favor this bill because it includes simply the Federal judiciary, whose compensation and control and jurisdiction are so largely intrusted to the legislative branch. If we can not do what some men believe to be entirely just, we should discharge this trust. All the Federal judges are included in this bill, the Supreme Court, the circuit courts, the district courts, the Court of Claims, the court of appeals, and the supreme court of the District of Columbia. The Territorial judges of short tenure are not here dealt with.

For myself, when Senators say the salary they receive is not adequate, I do not deny it. But that is another question. Members of Congress are in a large percentage poor men. There are many Senators on this floor who are poor men, and they have a double embarrassment. Some of us who know it know what an embarrassment it is to be poor and to be thought rich. It is tantalizing, perplexing, entangling.

Mr. SPOONER. And very expensive.

Mr. McCOMAS. And, as the Senator from Wisconsin suggests, it is also very expensive. But in our great country, with largely increasing questions of tremendous importance, the Federal judges are not now paid what just men would regard as fair compensation if they seriously considered the proposition.

The Senator from Arkansas has said that there is no clamor for this measure; that there are no petitions of citizens here. I should think ill of the Federal judiciary if there were organized efforts presented at the bar of the Senate or petitions in respect of the increase of the salaries of the Federal judges. I do not believe there is any clamor among the people. Men are busy with their affairs, and human nature is selfish. All that I claim for this proposition is that when the people of the country come to consider it they can not properly say it is not a just measure, reasonable and prudent, while many would consider that it was not adequate provision for the judges of a great nation such as ours. In comparison with those countries which rank with us in the world there is no comparison between these salaries and those they give for like judicial functions in their exercise and administration. In comparison with some of the larger States of our own Union it is small. It is true that the judges in the States hold for long terms and the judges here are for life, but that is only a difference of moderate importance and not enough to be used as an argument against this proposition.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has stated broadly and frankly that there should not be a disparity between Senators and Members and the judiciary in this respect. As the interests grow larger and larger it becomes exceedingly important in a country which has been most fortunate in the Federal judiciary that the men who are performing these functions should be further and further removed from human embarrassments and human temptations. They are men of like kind with all other men. They should be removed from the ordinary besetments. If among these Federal judges there are some who, as lawyers in practice, had gathered some estate, they go upon the bench limited and hampered in respect of investments as other men are not, because a judge should not disqualify himself in the trial of questions by investments or interests that might by any casual chance disqualify him or remotely make him subject to any bias in the administration of justice. Members of the House and of the Senate are liable to many more exactions, requests, and applications for pecuniary expenditure on their part than judges are. Still, they have some opportunity for getting an income during a recess of Congress in their business, their avocation, or in their profession.

If we can not do what all men think should be justly done, we should elevate, guard, and properly maintain the Federal judiciary, whose field of administration in the interpretation of weighty and great questions is widening and ever widening in a great country.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, did anybody ever hear from a good, straight, characteristic American audience of intelligent, just, sensible men a demand for the reduction of the salary of a Congressman? I never did. Was anybody ever told that we ought to increase our salaries? Yes. Many times I have heard the question asked, "Why in the world do you not give yourselves a better salary? Your expenses are greater than any ordinary citizen. You have left, perhaps, a business just as good or a more lucrative position than that of a Congressman." I firmly believe that the general sense of the country would say, if we added one or two thousand to our salaries, we had a perfect right to do so.

I do not wish to bring in personal experience, but I am free to say that I could not stay here if it were not for some outside resources. I have something of a family, and I have dear relatives whom I have been in the habit of helping, and that is a legitimate expense. I would be obliged to go away if it were not for a precious dividend that I derive from another source.

I do not think the country expects us to live in that way. I would be satisfied, as far as my individual self is concerned, to make the salary of a Congressman $6,000 a year, but I shall vote for $7,500 in default of an amendment of a different character, and I can go home to my people and in the biggest hall we can get there be applauded for saying that I voted for it.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I wish to add but a word, Mr. President, to what has already been said upon this measure, reported by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

I am most cordially in favor of the proposed increase of salaries of the Federal judiciary. From a somewhat general practice in the Federal courts I am led to the conclusion that the Federal judges are most inadequately paid. I do not believe that the bar and the people of the United States, which are discriminating and just, will regard the proposed increase as more than simple absolute justice.

I do not think we should consider the suggestion urged by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] that the present judges accepted their offices upon the basis of present compensation and that therefore there should be no increase. We should make their salaries fair and adequate—in keeping, if you please, with the importance and dignity of the great offices they hold—and such as to invite the best talent at the bar when it becomes necessary to supply vacancies in the future.

The Chief Justice and Supreme justices of the United States are well entitled to the small increase which the bill allows them. This is almost universally conceded. I have rarely heard anyone who thought it too much, while, on the contrary, many have expressed the opinion that it was not enough.

The circuit judges, Mr. President, have within the past few years been given important appellate jurisdiction. They are now exercising appellate power as important almost as that exercised by the Supreme Court itself. The circuit courts of appeals have no jurisdiction of questions involving the interpretation and application of the Federal Constitution and of certain other cases specified in the act creating them, but with respect to a vast multitude of great and vital questions these courts, composed of circuit judges and district judges, exercise most important appellate jurisdiction. The creation of the circuit court of appeals has greatly increased the labors of the district judges; much of the work which formerly devolved upon the circuit judges is now done by them. The judges of the Court of Claims have not received a just measure of increase. Their functions are important, and they have been always underpaid.

I feel that this increase is so just, so eminently fair, that I would not wish to see the bill jeopardized by the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. With very great pleasure.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] is now on the floor. I stated that he had said that these district and circuit judges in all cases charge $10 a day. The Senator from Massachusetts doubted that statement and said he did not so understand it. I should like to have the Senator from Kentucky state whether he did say it or not.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, what I said was this——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will yield; although I had almost concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If it interferes with the Senator from Indiana, I prefer not to say anything now.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky. I will take but a moment after the Senator concludes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will simply say my statement was, that under the law, wherever a Federal circuit judge or a district judge is engaged in aiding in the holding of a court of appeals at some point other than his residence, he is allowed his actual expenses, not to exceed $10 a day. That, I take it, is the law. I said further that, so far as my information went, in all cases where allowances were thus made the maximum was allowed.

Mr. HOAR. That is very different from what I understood. If I may be allowed one moment, I supposed, as I stated when the Senator was out, that in nine out of every ten of such cases the actual expenses would be $10 a day. From what I know about Boston and New York and the sort of a room a judge must have to receive counsel and study and have books and a secretary, if he dictates to a secretary, practically, I suppose, in nine cases out of ten the judge, if he itemized his expenses, would show a larger amount than $10 a day, and I suppose also that the practice of the judges differ. Some of them send in an itemized statement of expenses where they are less, and others simply take the $10 a day as expenses without going into the items. But I do not believe, and I do not think any Senator on the floor believes, that there is any judge of our United States courts who, being entitled to receive his expenses and no more when the expenses were only $5 a day, would charge $10 for it.

Mr. BERRY. I hope not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Indiana may be allowed to finish his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, and then the request can be made.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOAR. I hope that the unfinished business may be laid aside temporarily, to be taken up at any moment it is called for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I only wish to say a word in conclusion.

I share with others in the belief that, relatively, the Senators of the United States and the members of the House of Representatives are poorly paid. I do not believe that there are any officials in the service of the Government who render more important service, more faithful service, for less compensation than is rendered by the members of the American Congress.

I share with others in a feeling of delicacy concerning the question of compensation—a question which must in the nature of things affect in a measure myself. I would prefer that that subject be not considered now, at least.

I may say that I did not support in the Committee on the Judiciary the subject-matter of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], which was embodied in the original bill and presented by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I believe that subject should, as I said before, be deferred at least to another date, and that the bill increasing the salaries of judges and reported by the committee should be considered by itself.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me one question?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. As to the reason given that it will affect the interests of members of Congress, will not that be always the case?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. It will.

Mr. STEWART. This question has, to my knowledge, been up for the last thirty years and the same delicacy has existed and it will probably always exist. Does the Senator contend that for that reason salaries of members of Congress can never be increased?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Certainly not; I say that is a subject we need not consider now. Let us confine ourselves to the bill that is reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, and if the Senate wishes to consider the question of increase of the salaries of Senators and members of Congress, it can be done upon another bill and at another time.

Mr. STEWART. It can be considered and adopted on this amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I wish that we may have a vote on the amendment, unless some Senator wishes to debate the matter further. Everybody understands the question thoroughly, and I know that my colleague will consent that a vote may be taken.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], who is not now in the Chamber, said he desires to speak on this bill.

Mr. PETTUS. The bill will necessarily have to go over.

Mr. LODGE. Let the bill go over.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it go over.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes to the Calendar.

Mr. ELKINS subsequently said: I understand the judicial bill was laid aside until Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is on the Calendar.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8327) to amend an act entitled "An act for the protection of the lives of miners in the Territories" was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The bill (H. R. 10308) to provide for a permanent Census Office was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Census.

AMENDMENT OF DISTRICT CODE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 3199) to amend the code of law for the District of Columbia, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I entered a motion to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed. The House bill on that subject has passed.

The motion was agreed to.

HELEN A. B. DU BARRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (S. 1037) granting an increase of pension to Helen A. B. Du Barry, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. The votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed have been reconsidered. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 2008) to authorize the city of Duluth, Minn., to construct and maintain, or cause to be constructed and maintained, a car transfer over the Duluth Canal, and for that purpose to occupy certain lands of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 9342) to amend the code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901; and

A bill (H. R. 10368) to provide for the removal of snow and ice from cross walks and gutters in the city of Washington, D. C.

PHILIPPINE TARIFF BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5833) temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have proposed an amendment to the bill, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

The SECRETARY. Insert the following:

That the provisions of an act entitled "An act to revise and amend the tariff laws of the Philippine Archipelago," enacted by the United States Philippine Commission on the 17th day of September, 1901, shall be and remain in full force and effect, and there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles coming into the Philippine Archipelago from the United States the rates of duty which are required by the said act to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from foreign countries into said archipelago.

SEC. 2. That with the consent of the lawful authority in said islands there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon articles coming into any other port of the United States from the Philippine Archipelago the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from foreign countries: Provided, That upon all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Archipelago coming into any other port of the United States from the Philippine Archipelago there shall be levied, collected, and paid only 75 per cent of the rates of duty aforesaid: And provided further, That the rates of duty which are required hereby to be levied, collected, and paid upon products of the Philippine Archipelago coming into any other port of the United States shall be less any duty or taxes levied, collected, and paid thereon upon the exportation thereof from the Philippine Archipelago, as provided by the act of the United States Philippine Commission referred to in section 1 of this act, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, but all articles the growth and product of the Philippine Islands now admitted into the ports of the United States free of duty and exported from said islands for use and consumption in the United States shall be hereafter exempt from any export duties imposed in the Philippine Islands.

SEC. 3. That with the consent of the lawful authority in said islands, in addition to any tonnage dues or taxes now imposed by the government of the Philippine Islands, the same tonnage taxes shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all foreign vessels coming into the United States from the Philippine Archipelago, or engaged in traffic between the ports of the Philippine Archipelago, which are required by law to be levied, collected, and paid upon vessels coming into the United States from foreign countries: Provided, however, That until otherwise provided by law, the provisions of law restricting to vessels of the United States the transportation of passengers and merchandise directly or indirectly from one port of the United States to another port of the United States shall not be applicable to foreign vessels engaging in trade between the Philippine Archipelago and the United States, or between ports in the Philippine Archipelago.

SEC. 4. That the duties and taxes collected in the Philippine Archipelago in pursuance of this act, and all duties and taxes collected in the Philippine Islands or in the United States upon articles coming from the Philippine Archipelago and upon foreign vessels coming therefrom, shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States, and an equal sum is hereby appropriated as a separate fund and paid into the treasury of the Philippine Islands, to be transferred to and used and expended for the government and benefit of said islands.

SEC. 5. The civil government established in the Philippine Islands under and by virtue of the order of the President of the United States dated April 7, 1900, is ratified and confirmed. The said government constitutes an executive department in the Government of the United States. The power to appoint officers in such government, not conferred in such order upon the civil governor, shall hereafter be exercised by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and the power of removal of such officers, including such as are now in office, but excepting such as are authorized to be appointed by the civil governor, is vested in the President of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. Section 5 will come in at any part of the bill where it may be convenient to insert it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama, on which he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have not listened very closely to the debates on this question in the Senate. In fact, there has been a great deal said on the floor of the Senate about this measure or in connection with it that seems to me to be not very germane. But I have heard no objection as yet made to the tariff itself as proposed to be laid upon the Philippine Islands. Whether you call it an import duty or an export duty I have heard no objection made to it. I take it for granted, therefore, that the tariff is a just one, and also that it is necessary.

I am quite convinced there are necessities existing in the Philippine Islands for making differences between the tariff that applies to those islands and the tariff that applies, for instance, to the State of Alabama, if there is power in the Constitution to do it. The condition of the Philippine Islands is such, for instance, that if they are not permitted to import rice from China it is said that those people are threatened oftentimes with starvation, and they are not in a condition now to be worried or alarmed about a question of that kind. It is very true, we all believe, that after those magnificent islands are developed they will produce rice and breadstuffs enough of every kind, through the labors of a tolerably frugal and industrious people, to supply all their wants. But at the present time it appears to be a very urgent political necessity that we should try to find some way of providing for the importation into the Philippine Islands from China of rice for the purpose of sustaining human life in some of those islands, in many of them, indeed.

Now, I wish to announce in the outset of my remarks, Mr. President, that in my opinion Congress has no constitutional authority, acting within its own powers, to levy a discriminating tariff upon imports, and that Congress by itself has no power to levy any export duty whatever. I believe in the policy of free trade between all parts of the United States, whether they are covered by the flag or the Constitution or both. Whether those gentlemen who are capable of making dissections of very fine distinctions, separating a hair between the west and northwest side, are able to find room for a doctrine as heterodox as I think this is, is a matter of no concern to me, when I can read the Constitution of the United States in a plain, sensible, satisfactory way, and find sufficient authority for the propositions which I have embraced in this amendment, which the Senate will notice have almost exclusive reference to the powers of Congress. In this amendment I adopt the language of the act. I adopt the affirmation of the laws as they exist in the Philippine Islands. I do not go back to the question of whether those laws were enacted under military power or whether they were enacted under the broad and latitudinous powers conferred by the Spooner amendment to the Army appropriation bill. We find them there. They are in force, and they are in acknowledged force, in the islands and acknowledged force in Congress. We act upon them, and I am in favor of adopting them just as they are, subject, of course, to such changes as may be made in them hereafter by proper authority.

If this bill passes, Mr. President, in the form in which it is, I hope that it will bring forward in the next Democratic national convention a declaration about to this effect: "That the Democratic party of the United States is in favor of free trade between all parts of the United States, whether covered by the flag or the Constitution or both," so as to exclude all the contentions that are possible to be made upon those nice lines of refinement and disquisition which have given so much concern to Congress and also to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Unquestionably, according to the Democratic view of the subject, according to my view of the subject, Congress has no power to enact any other than uniform laws in respect to imposts or duties upon imports from foreign countries. I do not propose to worry myself or the Senate by going back and making any investigation or attempt at reconciliation or the elucidation of the various queer conflicting ideas which have obtained in the Supreme Court of the United States upon that question, leaving a majority of that court—and generally a majority of one—to decide the gravest possible constitutional questions, and sometimes, as we understand it, placing the court in absolute conflict with itself.

Congress has powers under the Constitution to deal with this subject without regard to uniformity in tariff laws, but they have not as yet been appealed to. We have lived for about one hundred and thirteen years under the Constitution of the United States and the precise question that is presented in this amendment, so far as I know, has not heretofore been brought to the attention of Congress. That proposition is based upon section 10, of Article I, of the Constitution of the United States.

In order that I make myself as clear as possible about this, Mr. President, I will read the form in which the tenth section of the first article was presented in the constitutional convention and show its progress until its final adoption. In the plan of the Federal Constitution offered by Mr. Charles Pinckney, when he came to Article XI of that plan he had the following form of language to define the powers of Congress:

No State shall grant letters of marque and reprisal, or enter into treaty, or alliance, or confederation; nor grant any title of nobility; nor, without the consent of the legislature of the United States, lay any impost on imports.

The matter went under discussion in the Constitutional Convention for quite a while, but it underwent no change, and no action in the convention was taken upon it until the balance of the Constitution, and particularly Article VIII of the Constitution, had been very thoroughly discussed. In consequence of a proviso, moved by Colonel Mason and agreed to on the 13th of September (p. 719), this part of the section was laid aside in favor of the following substitute, namely:

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws: and the net produce of all duties and imposts, laid by any State on imports or exports, shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of the Congress.

When section 8 came to be finally reported and acted upon in the revised and finally formulated Constitution it reads thus:

SECTION 8.

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

That is the form in which it stands to-day. Section 9 of Article I of the Constitution was adopted in its present form. Section 10 takes up a new situation, new rights, new powers, and new possibilities, providing for events of the most important character the convention ever considered, and it reads as follows:

No State shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws: and the net produce of all duties and imposts, laid by any State on imports or exports, shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of the Congress.

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage, keep troops, or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power, or engage in war, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay.

The contest in regard to this subject of the power of the States to levy imposts or duties upon imports or exports was one that caused deep feeling in that convention, because the States had all exercised that power and had derived the principal means of their support from money thus derived. It led to much of consultation and debate, so that when it came to the imposition upon the States of the disabilities that are found in section 9 and section 10, those disabilities were qualified with absolute and active powers in favor of the State governments.

Now, what does this language mean?

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws.

Here is an absolute power given to the States, without the consent of Congress, to levy imposts or duties upon imports and exports for executing their inspection laws. The inspection laws were matters of importance to the States—the inspection of provisions coming in, medicines, people, and whatever else it might be necessary on the part of a State to inspect for the sake of preserving its police powers, and also the health, peace, and security of the body politic. The States reserved to themselves the unqualified, unrestricted right of levying imposts and duties on imports and exports that might be absolutely necessary for the execution of their inspection laws. There is no doubt that Congress has the right of supervision, to say whether or not the duties thus levied were absolutely necessary for executing the inspection laws, but that does not destroy this reserved right of the States.

Now we come to the other branch of this subject.

We have turned away from the powers of Congress, which are required in their exercise to be uniform in all matters of taxation of imports from foreign countries, and which absolutely excludes Congress from the power of levying an export duty on anything that goes out of any State, and we come to the proposition whether or not a reservation has been made of the power of a definite and clear character in favor of the States, that they may, with the consent of Congress, levy duties and imposts on imports and exports.

Mr. President, it is simply beyond the power of the human mind to read this clause out of this Constitution without destroying its entire integrity. So we see that the previous proposition in section 8 has not smothered and destroyed that which is secured in section 10. After the convention had passed over section 8 and had defined the powers of Congress, then commenced the regulation of the powers of the States in sections 9 and 10. And here is distinctly declared the proposition that a State may, with the consent of Congress, levy imposts or duties on exports or imports. Congress can not levy any export duty, but a State may, though it must do so with the consent of Congress.

What, then, was the object of this? What purpose was intended to be accomplished by it? Evidently that the States might find themselves in such a situation that it might become absolutely necessary, in the opinion of Congress, that they should have the right to levy an export duty or an import duty upon a particular specific article without reference to its general uniformity. Uniformity in enactment in the imposition of duties upon foreign commerce coming into this country belongs to Congress, and controls Congress and Congress alone. It does not control the States, except that Congress must agree to whatever the States choose to enact upon that subject before the law becomes effective. The State of Alabama, Mr. President, has a perfect right to pass a tariff law, though her tariff law would be of no avail whatever until the Congress of the United States agreed to it. When, however, it is agreed to by the Congress of the United States, it makes no difference whether it is uniform throughout the United States or not, for the rule of uniformity does not apply to concurrent action of the States and the Congress of the United States, but it applies to the action of Congress as the supreme law of the land without consulting these States.

I do not remember that any occasion has arisen in the history of the United States where this matter became pertinent until this bill was introduced into the Senate. But here is a bill that provides for the levy by an act of Congress of export duties on articles brought from one part of the United States to another, and there is no escape from a palpable violation of the Constitution except to say that those islands from which the export is made are not a part of the United States. We get ourselves into that inextricable tangle or controversy of conflicting opinions when we get upon that ground, and say that the Congress of the United States has the right to levy an export duty. We find it plainly forbidden. It is an export duty on articles exported from the Philippines to the United States. It is true the duties are levied here instead of in the Philippines, but it makes no difference as to the place where they are levied. They are export duties. On the shipment of goods between Georgia and Alabama, if a tax or tariff was laid upon them it would be no more an export duty than that; and there is no occasion, there is no possible necessity, for our involving ourselves in this category or in this dilemma when we give effect to section 10 of the first article of the Constitution of the United States.

I therefore propose to change this bill by saying that with the consent of the lawful authorities in the Philippine Islands these enactments may be made, so that this palpable and plain violation of the uniformity of taxation shall find a ground upon which it can be justified. It has a ground on which it can be justified in the tenth section of the first article of the Constitution. Then, why should we not rest upon it?

Mr. President, I think if Senators will indulge themselves in a little reflection about this subject before this bill comes to a final vote they will find that on many occasions the usefulness of this tenth section of the first article in the Government of this country will not only be manifest, but it is immense. It shows the wonderful powers given by our fathers in this Constitution for accommodating the expansion, I will call it, of the United States of America and the future adaptation of our Government to the needs of the particular country over which our flag and our Constitution and our laws may prevail.

If we should take in twice as much territory as we now have we should not violate the Constitution of the United States, if the decisions of our Supreme Court are to be respected, by the mere fact of including more territory within our domain, and if we have not that power we have been doing some things that are extremely wrong in policy, if not wrong in governmental action. Having that power, having the right to expand, as we call it, perhaps not by conquest, not by force of arms, but through the lead of higher and nobler powers than even arms possess, we have the right, and will exercise it hereafter, no doubt, as we continue in our great career as a free, liberal, constitutional Government. When that can be done in such way as to save the peculiar institutions of those people from the very narrow, hard, strait-jacket kind of legislation that is provided in the eighth article of section 1 of the Constitution, we shall then begin to realize that we have a career before us, one that will admit the principles of free constitutional Government, with the consent of the governed, to any country or any place to which our authority may hereafter be extended. In my amendment the consent of the governed is included and is required when it relates to legislation suited to their peculiar conditions.

I speak here of the authority, the lawful authority, of the Government in the Philippines. Some of my Democratic brethren, I have no doubt, will wish to take issue with me upon the fact that there is any lawful authority in the Philippines, that there is any lawful government there. I can not question that, Mr. President, as a matter of fact, neither can I question it as a matter of law, although I can very well question some of the steps by which this fact has been accomplished. But it is an accomplished fact, and it is one from which the Government of the United States can not possibly recede. We have made our bed and we must lie upon it. There is a government in the Philippines, and I am very glad to be able to say a very good government, suited to the character of those people and the situation in which we found them, a government which has already added greatly to the advantages that those people had at the time the Spanish authority was in vogue in the Philippines.

When we speak about a lawful government in a territory, an area of country that is within our jurisdiction, and that we have already included in form and substance within the powers and duties and obligations of civil government, all that constitutes rightful government, if our memory will allow us to trace the history of our own affairs back to the date of our own Constitution, and before that time, we shall find that the governments of our Territories, every one of them, and of the Indian tribes, every one of them, find their perfect sanction in the Constitution of the United States. Mr. President, it would require, perhaps, days for the reading of the history and the recital of the actual statutes that we have enacted from the date of our Constitution down to the present time for the government of the Indian tribes found within our own borders. They are as various as the tribes themselves.

To some of them we have given the smallest possible modicum of civil authority. I will take those tribes, for instance, that have what we call Indian courts. These are people, they are citizens, of the United States in the broadest sense of the word; that is to say, they owe their allegiance to us as a Government and we owe them protection; and when you have expressed those two ideas you have got the full depth, length, breadth, and height of citizenship of the United States—allegiance and protection corresponding in correlative rights and powers cover the whole field. These people are in that condition, whether they be blanket Indians or any other Indians, and we have by acts of Congress permitted them to organize Indian courts to try men of their own tribe by their own judges—the Indian agent, participating or not—and trying them for offenses against Indian law and punishing them. They are a people; they have constitutional and natural rights; they have opportunities to rise as high as any of us if they can muster the courage to make the march.

We put no chains or restrictions upon them at all, but when we find them in a condition of absolute prostration, in ignorance, and in savagery, we say to them, "Organize little courts for those men who commit offenses against your tribe and punish them, and we will see that you do it right, except that you shall not execute capital punishment upon them without our consent." Now, there is a power exercised by these Indian tribes, with the consent of Congress, under and in accordance with the Constitution. It is not a full exercise of those powers, but it is sufficient for the occasion and the people.

When we came to deal with the Five Civilized Tribes, out in the Indian Territory, we entered into contracts with them and made treaties with them repeatedly, under which those men have the right to establish the highest order of civil government, and they have made a marvelous success.

I have read the constitutions of those Five Civilized Tribes and I have read the decisions of their supreme courts, written out and printed—and printed in the Territory. I have read their statutes, some of them published in the Cherokee alphabet and some published in the English language; I have looked all through the wonderful and marvelous scheme of government that those Indians have organized, and yet they are not self-governing in the fullest extent of American citizenship—not fully so.

They have not risen to that degree of eminence in civil government to which our Territories have attained and have had allowed to them, and yet their government is entirely consistent with the Constitution of the United States. It is local self-government in a very high and in a very excellent form, one which commends itself to the admiration of all civilized nations.

We have enabled these wild men that I used to see when, I was a child, stepping about in almost absolute nakedness through their home reservation, where I happened to reside at the time, to do all this. They are a splendid community, with local constitutions, supreme courts, and all the paraphernalia of a civil government under the Constitution of the United States and in accordance with it, in the full enjoyment of those rights and powers of a civil and political character which belong to still other communities in this country.

Now, where do we get the authority; where is the spring fountain of all this law, every particle of which is purely American in its type and is designed and adapted only for the purpose of working out those splendid propositions of government and the elevation of the race that we belong to, arranged by the wisdom of the fathers of this country and by no other country in the world?

What is the purpose of what we call Territorial governments, local governments? What is the object intended to be accomplished by them? I answer, It is the maturing of these people to accept and assist us or themselves in carrying into effect principles of civil liberty that are guaranteed to men, to communities, to counties, to States, and to tribes under the Constitution of the United States.

No man can find in any single recital of an act of Congress, or in any speech ever made in the House or in the Senate, in any message ever delivered to the Congress of the United States by a President, or in any decision of the Supreme Court of the United States anything else than the determined purpose of the people of the United States in dealing with men whom we call inferiors—and they are inferiors in intelligence—to lift them into the full possession of all the liberties and rights, independence and self-support that belong to the possibilities of the human character.

So, in our colonies, as some call them, in the expansion of our territorial system, no purpose has ever been disclosed, as none has ever been entertained, except that we would extend over these new communities the whole vitality of the power of the Constitution of the United States and its Government, with all the restrictions and restraints that are or shall become applicable to the situation of the people to whom it was actually applied.

England colonizes for the purpose of bringing the myriads who are in her colonies in subjection to the Crown. And so does Germany, and so has France, hitherto, and I suppose she will continue to do it. The object of those colonizations is to create dependencies which have no right to object or question, even by speech or utterance, the supremacy of the sovereign power and that they are subject to it. We do not colonize, or expand, or create new territories for purposes of that kind.

The American system is absolutely distinct from the European system of colonization in all its principles and purposes, because our purpose is to build up the people over whom our authority extends, so that they will become competent and proper members of a republican government under a written constitution. The purposes and policy of European colonization are just the reverse. They are to hold people in subjection to the crown until they are released, either by the mercy or charity of the crown, or until they do like we did in 1776, light the fires of liberty upon their altars and go into resistance against the authority of the crown. Our progress is through peace, by recommending our institutions to the consciences of men. Theirs is by the sword.

Now, this form of government was established in the United States before the Constitution, and there is nothing so essentially American that has been established and promulgated in the great history of this Republic as this thing that we call a territorial form of government. It is the training school of the Republic. More than two years before the Constitution was ratified Virginia made a cession to the Confederated States of the great Northwestern Territory, putting it under certain conditions and obligations which that Congress saw proper to respect and execute.

There was a provision in that instrument for the creation of new States. There are provisions in it which extended to personal rights and liberties. There are provisions for the government of this wilderness territory by the Congress of the United States that look to its gradual development into sovereign States. There are provisions also for the establishment of territorial governments after the white population in the Territories became 5,000 strong. It was a magna charta of territorial government. It has stood from that time to this.

There is not a provision of the Territorial government of the Northwest Territory that has ever been repealed or modified except to suit peculiar conditions. But the organic features of the territorial structure of law have been maintained from that time to this without repeal and without modification, and we have built, and built, and built in every direction upon those foundations, and so far we have never built a colony like those of Europe.

We have always built our colonies or our dependencies or our expansions or our Territories with reference to the fact that when these people should grow up into a sufficient capacity they would be welcomed and received even as States in the American Union, or if not received as States at least should enjoy liberties equal to those of States; for we see now around us every day, and we are in constant contact with the fact, Territorial governments, as there have been heretofore, which enjoy just as much liberty as any State in the American Union, as much freedom from interruption or interference as any State in the American Union.

I do not know that I have ever seen but one bill pass the Senate controlling the action of a Territorial legislature, and that was on the subject of some bonds issued by Arizona, I believe, as to whether they should be made payable in silver or gold. A political question crept into their laws that belonged to us, and not to them particularly, and there was some change made in the law of Arizona upon that subject.

But the very rarest instances of legislation on our books are those relating to the repeal or modification of legislation by Territories. We do not interfere with their governors. We do not interfere with the decisions of their courts, except when an appeal goes to the Supreme Court of the United States, and it is there revised as if it had come up from Alabama or any other State. Save the fact that they have no representatives in this Senate and no voting representatives in the House, it is almost impossible to draw a distinction between a Territorial government in the United States and the government of a State.

They have been built up by the indulgence and the assistance of Congress until they have assumed to themselves all of the elements of sovereignty except our consent that they may have seats in this Chamber and in the other House. You may take one of these Territories now, and admit their Senators and admit their Representatives in the other House, and ratify the constitution which they themselves make without our adding one word to it, and they are States, fully panoplied as any State in the Union. They need nothing but our consent, which they are seeking very earnestly, in order to get into the Union.

All this progress, all this growth, has not only been in accordance with, but it has actually originated in, the government for the Northwestern territory. I will not stop to read the decision in Texas v. White, but I want to refer to it here to show that the Supreme Court has decided that these communities which we call Territorial governments, and all such communities, whether they are called Territorial governments or not, are States within many of the definitions in the Constitution of the United States.

Within many of those definitions these outlying governments that we have surrounding us from Alaska to the Philippines are States. They are not States in the Union entitled to representation, but they are States in every other sense of the word. Arizona and New Mexico are not States of the Union entitled to representation, but they are in respect of taxation and in every other respect American States. I refer to that decision——

Mr. QUARLES. Will the Senator give us the citation?

Mr. MORGAN. Texas vs. White, 7 Wallace, page 700. I will include in my remarks some extracts from that decision, but I do not care to detain the Senate by reading them. I merely want to assume the proposition sustained by that authority, that the Philippine Islands, in their present situation, are States within the meaning of section 10, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States that may give their consent, with the approbation of Congress, to the levying of an export tax or import duties.

1. The word "state" described sometimes a people or community of individuals united more or less closely in political relations, inhabiting temporarily or permanently the same country; often it denotes only the country or territorial region inhabited by such a community; not infrequently it is applied to the government under which the people live, at other times it represents the combined idea of people, territory, and government.

2. In the Constitution the term "state" most frequently expresses the combined idea just noticed, of people, territory, and government. A "state" in the ordinary sense of the Constitution is a political community of free citizens, occupying a territory of defined boundaries and organized under a government sanctioned and limited by a written constitution and established by the consent of the governed.

3. But the term is also used to express the idea of a people or political community, as distinguished from the government. In this sense it is used in the clause which provides that the United States shall guarantee in every State in the Union a republican form of government and shall protect each of them against invasion.

4. The Union of the States never was a purely artificial and arbitrary relation. It began among the colonies, and grew out of common origin, mutual sympathies, kindred principles, similar interests, and geographical relations. It was confirmed and strengthened by the necessities of war, and received definite form and character and sanction from the Articles of Confederation. By these the Union was solemnly declared to "be perpetual." And, when these articles were found to be inadequate to the exigencies of the country, the Constitution was ordained "to form a more perfect Union." (Texas vs. White, 7 Wallace, p. 700.)

Now, the Northwestern Territory was organized by an act of the Confederation dated the 13th of July, 1787. The Constitution went into operation on the 4th of March, 1789. The act was passed nearly two years before the Constitution went into effect. When the Constitution went into effect one of the very first acts of Congress was as follows:

Whereas in order that the ordinance of the United States in Congress assembled for the government of the territory northwest of the river Ohio may continue to have full effect, it is requisite that certain provisions should be made so as to adapt the same to the present Constitution of the United States.

Now, we would suppose that if there were any material changes necessary they would have gone on, of course, and recited them, but the only thing recited was this:

That in all cases in which by the said ordinance any information is to be given or communication made by the governor of the said territory to the United States in Congress assembled, or to any of their officers, it shall be the duty of the said governor to give such information and to make such communication to the President of the United States—

Instead of to Congress. We then had no Executive, and everything was reported to Congress—and the President shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint, all officers which by the said ordinance were to have been appointed by the United States in Congress assembled, and all officers so appointed shall be commissioned by him; and in all cases where the United States in Congress assembled might, by the said ordinance, revoke any commission or remove from any office, the President is hereby declared to have the same powers of revocation and removal.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in case of the death, removal, resignation, or necessary absence of the governor of the said Territory the secretary thereof shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to execute all the powers and perform all the duties of the governor during the vacancy occasioned by the removal, resignation, or necessary absence of the said governor.

There we took on this territorial form of government. Amongst one of the very first acts passed by Congress, therefore, recognized that every power that was conferred and every power and every right that was restrained in this law was constitutional; and it has been so decided time and again by the Supreme Court. The question has hardly ever been mooted at all. So we there established, first before we became a government under the Constitution and then by ratification or adoption by act of Congress under the Constitution, a form of American territorial government, which has been the basis of the action of this Government all the way through from the highest territorial organization that we have known, as I said before, down to the most meager organization known to the various Indian tribes, all constitutional. How did they get any laws into this territory?

The governor and judges—

There was one governor and there were three judges.

The governor and judges, or a majority of them, shall adopt and publish in the district such laws of the original States, criminal and civil, as may be necessary, and best suited to the circumstances of the district, and report them to Congress, from time to time; which laws shall be in force in the district until the organization of the general assembly therein, unless disapproved of by Congress; but afterwards the legislature shall have authority to alter them as they shall think fit.

Then, again, about the military feature of it:

The governor for the time being, shall be commander in chief of the militia, appoint and commission all officers in the same, below the rank of general officers; all general officers shall be appointed and commissioned by Congress—

Of course by the President.

Previous to the organization of the general assembly, the governor shall appoint such magistrates and other civil officers, in each county or township, as he shall find necessary for the preservation of the peace and good order in the same: After the general assembly shall be organized, the powers and duties of magistrates and other civil officers shall be regulated and defined by the said assembly; but all magistrates and other civil officers, not herein otherwise directed, shall during the continuance of this temporary government, be appointed by the governor.

For the prevention of crimes and injuries, the laws to be adopted or made—

"Adopted or made" by this one governor and three judges—shall have force in all parts of the district, and for the execution of process, criminal and civil, the governor shall make proper divisions thereof; and he shall proceed from time to time, as circumstances may require, to lay out the parts of the district in which the Indian titles shall have been extinguished into counties and townships, subject, however, to such alterations as may thereafter be made by the legislature.

So soon as there shall be 5,000 free male inhabitant of full age in the district, upon giving proof thereof to the governor, they shall receive authority, with time and place, to elect representatives from their counties or townships to represent them in the general assembly.

Then it goes on to provide how many persons may constitute the general assembly when thus permitted by the governor to be elected by the people.

Representatives thus elected shall serve for the term of two years.

Then there was a legislative council.

The general assembly, or legislature, shall consist of the governor, legislative council, and a house of representatives. The legislative council shall consist of five members, to continue in office five years, unless sooner removed by Congress; any three of whom to be a quorum; and the members of the council shall be nominated and appointed in the following manner, to wit: As soon as representatives shall be elected, the governor shall appoint a time and place for them to meet together, and, when met, they shall nominate ten persons, residents in the district, and each possessed of a freehold in 500 acres of land, and return their names to Congress; five of whom Congress shall appoint and commission to serve as aforesaid.

Congress has the right to select five out of the ten named by by the members of the general assembly.

Then we come to acts of legislation:

And all bills having passed by a majority in the house, and by a majority in the council, shall be referred to the governor for his assent; but no bill or legislative act whatever, shall be of any force without his assent. The governor shall have power to convene, prorogue and dissolve the general assembly, when in his opinion it shall be expedient.

The governor, judges, legislative council, secretary, and such other officers as Congress shall appoint in the district, shall take an oath or affirmation of fidelity, and of office; the governor before the president of Congress, and all other officers before the governor. As soon as a legislature can be formed in the district, the council and house assembled, in one room, shall have authority, by joint ballot, to elect a delegate to Congress, who shall have a seat in Congress, with a right of debating, but not of voting during this temporary government.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from Alabama permit an interruption?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. I call his attention to a very interesting fact in the history of this relation of the Territories and the Government. We began by requiring as essential to the validity of their legislation the approval of Congress, and after a little while we said that those laws should be valid if we did not forbid them.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is the present law.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is the present law.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir; that is the present law. Here is an important feature of this business:

And for extending the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty, which form the basis whereon these republics, their laws and constitutions are erected; to fix and establish those principles as the basis of all laws, constitutions, and governments which forever hereafter shall be formed in the said Territory; to provide also for the establishment of States, and permanent government therein, and for their admission to a share in the Federal councils on an equal footing with the original States at as early periods as may be consistent with the general interest.

It is hereby ordained and declared by the authority aforesaid, That the following articles shall be considered as articles of compact between the original States, and the people and States in the said territory, and forever remain unalterable, unless by common consent, to wit:

ART. I. No person demeaning himself in a peaceable and orderly manner shall ever be molested on account of his mode of worship or religious sentiments in the said territory.

ART. II. The inhabitants of the said territory shall always be entitled to the benefits of the writ of habeas corpus and of the trial by jury, of a proportionate representation of the people in the legislature, and of judicial proceedings according to the course of the common law. All persons shall be bailable, unless for capital offenses, where the proof shall be evident or the presumption great. All fines shall be moderate, and no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted No man shall be deprived of his liberty or property but by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land, and should the public exigencies make it necessary for the common preservation to take any person's property or to demand his particular services, full compensation shall be made for the same. And in the just preservation of rights and property it is understood and declared that no law ought ever to be made or have force in the said territory that shall in any manner whatever interfere with or affect private contracts or engagements, bona fide, and without fraud previously formed.

ART. III. Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged. The utmost good faith shall always be observed toward the Indians; their land and property shall never be taken from them without their consent; and in their property, rights, and liberty they shall never be invaded or disturbed, unless in just and lawful wars authorized by Congress; but laws founded in justice and humanity shall from time to time be made for preventing wrongs being done to them and for preserving peace and friendship with them.

ART. IV. The said territory, and the States which may be formed therein, shall forever remain a part of this confederacy of the United States of America, subject to the Articles of Confederation, and to such alterations therein as shall be constitutionally made; and to all the acts and ordinances of the United States in Congress assembled.

Then it provides the number of States that may be formed—not less than three nor more than five—out of that territory. There is the model. I will introduce this act in full in my remarks, because I want those who may ever want to know what I say about it to know the full basis upon which I proceed.

AN ORDINANCE FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE TERRITORY OF THE UNITED STATES NORTHWEST OF THE RIVER OHIO.

Be it ordained by the United States in Congress assembled, That the said territory, for the purposes of temporary government, be one district, subject, however, to be divided into two districts, as future circumstances may, in the opinion of Congress, make it expedient.

Be it ordained by the authority aforesaid, That the estates both of resident and nonresident proprietors in the said Territory, dying intestate, shall descend to and be distributed among their children and the descendants of a deceased child in equal parts, the descendants of a deceased child or grandchild to take the share of their deceased parent in equal parts among them; and where there shall be no children or descendants, then in equal parts to the next of kin, in equal degree; and among collaterals, the children of a deceased brother or sister of the intestate shall have in equal parts among them their deceased parents' share; and there shall in no case be a distinction between kindred of the whole and half blood, saving in all cases to the widow of the intestate her third part of the real estate for life, and one-third part of the personal estate; and this law relative to descents and dower shall remain in full force until altered by the legislature of the district.

And until the governor and judges shall adopt laws as hereinafter mentioned estates in the said Territory may be devised or bequeathed by wills in writing, signed and sealed by him or her in whom the estate may be (being of full age), and attested by three witnesses; and real estates may be conveyed by lease and release, or bargain and sale, signed, sealed, and delivered by the person, being of full age, in whom the estate may be, and attested by two witnesses, provided such wills be duly proved and such conveyances be acknowledged, or the execution thereof duly proved, and be recorded within one year after proper magistrates, courts, and registers shall be appointed for that purpose; and personal property may be transferred by delivery, saving, however, to the French and Canadian inhabitants and other settlers of the Kaskaskies, St. Vincents, and the neighboring villages, who have heretofore professed themselves citizens of Virginia, their laws and customs now in force among them relative to the descent and conveyance of property.

Be it ordained by the authority aforesaid, That there shall be appointed from time to time by Congress a governor whose commission shall continue in force for the term of three years, unless sooner revoked by Congress. He shall reside in the district, and have a freehold estate therein, in 1,000 acres of land, while in the exercise of his office.

There shall be appointed from time to time by Congress a secretary, whose commission shall continue in force for four years, unless sooner revoked. He shall reside in the district, and have a freehold estate therein, in 500 acres of land, while in the exercise of his office. It shall be his duty to keep and preserve the acts and laws passed by the legislature, and the public records of the district, and the proceedings of the governor in his executive department, and transmit authentic copies of such acts and proceedings every six months to the Secretary of Congress. There shall also be appointed a court, to consist of three judges, any two of whom to form a court, who shall have a common-law jurisdiction, and reside in the district, and have each therein a freehold estate, in 500 acres of land, while in the exercise of their offices; and their commissions shall continue in force during good behavior.

The governor and judges, or a majority of them, shall adopt and publish in the district such laws of the original States, criminal and civil, as may be necessary and best suited to the circumstances of the district, and report them to Congress from time to time, which laws shall be in force in the district until the organization of the general assembly therein unless disapproved of by Congress; but afterwards the legislature shall have authority to alter them as they shall think fit.

The governor for the time being shall be commander in chief of the militia, appoint and commission all officers in the same below the rank of general officers; all general officers shall be appointed and commissioned by Congress.

Previous to the organization of the general assembly the governor shall appoint such magistrates and other civil officers in each county or township as he shall find necessary for the preservation of the peace and good order in the same. After the general assembly shall be organized the powers and duties of magistrates and other civil officers shall be regulated and defined by the said assembly; but all magistrates and other civil officers not herein otherwise directed shall, during the continuance of this temporary government, be appointed by the governor.

For the prevention of crimes and injuries, the laws to be adopted or made shall have force in all parts of the district, and for the execution of process, criminal and civil, the governor shall make proper divisions thereof; and he shall proceed from time to time, as circumstances may require, to lay out the parts of the district in which the Indian titles shall have been extinguished into counties and townships, subject, however, to such alterations as may thereafter be made by the legislature.

So soon as there shall be 5,000 free male inhabitants, of full age, in the district, upon giving proof thereof to the governor, they shall receive authority, with time and place, to elect representatives from their counties or townships to represent them in the general assembly: Provided, That for every 500 free male inhabitants there shall be one representative, and so on progressively with the number of free male inhabitants shall the right of representation increase, until the number of representatives shall amount to 25, after which the number and proportion of representatives shall be regulated by the legislature: Provided, That no person be eligible or qualified to act as a representative unless he shall have been a citizen of one of the United States three years, and be a resident in the district, or unless he shall have resided in the district three years, and in either case, shall likewise hold in his own right, in fee simple, 200 acres of land within the same: Provided also, That a freehold in 50 acres of land in the district, having been a citizen of one of the States, and being resident in the district, or the like freehold and two years residence in the district, shall be necessary to qualify a man as an elector of a representative.

The representatives thus elected shall serve for the term of two years; and in case of the death of a representative, or removal from office, the governor shall issue a writ to the county or township for which he was a member to elect another in his stead to serve for the residue of the term.

The general assembly, or legislature, shall consist of the governor, legislative council, and a house of representatives. The legislative council shall consist of five members, to continue in office five years, unless sooner removed by Congress, any three of whom to be a quorum; and the members of the council shall be nominated and appointed in the following manner, to wit: As soon as representatives shall be elected the governor shall appoint a time and place for them to meet together, and, when met, they shall nominate ten persons, residents in the district, and each possessed of a freehold in 500 acres of land, and return their names to Congress, five of whom Congress shall appoint and commission to serve as aforesaid; and whenever a vacancy shall happen in the council, by death or removal from office, the house of representatives shall nominate two persons, qualified as aforesaid, for each vacancy, and return their names to Congress, one of whom Congress shall appoint and commission for the residue of the term.

And every five years, four months at least before the expiration of the time of service of the members of council, the said house shall nominate ten persons, qualified as aforesaid, and return their names to Congress; five of whom Congress shall appoint and commission to serve as members of the council five years, unless sooner removed. And the governor, legislative council, and house of representatives shall have authority to make laws, in all cases, for the good government of the district, not repugnant to the principles and articles in this ordinance established and declared. And all bills having passed by a majority in the house, and by a majority in the council, shall be referred to the governor for his assent; but no bill or legislative act whatever shall be of any force without his assent. The governor shall have power to convene, prorogue, and dissolve the general assembly when in his opinion it shall be expedient.

The governor, judges, legislative council, secretary, and such other officers as Congress shall appoint in the district, shall take an oath or affirmation of fidelity and of office, the governor before the president of Congress, and all other officers before the governor. As soon as a legislature shall be formed in the district, the council and house assembled, in one room, shall have authority, by joint ballot, to elect a Delegate to Congress, who shall have a seat in Congress, with a right of debating, but not of voting during this temporary government.

And for extending the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty, which form the basis whereon these republics, their laws and constitutions are erected; to fix and establish those principles as the basis of all laws, constitutions, and governments, which forever hereafter shall be formed in the said territory: to provide also for the establishment of States, and permanent government therein, and for their admission to a share in the Federal councils on an equal footing with the original States, at as early periods as may be consistent with the general interest:

It is hereby ordained and declared by the authority aforesaid, That the following articles shall be considered as articles of compact between the original States, and the people and States in the said territory, and forever remain unalterable, unless by common consent, to wit:

ART. I. No person, demeaning himself in a peaceable and orderly manner, shall ever be molested on account of his mode of worship or religious sentiments in the said territory.

ART. II. The inhabitants of the said territory shall always be entitled to the benefits of the writ of habeas corpus and of the trial by jury; of a proportionate representation of the people in the legislature, and of judicial proceedings according to the course of the common law.

All persons shall be bailable, unless for capital offenses, where the proof shall be evident or the presumption great. All fines shall be moderate, and no cruel or unusual punishment shall be inflicted. No man shall be deprived of his liberty or property but by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land, and should the public exigencies make it necessary for the common preservation to take any person's property or to demand his particular services, full compensation shall be made for the same. And in the just preservation of rights and property, it is understood and declared that no law ought ever to be made or have force in the said Territory that shall in any manner whatever interfere with or affect private contracts or engagements, bona fide and without fraud previously formed.

ART. III. Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged. The utmost good faith shall always be observed toward the Indians; their land and property shall never be taken from them without their consent, and in their property, rights, and liberty they shall never be invaded or disturbed, unless in just and lawful wars authorized by Congress; but laws founded in justice and humanity shall from time to time be made for preventing wrongs being done to them and for preserving peace and friendship with them.

ART. IV. The said territory, and the States which may be formed therein, shall forever remain a part of this confederacy of the United States of America, subject to the articles of confederation, and to such alterations therein as shall be constitutionally made; and to all the acts and ordinances of the United States in Congress assembled conformable thereto. The inhabitants and settlers in the said territory shall be subject to pay a part of the Federal debts, contracted or to be contracted, and a proportional part of the expenses of government, to be apportioned on them by Congress, according to the same common rule and measure by which apportionments thereof shall be made on the other States; and the taxes for paying their proportion shall be laid and levied by the authority and direction of the legislatures of the district or districts or new States, as in the original States, within the time agreed upon by the United States in Congress assembled.

The legislatures of those districts or new States shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the soil by the United States in Congress assembled, nor with any regulations Congress may find necessary for securing the title in such soil to the bona fide purchasers. No tax shall be imposed on land the property of the United States; and in no case shall nonresident proprietors be taxed higher than residents. The navigable waters leading into the Mississippi and St. Lawrence, and the carrying places between the same, shall be common highways, and forever free, as well to the inhabitants of the said territory as to the citizens of the United States, and those of any other States that may be admitted into the confederacy, without any tax, impost, or duty therefor.

ART. V. There shall be formed in the said territory not less than three nor more than five States; and the boundaries of the States, as soon as Virginia shall alter her act of cession and consent to the same, shall become fixed and established as follows, to wit: The western State in the said territory shall be bounded by the Mississippi, the Ohio, and Wabash rivers; a direct line drawn from the Wabash and Post Vincents due north to the territorial line between the United States and Canada, and by the said territorial line to the Lake of the Woods and Mississippi.

The middle State shall be bounded by the said direct line, the Wabash from Post Vincents to the Ohio; by the Ohio; by a direct line drawn due north from the mouth of the Great Miami to the said territorial line, and by the said territorial line. The eastern State shall be bounded by the last-mentioned direct line, the Ohio, Pennsylvania, and the said territorial line: Provided, however, And it is further understood and declared, that the boundaries of these three States shall be subject so far to be altered that, if Congress shall hereafter find it expedient, they shall have authority to form one or two States in that part of the said territory which lies north of an east-and-west line drawn through the southerly bend or extreme of Lake Michigan. And whenever any of the said States shall have 60,000 free inhabitants therein such State shall be admitted, by its Delegates, into the Congress of the United States, on an equal footing with the original States, in all respects whatever, and shall be at liberty to form a permanent constitution and State government: Provided, The constitution and government so to be formed shall be republican and in conformity to the principles contained in these articles; and, so far as it can be consistent with the general interest of the confederacy, such admission shall be allowed at an earlier period, and when there may be a less number of free inhabitants in the State than 60,000.

ART. VI. There shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in the said Territory, otherwise than in punishment of crimes, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted: Provided always, That any person escaping into the same, from whom labor or service is lawfully claimed in any one of the original States, such fugitive may be lawfully reclaimed, and conveyed to the person claiming his or her labor or service as aforesaid.

Done by the United States in Congress assembled, the 13th day of July, A. D. 1787, and of their sovereignty and independence the twelfth.

CHARLES THOMSON, Secretary.

CHAP. VIII.—An act to provide for the government of the territory northwest of the river Ohio.

Whereas in order that the ordinance of the United States in Congress assembled, for the government of the territory northwest of the river Ohio may continue to have full effect, it is requisite that certain provisions should be made, so as to adapt the same to the present Constitution of the United States:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in all cases in which by the said ordinance any information is to be given or communication made by the governor of the said territory to the United States in Congress assembled, or to any of their officers, it shall be the duty of the said governor to give such information and to make such communication to the President of the United States; and the President shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint all officers which by the said ordinance were to have been appointed by the United States in Congress assembled, and all officers so appointed shall be commissioned by him; and in all cases where the United States in Congress assembled might, by the said ordinance, revoke any commission or remove from any office, the President is hereby declared to have the same powers of revocation and removal.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in case of the death, removal, resignation, or necessary absence of the governor of the said Territory, the secretary thereof shall be, and he is hereby authorized and required to execute all the powers, and perform all the duties of the governor, during the vacancy occasioned by the removal, resignation, or necessary absence of the said governor.

Approved, August 7, 1789.

Mr. President, it can not be argued, if we stand inside of these provisions and administer to the people of the Territory who come in after the adoption of the Constitution—the Constitution and laws of the United States to the extent and in the manner there provided—that the Congress is not within the pale of its duty. Here are a governor and three judges enacting law and continuing to enact it until the State has reached that condition where it is entitled to a legislature. These laws are borrowed from other States and other communities. They are selected as they may be considered adaptable to the situation.

The largest liberty is given to these four men to become the enactors of laws for the government of these people, reaching to every interest in life and all manner of property and every condition of civilization, from the lowest to the highest. Then when they organized their legislature they nominated ten men to the Congress of the United States, or rather to the President of the United States (the word "President" is inserted there where "Congress" was inserted in the act), and he elected five out of the ten for the upper council, and that is the form of government under which they were to exist until they became States, unless Congress should change it.

Now, I will take up the question of the Philippines. The Northwest Territory did not have the military laws or the laws of nations applied to it for the reason that there was no condition of war when it came into American ownership. The Philippines had. When Dewey fired his first gun and raised his flag in the bay of Manila the authority of the United States Government was there in all its plenitude, provided he could hold that which he had, which he succeeded in doing—he and those who followed him—without much difficulty.

The Government of the United States then and there planted its sovereignty upon those islands, and if the treaty of Paris had never been made our title was good in the United States by conquest, by virtue of war, and under that title we would have had the right to do the very things we did in New Mexico and Arizona before we had made the treaty of Guadalupe, Hidalgo, or afterwards. The same thing we have done in California we had the right to do in the Philippines. These are matters which have been passed sub judice in the United States Supreme Court, and are settled.

We acquired title in the Philippines by conquest. Then we got the treaty of Paris, and we acquired the peaceful sovereignty of the entire archipelago. The sovereignty of the United States extended over the whole archipelago in this form, and finding the laws of war there, and finding that they recognized the Spanish laws that were in existence in the Philippines to the extent, and only to the extent, that the military rulers should choose to recognize them, we did recognize them. We adopted them to that extent and no greater, and went on.

Presently the insurrection in the Philippines lost its military integrity. It went to pieces. Its leader was captured. Its forces were disbanded and were suing for peace and for pardons throughout the islands. A great majority of them were. Thereupon we changed the form of government in a degree. We left the military government over those parts still in insurrection, but exempted from military law the parts where the insurrection had been subdued and put them under civil law.

Now, that was done not only through the power of the President of the United States as the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, but it was also done by the authority of Congress. A civil government instituted there commenced to make its enactments. Who were the first enactors of law there? The Philippine Commission. Who were the first enactors of law in the Northwestern Territory? Three judges and one governor. After they had a legislature in the Northwestern Territory, who enacted the laws then? Five councilors, constituting the upper house, appointed by the President of the United States, and the lower house, elected by a certain qualified portion of the electorate of that Territory.

So the Government of the United States has been actually progressing in the very steps with which it started out for the purpose of organizing, controlling, and governing this peculiar American institution that we call a Territorial government, and which no other nation in the world ever thought about instituting.

Now, having done that, we certainly have built them up into a State as firmly, as broadly, as compactly, and as thoroughly as the Northwestern Territory was built into a State when it had a right to a Delegate in Congress. How far had they proceeded in maturing in the direction of statehood when they were entitled to send a Delegate here to Congress? They had a legislature, one house appointed by the President of the United States, and the other elected by a portion of the people, very few of them voting. Very few of them were qualified under the land-law qualification.

Suppose we should do, as I think we ought to do, pass an act authorizing a Delegate to come from the Philippines here and to take his seat, as he does from Hawaii, in the House of Representatives? We would advance ourselves very much in the estimate of those people if we were to do that, and surely we would not violate the Constitution, nor would we violate any of the precedents of our Government, commencing with the first and the best settled one.

So the government of the Philippines has advanced to the condition of a State in respect of taxation and in respect of local self-government also. In many particulars it has advanced to the condition of a State. Now, if we will get the consent of that State to the tariff act which is proposed here, it is my judgment that there is not a lawyer in the United States who can say that that is not constitutional. For that matter, it has been obtained in advance. They are here petitioning for this. They have already adopted this tariff. It is not a matter of the future as to whether they will do it or whether they will not do it.

We are acting upon a proposition, as I understand it, that comes here from the Philippines by lawful authority. This tariff has been adopted there, and all we have got to do is to say we consent to it. Then the rule of uniformity disappears from consideration, for, with the consent of any State, the Congress of the United States may enact duties or imposts on imports or exports, with the consent of the State, and without reference to the question of their uniformity throughout the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator whether it is absolutely clear that that clause in the Constitution refers to foreign exports or to exports and imports between the States?

Mr. MORGAN. I read the word "exports," as I did the words "duties and imports," as applying entirely to foreign commerce. That is my reading of it. But the Supreme Court of the United States read it differently.

As I remarked in the outset, we are legislating for conditions that exist, and not those which we would like to create. What I want to do is to get the Congress in harmony with the Philippine Islands in doing those things which are absolutely essential for the progress of those people toward self-government and civilization, and I have to yield something to get that.

Mr. MITCHELL. With the Senator's permission, I will state that I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to every word he has uttered and I agree with a great deal that he has said, but I take it the Senator does not pretend to reconcile his position with the position of a majority of the Supreme Court on that question.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand it is claimed by the friends of the bill, just as it stands, as embodying no other power and no other consent but that of the Congress of the United States, and is a bill in conformity to the recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States as to the taxation of exports. I am bound to admit that it is in conformity with some of them, but I hope to see a day when the Supreme Court of the United States, relieved of the pressure that we can relieve them of, will become more liberal in thought and action, and perhaps will come to a more harmonious conclusion amongst themselves as to what the law is under the Constitution of the United States.

But I take the situation just as it is. I do not propose to undertake to break down a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Senate. I might go into a political assemblage, a Democratic convention, for instance, and argue against it as an indorsement of a Republican idea with which I was absolutely at war, but in the Senate I am not at war with any decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, unless I think that that decision inflicts upon somebody or some State a great injustice. Then I would not abide by it; you could not make me do it. This is not such a situation. We are trying to help the Philippines, and I feel sure that can be done without straining the Constitution.

But these decisions of the Supreme Court were in aid, as I understand it, of bills like this and the Porto Rican bill, which were for the benefit of the islands—bills that were attempting to adapt the policy of the United States to conditions in those islands which do not exist everywhere. I do not know that they do any harm to anybody. They lower the price of sugar from what it is now to the people of the United States, and I am always glad to find sugar at a low figure for consumption, for, according to my view, both sugar and salt are on the same basis exactly in reference to our tariff policy. Sugar is not by any means a luxury in the United States now. It is as much of a necessity as salt.

But this measure has received the very careful attention of an excellent commission. I know some members of that Commission. I know General Wright, of Tennessee. I know Judge Taft somewhat. I have not any more respect for the Supreme Court of the United States than I have for the personnel of the Commission or their ability. It is a fine body of men for the purposes for which they have been selected. Mr. McKinley was very happy in making his choice for just such an occasion. He was the most successful person I ever knew, I believe, in making the choice of the right man to do the right thing at the right time and in the right way.

So the recommendations of this Commission come to me with the imprimatur of great minds and careful study, and with a perfect conviction that there is not a word which has been enacted into a law in the Philippines that is not intended for the benefit of those people—not for the benefit of the United States as a Government, or of the Commission, or of any persons who may be friendly with them, but the whole spirit of the legislation by the Philippine Commission, as far as I have been able to see it, has been for the benefit of the Filipinos and in favor of their elevation to a condition of progress toward statehood.

Now, some of our friends are not satisfied that those people can ever attain to such an attitude as to be entitled to admission into the Union as States. We need not be in any hurry about a matter of that kind. It has not been the policy of this Government to act hastily in such great matters. We put a positive pledge in the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo that the territories we acquired by that treaty and by the Gadsden treaty should be admitted as States, and many of the qualifications and provisions that were necessary for statehood were embodied in the treaty. Yet here they are knocking and they have been constantly knocking at our door for admission since 1855, and we have kept them back only because we have not considered that the communities there were prepared for statehood.

I have believed all the time that if they had been admitted as States they would be very much better communities than they are. The association into the sisterhood of States would have helped those Territories very much to build them up, as that same association has helped to build up the great Northwestern Territories that were seeking admission for so many years, and which in turn have come here and helped to build ourselves up, because they have produced a splendid body of representatives in the Senate Chamber. I believe in statehood. I believe in putting it into operation as rapidly as it can be done.

Now, if you were to ask me whether I believe in the statehood of the Filipinos and whether it should ever become possible, I would say it would be absolutely impossible, except for the tenth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States. If we had to tax the Filipinos just exactly as we frame tax laws for the benefit of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, or New York we should make a system of general taxation that would be inapplicable to them and perhaps would ruin them. Under such tax laws they would be restive. But if, with their consent, Congress shall permit them to have exceptional conditions of taxation suited to their absolute necessities, they would love us because we are just. I can see no reason in the world why we should not do it, for the power is in the Constitution.

We may hesitate to lay our hands upon it. Why did not our fathers hesitate to put it in the body of law? Why did they discuss it in the anxious manner that they did and reform and remodel it from time to time to get it to a point where they could agree to it and leave it there? Did they place this law in the Constitution only to give it decent burial?

Mr. President and Senators, there are several provisions in the Constitution which have been asleep for a long time, and some of these fine days we will wake up and find ourselves almost in an act of worship toward our fathers for having put them there. Here is the election of a President of the United States by electors. There was never a provision in any organic system of laws or any legislative system that was so utterly dead as the powers, rights, duties, responsibilities, and immunities of Presidential electors.

Presidents are now chosen in national conventions, and an elector would be hanged to a post in a street who would dare to vote contrary to the voice of his party after he had been chosen in a State as an elector, no matter what he might know about the candidate. The time will come in this country, possibly, when electors of President of the United States will find themselves, after they have been chosen in their States, confronted with the proposition that they shall vote for some man for President of the United States who ought to be in the penitentiary—some base, ignoble character, the revelation of whose infirmity or wickedness has come out after the election is over.

When that thing occurs, then we will begin to thank God that our fathers when they created the great office of electorate actually invested the electors with the power and duty and right of independence, so that they can do what is right for the people and save them in the hour of trouble, for after they have had an election and are to cast their votes, if the man should die who had been nominated for President by the national convention, what are they to do then? Must they hunt up caucus for the purpose of getting instructions, or must they go to the Constitution and to their own consciences and their own oaths and determine for themselves that they will select men in spite of the caucus of any party to which they may happen to belong?

Now, there is a law that is asleep, but we do not dare to repeal it. Some of these days it will answer us a great purpose. Some of these days it will save this Union.

Here is another law, the tenth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States, which has never before been brought to the attention of the Senate, and why? Because there was no ground or room for its application except on this bill.

But, although this power is given to Congress to provide for those people in the manner in which this bill does provide for them, and to say that in many of the localities in the Philippines we shall starve them back into a state of insurrection and of desperation, because men who can not get food, particularly when they have very little reason to control them, are likely to become greatly exasperated and are dangerous to the public welfare, I am very glad that the opportunity has now been presented to the Congress of the United States for the first time, so far as I am aware, of bringing into action the tenth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States. It is the first time——

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLAPP in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator how he is to collect revenue for the Philippine Islands under this section 10, which provides:

> And the net produce of all duties and imposts laid by any State on imports or exports shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MORGAN. My amendment provides for that. I was saying that it shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States, but this bill contains, if my amendment is adopted, an appropriation of an equal sum out of the Treasury to be turned over to the Philippine government. We have a right to make the appropriation.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him again, I suggest that could be done as well by a direct appropriation, even if we could admit them as a State, and should excuse them from all taxation to support their government.

Mr. MORGAN. I believe, Mr. President, in preserving the integrity of the Constitution as to the fiscal system of the United States Government. It ought to be under one general head. Whenever money is collected for the Government of the United States anywhere, it ought to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and every dollar ought to be voted out of the Treasury by the consent of Congress. I believe in that doctrine. I think it would be a wise thing for us to get back to it and stand close by it.

The bill as I propose to amend it provides that all of this money shall be collected and carried into the Treasury of the United States, but, in order to prevent circumlocution in the matter, it provides in the same section that the money shall be appropriated for and applied to the uses of the government of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I happened not to be in the Chamber all the time the Senator was speaking, and I am somewhat at a loss how to address him, but I will ask, as a matter of information for myself, whether he contends that the words which I will read would authorize this levy under the bill:

> No State shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws; and the net produce of all duties and imposts, laid by any State on imports or exports, shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States.

Is that the provision in the Constitution which the Senator contends would authorize the levy?

Mr. MORGAN. That is what I base my amendment on.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have not read the Senator's amendment. Will he state briefly what it is?

Mr. MORGAN. It is merely that this tariff shall be levied with the consent of the lawful authorities in the islands of the Philippines.

Mr. TILLMAN. How does the Senator get around the first provision here, "No State?" Are the Philippine Islands a State?

Mr. MORGAN. That is what I have argued, and I have tried to establish it by a reference to the case of the State of Texas vs. White.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then how do you keep the Constitution out of the State?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not try to keep it out of the States.

Mr. TILLMAN. The contention of our friends is that the Constitution is not in the Philippines at all. If that be true, I do not see how having a government, for instance, which is created by the President, under the authority of Congress, derived from the Spooner amendment to the last Army bill, would give us any pretense. We are not very careful here about the construction of the Constitution or anything else except according to the will of the majority; but what I want to know is how you can get any pretense that the Philippine Islands are a State, and how this clause in the Constitution can apply to them in any shape, form, or fashion when we deny that the Constitution is over there or can go there without the consent of Congress?

Can Congress send a commission there indirectly, through the instrumentality of the Executive, that will constitute a government, and then we turn around and say by reason of this so-called government it is a State? That is the contradiction which, to my mind, the Senator's argument presents, and I should like to have him elucidate it.

Mr. MORGAN. I am trying to elucidate the subject in the speech which I have been making on it. I have not in mind or heart or memory, or in any other conception, the thought that the Constitution of the United States is not of full force and effect in every State of the American Union, whether it is an organized State within the Union or whether it is what we call a Territory, or a State that has not a Territorial form of government. It is everywhere, and there is no occasion for going into a recondite and very cloudy subject for discussion when we have got an open door to get out of it.

If the territory of the Philippines is a State within the meaning of that phrase, then there is no difficulty in that State agreeing with the Congress of the United States upon this tariff bill, and in that case there is no occasion for uniformity, because the very fact that you agree upon an exceptional tariff applicable to a particular locality destroys the idea of uniformity. The uniformity of the tariff is not found in that section. It is found two sections before that in the Constitution.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not have the pleasure of hearing the Senator's legal presentation upon which he is basing his argument now. I do not want him to repeat it, because I can read it in the RECORD, but I would suggest to him that a good many of my lawyer friends around me think, and it had occurred to me too, that his argument is in direct contradiction of our Supreme Court on that subject.

They have declared, I think, in a good many cases, certainly in the recent cases from Porto Rico, that the Constitution does not go ex proprio vigore and it must be done by a special act of Congress. I am very certain Congress has not sent the Constitution to the Philippines, and therefore his contention that it is there anyway is his private opinion. It may be, and it is my private opinion that the Constitution is there; but, unfortunately, our private opinions and even our universal opinion on that subject does not carry it there so long as we have not votes enough.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I am not arguing the humorous side of the question; neither am I arguing the political side of it. I am trying to get at what is the proper conception of the constitutional powers of Congress and our constitutional duties, of course. But I contend that Congress has this right, whether the Constitution goes proprio vigore into a territory, or whether it is carried there on a sled or by a truck or, like the Ark of the Covenant, drawn by a yoke of oxen. I do not care how it gets there; my opinion is that it is there.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me?

Mr. MORGAN. In a moment. If this bill is passed there is no doubt but that the tenth section will be carried in there, whether proprio vigore or in chains makes no difference. It will be there when this law is enacted. So there will be nobody to carp or quibble about it, and I am very glad it is cutting off all opportunity for that kind of a discussion.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have listened with extreme pleasure to the exposition of the Senator of the amplification of this section. As I understand, the Senator made the proposition that, except for the tenth section of Article I of the Constitution, the Philippine Islands never could properly become a State of the Union.

Mr. MORGAN. I never said that. I do not think that the Philippine Islands have anything to do with the question of the construction of that tenth section of Article I.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; but I understood the Senator to say that their method of taxation would be so different that, except for this, he would not at least deem it advisable that they should become one of the States of the Union. As I understood the Senator, the reason was because of their inability, like the American States, on account of their condition, to impose local taxation for the support of the State, as we would here, but that by this provision in the Constitution they might levy imposts, and thereby obtain a sufficient amount to support local self-government.

Now, I will ask the Senator, if that be true, if it would not be a rather precarious sovereignty, the very existence of which must depend upon the Congress of the United States voting them the sum which would be collected through those imposts and carried into the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have said nothing about local support of the self-government at all. That is no part of my argument. I do not know how many reasons may have entered into the minds of those gentlemen who so long debated the propositions in the constitutional convention that induced them to put in this provision of law after it had been changed or amended two or three times. I do not know all the reasons, but I can conceive of a number that, to my mind, are sufficient.

I have taken only one case for illustration, and that is the case of rice, which it is absolutely necessary to import into the Philippines for the support of human life. Those people can not get it; they can not afford to import it under the present duty, and therefore I understand they want it to come in free. I would just assume that is the situation now for making a point of illustration only.

My proposition is this, that the States gave up their right of self-taxation on imports and exports with great reluctance, and never yielded it until that tenth section of Article I was arranged, so that they, with the consent of Congress, might levy duties on imports and exports. If there is anything plainer, or more emphatic, or more mandatory in human language than that I do not know what it is. When a case arises where it is proper to resort to that provision of the Constitution and the two Governments concur, we representing the whole Union, and the Philippine Islands representing that locality—when that thing occurs there is the power to do it. We need not usurp power to do it, because the power is already granted to us upon the consent of the Filipinos.

The only question in the case is, whether we can do this under the eighth section of that article, or whether we can do it under the tenth section. To say that Congress can levy a tax upon the Filipinos, discriminating in their favor or against them either, which would deprive it of uniformity, Congress exercising its sovereign power without consulting anybody else, is to state a doctrine that I can not subscribe to. Congress has no right to do that. Congress has no right to make any discrimination whether in favor of a particular locality or against a particular locality. The taxes levied by Congress through her own powers must be uniform. That is section 8.

When we come to section 10, notwithstanding section 8, if a State agrees with Congress for the levying of a different kind of tax—a tax on exports or imports either—and that the money from the tax shall go into the Treasury of the United States, that is all right, and provision for that is made in this Constitution.

Can we not understand that certain borders and frontiers of our country might at some time or other be in a state of starvation? Because the hand of Providence has been withheld from us so long in affliction can we not realize that it can ever be laid upon us at all?

Suppose that your frontier here next to Canada had blasted crops away back into the depths of the Rocky Mountains, the grasshoppers having eaten up everything you had in that country, and that Canada was able to send food to you from the other side, because she had not had that visitation, could we not agree that the States along that border could provide that wheat, or barley, or rye, or corn, or anything we wanted to consume, might be imported free of duty for a time, and could not Congress agree with those States? Could not those legislatures pass such laws and ask Congress to agree? If we did, would it not become a benefaction to the whole country?

Are we to have a government that can make no provision for a thing of that sort without either violating the eighth section of article I of the Constitution, or else refuse to levy any tariff at all?

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. TILLMAN. I understood the Senator to say a moment ago that we are in the Philippines, and that we have had the consent of the Filipinos to go there. Did he say that?

Mr. MORGAN. If I did, I am not going to acknowledge it. I do not expect to get into a row with the Senator about a question of that sort.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think the notes of the stenographer will bear me out. I certainly was listening very closely to the Senator, and if I misunderstood him, I should like to be corrected.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not choose to be interrupted just for the amusement of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not want to interrupt him for amusement or anything of the kind, but I wanted to know when we got the consent of the Filipinos to go there?

Mr. MORGAN. I have argued on that branch of the case, and I stand on my argument, and when the Senator gets the RECORD, if he wishes to look at it and if he can answer my argument, I shall be very much obliged to him. Whether we have got authority in the Philippines or not, whether we have got a government there or not, I have argued this case upon the assumption that this Congress recognizes the fact that we have got a government in the Philippines, and we intend to use it, so far as the Constitution will permit us, in making wholesome and just provision for those people. That is the argument I am trying to make.

It is not worth while for me to state my hopes or expectations or beliefs about them at all. They are neither here nor there. I am trying the question now of bread and meat for the Filipinos, whether or not they shall have the means of subsistence under this tariff law, while we are trying to find out in this bill or the other bill, which I understand is to come in here for their future government—perhaps a full plan of government, though I do not know about that—but I know this: That we have found it necessary on various occasions to relieve various communities in the United States by appropriations.

My own State has had appropriations here on account of hurricanes that passed over us and other devastations, and so have other communities, who have received supplies of corn, to feed the starving populace, and all that. The constitutionality of such acts has been seriously questioned by gentlemen who are very much firmer on constitutional questions than they are on questions of conscience—very much firmer. When I find an opportunity in the Constitution of the United States to do a thing that is for the benefit of any part of the American Union, I am going to vote to do it. It is my business to do it.

A suggestion was made a while ago that there was considerable unification between the Philippine government and the United States Government—that we were very close together. We have been; and all our Territorial governments have been very close to the United States. We have been nursing them as with a bottle and rocking them as in a cradle ever since the time we started them out, and we have never tried to do any harm to them that I know of, but all that is possible for their good.

But, Mr. President, I made reference to the fact of the great elevation of what I might call the independence, and the exclusive independence, of the Territorial governments. I do not suppose that the President of the United States would feel authorized, in the present state of the law, to write a note to the governor of a Territory and tell him that he did not like his administration; that he wanted him to trim it up and change it in this way, that, or the other; that he did not admire the way matters were being conducted in the Territory.

The Territorial governor would be very apt, in this enlightened and progressive age, to say to the President of the United States, "Who asked you to say anything about that? Has Congress invited you to do so? Not at all. I am not your servant; I am not your clerk; I am not under your authority. If you want to turn me out of office you can do so, but you can not control me while I am in office."

It seems to me we have encountered a great many disagreeable things in the Territories in consequence of the fact that the President of the United States has not had sufficient administrative control. But here, now, is a territory 10,000 miles away from our farthest coast. If we reach it by a cable message it has to traverse the earth before it can get there. Communication is very uncertain, and any little circumstance might interrupt it for days, weeks, or months.

There must be, in order to control that country properly, the power of the Government of the United States exerted there—not here merely, but there—in an administrative way, so that the emergencies that may arise from time to time can there be met and taken advantage of in accordance with the laws of the United States. Suppose an insurrection suddenly arising in one of those islands in the Philippines, unexpectedly, the governor of the Philippines certainly ought to have authority to call out the militia or to call the troops of the United States into service to crush that insurrection instantly, or even to anticipate it, if you please, when its existence is well established as a matter of fact.

If we have to wait and have the same sort of intercourse between that government that must exist under the Constitution between the governor of a State and the President of the United States we should be in rather an unhappy condition, a dangerous condition, as to those people, who are not yet fully matured and fully instructed in the duties, powers, and rights of a republican form of government. We need nearer approach to it. Every Territorial government in the United States, from the foundation of the great Northwestern territory down to the last one we have organized, has been a part of the executive power of the United States—the executive power not so called, but in fact.

How many officers are there in the United States to-day in those Territories appointed by the governor? A great number appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the council or the senate, or whatever it may be in the Territory. How did we ever get the authority to confer the power of appointment to office upon those people unless we conferred upon them a degree of sovereignty equal to that of a State in that particular?

The governor of my State can appoint to office, by and with the advice and consent of the State, and without it, too. He gets his power and authority from the fact that it is a sovereign State with a constitution. But where did the governor of the Territory get his power to do it? By some sort of deduction from an act of Congress organizing the Territory, constituting the governor, and authorizing him to make appointments.

Can any Senator here point out to me in the Constitution of the United States an authority to confer the appointing power upon the governor of a Territory or the governor of a State to a United States office? You can not do it. We have recognized it; we have tolerated it; we have gone on in that form all this time without stopping to see exactly what we were doing. What are the facts about it? Our laws have conferred upon the governor this power of appointment as heads of the departments, not in name, but in fact.

Mr. Justice Miller, in his decision in 99 U. S., IX Otto, page 508, said:

> The Constitution, for purposes of appointment, very clearly divides all its officers into two classes. The primary class requires a nomination by the President and confirmation by the Senate. But foreseeing that when offices became numerous and sudden removals necessary this mode might be inconvenient, it was provided that, in regard to officers inferior to those specially mentioned, Congress might by law vest their appointment in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments. That all persons who can be said to hold an office under the Government about to be established under the Constitution were intended to be included within one or the other of these modes of appointment there can be but little doubt.
> This Constitution is the supreme law of the land, and no act of Congress is of any validity which does not rest on authority conferred by that instrument. It is, therefore, not to be supposed that Congress, when enacting a criminal law for the punishment of officers of the United States, intended to punish anyone not appointed in one of those modes. If the punishment were designed for others than officers as defined by the Constitution, words to that effect would be used, as servant, agent, person in the service or employment of the Government; and this has been done where it was so intended, as in the sixteenth section of the act of 1846, concerning embezzlement, by which any officer or agent of the United States, and all persons participating in the act, are made liable. (9 Stat., 59.)
> As the defendant here was not appointed by the President or by a court of law, it remains to inquire if the Commissioner of Pensions, by whom he was appointed, is the head of a department, within the meaning of the Constitution, as is argued by the counsel for plaintiffs.
> That instrument was intended to inaugurate a new system of government, and the departments to which it referred were not then in existence. The clause we have cited is to be found in the article relating to the Executive, and the word as there used has reference to the subdivision of the power of the Executive into departments for the more convenient exercise of that power. One of the definitions of the word given by Worcester is: "A part or division of the executive government, as the Department of State or of the Treasury." Congress recognized this in the act creating these subdivisions of the executive branch by giving to each of them the name of a department.

We must remember now that the Constitution of the United States does not mention the head of any department, from the Secretary of State clear through until we get to the Secretary of Agriculture. There is no mention made of such an office in the Constitution of the United States. They are all created by Congress, and they are made heads of departments because of the fact that the Congress of the United States has the right and the power to confer, in respect to certain offices not named in the Constitution, the right of appointment upon the President, the judges of the courts, or the heads of departments. That is all.

> Here we have the Secretary of State, who is by law the head of the Department of State; the Departments of War, Interior, Treasury, etc. And by one of the latest of these statutes reorganizing the Attorney-General's office and placing it on the basis of the others, it is called the Department of Justice. The association of the words "heads of departments" with the President and the courts of law strongly implies that something different is meant from the inferior commissioners and bureau officers, who are themselves the mere aids and subordinates of the heads of the departments.
> Such, also, has been the practice, for it is very well understood that the appointments of the thousands of clerks in the Departments of the Treasury, Interior, and the others are made by the heads of those departments and not by the heads of the bureaus in those departments.
> So, in this same section of the Constitution, it is said that the President may require the opinion in writing of the principal officer in each of the Executive Departments, relating to the duties of their respective offices.
> The word "department" in both these instances clearly means the same thing, and the principal officer in the one case is the equivalent of the head of department in the other." (United States vs. Germaine, Otto IX, pp. 509, 510, 511.)

In the case of National Bank vs. County of Yankton, IX Otto, page 133, the court said:

> All territory within the jurisdiction of the United States, not included in any State, must necessarily be governed by or under the authority of Congress. The Territories are but political subdivisions of the outlying dominion of the United States. Their relation to the General Government is much the same as that which counties bear to the respective States, and Congress may legislate for them as a State does for its municipal organizations.
> The organic law of a Territory takes the place of a constitution as the fundamental law of the local government. It is obligatory on and binds the Territorial authorities; but Congress is supreme, and for the purposes of this department of its governmental authority, has all the powers of the people of the United States, except such as have been expressly or by implication reserved in the prohibitions of the Constitution.
> In the organic act of Dakota there was not an express reservation of power in Congress to amend the acts of the Territorial legislature, nor was it necessary. Such a power is an incident of sovereignty, and continues until granted away. Congress may not only abrogate laws of the Territorial legislatures, but it may itself legislate directly for the local government. It may make a void act of the Territorial legislature valid and a valid act void. In other words, it has full and complete legislative authority over the people of the Territories and all the departments of the Territorial governments. It may do for the Territories what the people, under the Constitution of the United States, may do for the States.

Mr. President, I propose in this amendment to put in a provision here that the Philippine Islands shall constitute an executive department of the Government of the United States. I provide for a minister like the Commissioner of Labor, like the Superintendent of the Geological Survey, and of quite a number of departments we have got here, which are actually called departments in the law that we enact, but they are without representation in the Cabinet.

It is not necessary that they should be represented in the Cabinet, but it is necessary to them to have that very distant government under the control of the President of the United States and under the control of a head of a department responsible to Congress for his appointments. I do not say that he must send their names here to be confirmed, but if he appoints them, then he is responsible to Congress, and we close up the space between the Philippines and the United States with a strong bond of authority, as well as of affection, between those people and our people, by having a department, and they would consider it a great honor, no doubt, that the Philippine Islands should be regarded as one of the Executive Departments of the Government of the United States.

We should have more use than that for it. We should have a use for it in Porto Rico, in Hawaii, and in Alaska, and we had just as well, now that we have got the subject up, go to the actual merits of the case and of the situation, and do that by name and openly which we have been doing heretofore in a very different manner—that is to say, permitting thousands and thousands of officers to be appointed to represent really the United States Government, not by the heads of departments, but by the governors of Territories.

It is out of order to do it; it ought not to be done. I believe that would be a great advantage to the situation in the Philippines. They are so far distant, there are so many peculiarities attending those people in their situation, as that we must confer upon the governor of that territory some other powers than those which belong ordinarily to the governor of a Territory here within our continental domain.

I will state an instance. We find how we have taken different Indian tribes squatted about over our vast public domain in past times, and how we have built them up from time to time, and transferred them from reservation to reservation, sometimes to keep them out of war with each other, sometimes to keep them out of war with the people of the United States, and tried to better their condition. We have never lent our hands toward the destruction of an Indian tribe, even those barbarous and wretched Apaches, that had no sort of tolerance for human life or even the virtue or innocence of womanhood or childhood.

Now, here are twelve or fourteen hundred islands in the Philippine group that are inhabited. If you will take the photographs that are in the reports sent here by the Philippine Commission and look at the condition and the characteristics there portrayed of those different people on those different islands, you will perfectly understand that one system of government can not apply to all those people any more than the government of the District of Columbia would apply to the blanket Indians of the plains.

There ought to be some local power authorized by the President of the United States to make different arrangements for the government of those different tribes. In the earlier part of our existence here we did that by treaties, and those treaties are regarded as being so solemn that rights which have vested under them can not be removed by an act of Congress. So the Supreme Court decides. We have relaxed that system. We now make contracts with the headmen or chiefs, and we do it by majorities, in council votes, and the like of that, but we established separate, distinct, and different governments for every one of those different tribes, adapted to the peculiar situation of the tribe itself.

Suppose that the central government at Luzon should exercise the power of making separate governments, separate contract arrangements for the government of those different islanders in the Philippines, can we not see at once how we would eliminate from the government there a vast quantity of material that can not participate in its higher duties and responsibilities and that we would set up amongst them that faculty of independent thought and action which, being encouraged and matured, would result finally in those people becoming just like the Indians now are—a self-governing community to a large extent?

The Indians in America understand very much better than they did ten, twenty, or thirty years ago what the law means and what government means, and they have got more respect for it. The reason is because they have had a part in the making of laws for their own particular tribes by contract with the Government of the United States. That ought to be the case in the Philippines.

We can never govern those people in the Philippines by one universal code of law—that is to say, a republic can not do it. A monarchy could do so, but a republic that makes any consent at all the right of the governed to be heard in governing can not get along with a scheme of government which makes one general universal application of a system of laws to a people who are very variant and so very different from each other. We can modify that very much by making a little change in the government in the Philippines.

We should make it an executive department of the Government of the United States, so that the President can make these contracts with those people in the different islands for their local government under different systems, some containing a little modicum of power of local self-government that is contained in the Indian courts, about which I spoke, and others still higher and higher, until you get to the higher form, in a country like Luzon and Mindanao and Iloilo, and so on.

There we find people, some of whom are capable of government, some very enlightened people, highly educated, well endowed, very wealthy, and who have a knowledge of government, derived not only from their own study of political economics, but also from their observation of the Spanish Government. Let us have that. Let us at least make it possible.

The governor of a Territory would never think about making such an arrangement as that; perhaps he would have no power to do it. He would feel that he was intruding upon the General Government even to make a suggestion about it, unless he was invited to do so. But if we will make the government of the Filipinos a departmental government—that is to say, make it one of the Executive Departments of the Government of the United States—then we have authority under the Constitution to confer the appointing power upon the head of that department, and then that department will be continually reporting to the President of the United States.

One of the things that we need in the United States to-day in respect to our Territories is inspectors to go amongst those Territorial governments, and see how they are administered. I do not intend to make allusions to any particular affair or matter, but have we not seen in our recent experience, as well as in former times, how much trouble has come upon the Congress of the United States in adjusting difficulties that arise in those Territories?

What do they come from? What is the origin of them? It is a fact that men are there attempting to get either statehood or some other situation under which they can aspire to or can attain to high governmental positions. I would remove that from the governor of a Territory, while he was remaining governor of a Territory. He should devote himself, not to his personal and private affairs, but to the affairs of the people he is put there to take care of; and I would have inspectors to see to it that he did conduct himself properly and honestly, I do not care what place he governs or how high and good a man he may be.

So, Mr. President, I am rather anxious to have that feature of this amendment adopted, not particularly on the accounts I have mentioned here to-day, but because it seems to me it is entirely in harmony with the duty we owe to that distant country, the Philippines, and that we ought to keep it as close as we can to the Executive Administration. The President is accountable to us. We may call upon him for information at any time, and he will understand the situation. I think we shall then get along very much more harmoniously.

I have gone through all I meant to say about this subject, and have said a good deal more than I expected to say, because I have been invited to do so by gentlemen who wanted some explanation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Before the Senator from Alabama sits down, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have listened with profound interest to his most engaging argument, and I desire to ask a question before he sits down. I understand the Senator to say and to build his argument upon the proposition that the Philippine Islands are a State within the meaning of the section of the Constitution which he read.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. An integral part of the country?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the Senator's contention?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is not in the Constitution any power, express or implied, to alienate a State or any portion of the Union from the Union itself. That is true, is it not? The Senator assents to that. If that, then, is true, it would necessarily result from the Senator's argument that that portion of the minority substitute which proposes to withdraw the sovereignty of the United States from the Philippine Islands is unconstitutional.

Mr. MORGAN. Provided it were a State in the Union, that would be very clear.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I mean upon the Senator's contention?

Mr. MORGAN. Though I think a judge who wanted to find an excuse for sustaining such an act as that would, in looking over the twenty-five or thirty times that the word "State" is mentioned in the Constitution, find some place or some situation where that could be done. It is a word which, more than any other noun in the Constitution, is governed in its meaning by the context in which it is found.

When I say that in section 10, Article I, the word "State" does include any organized political community that is liable to taxation, I mean it is a State so far that it is capable of being taxed. It may not be a State in many other particulars. It may not be a State that Congress can not switch off and dispose of as property.

Mr. SPOONER. It is not a State in the Union.

Mr. MORGAN. It is not a State in the Union, because there is no State in the Union which is not entitled to representation. It is a State without representation in Congress. Perhaps that is as good a definition as you can give.

I have said now as much as I want to say about this matter. I have not referred to any political phase of this subject. In fact, I have not felt that I was authorized to do it, and I have not wanted to do it; but, of course, if the bill stands as it is and Congress undertakes to make this discrimination, and the great system of uniformity in tariff taxation is broken in the Philippine Islands, I shall feel that the Constitution is violated.

I want to help the islands and I do not want to violate the Constitution. Here we have the opportunity to do this by simply accepting what they have sent to us and asked us to accept. It is a good bill; I have heard nothing against it; and I can not get my consent to oppose a good bill when by the change of a few words we can put it in a condition where it does not violate the Constitution of the United States.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 31, 1902.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CREAMER, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES AND RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS.

Mr. DALZELL. I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution of the House No. 114, has had the same under consideration, and report it back with the recommendation that it be agreed to.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it is seriously claimed that under the treaty-making power of the Government, and without any action whatever on the part of the House of Representatives, or by Congress, reciprocal trade agreements may be negotiated with foreign governments that will of their own force operate to supplant, change, increase, or entirely abrogate duties on imports collected under laws enacted by Congress and approved by the Executive for the purpose of raising revenue to maintain the Government: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Committee on Ways and Means be directed to fully investigate the question of whether or not the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and independent of any action on the part of the House of Representatives, can negotiate treaties with foreign governments by which duties levied under an act of Congress for the purpose of raising revenue are modified or repealed, and report the result of such investigation to the House.

Mr. DALZELL. It will be observed, Mr. Speaker, that this matter relates to one of the highest and most sacred prerogatives of the House. It is not a new question. It has been discussed by Senators and Representatives, and has been the subject of reports in both Houses covering a period of a great many years. There can be no difference of opinion, I apprehend, in this House as to what the report ought to be. I have no doubt that when the report comes it will be debated and adopted in this House by a unanimous vote, without regard to party lines or division on either side of the Chamber. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, it is a matter involving a question of courtesy between the two Houses——

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. DALZELL (continuing). And it ought, therefore, in my judgment, to be deliberately resolved upon; and for that reason the Committee on Rules thought it wise to send the resolution in the first instance to a committee of the House, so that that committee might deliberately form its judgment and report that judgment to the House for debate at some subsequent period.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is what I wanted to ask—if it was simply referred to the Committee on Ways and Means to make a report.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I merely desire to say that the resolution was agreed to unanimously by the members of the Committee on Rules, and that I agree with what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said, that it is a very important resolution—not one involving political lines—one that, if the House expects to reserve the constitutional privileges that have been granted it, in my judgment will be passed in the end. I do not think it necessary at this time to say anything further.

Mr. DALZELL. Let us have a vote.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question for information.

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOODY of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if there is any instance in our history where there has been a change in the tariff laws through the operation of a treaty without the concurrence of the House of Representatives?

Mr. DALZELL. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I know of none.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

OLEOMARGARINE BILL.

Mr. DALZELL. I submit the following privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania also calls up the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred House resolution No. 111, have had the same under consideration and recommend that it be agreed to with the following amendment:

In line 9 strike out the word "passed" and insert the words "disposed of."

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That on Monday, February 3, 1902, immediately after the reading of the Journal, it shall be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill (H. R. 9206) to make oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products subject to the laws of the State or Territory into which they are transported, and to change the tax on oleomargarine; and this motion shall continue privileged until the bill shall have been passed by the House: Provided, however, That it shall not interfere with general appropriation bills, conference reports, consideration of the Private Calendar on Fridays, or special orders already made.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. DALZELL. Just a word. I want to explain the resolution. The purpose of this resolution is to furnish an opportunity to take up and discuss the oleomargarine bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DALZELL. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I was going to say that if the matter is debated, and then the——

Mr. DALZELL. I will not cut the gentleman off.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I know the gentleman will not, but some other gentleman might desire to say a word, and it will be in the power of the gentleman to move the previous question even after five minutes if he sees fit. I do not think the gentleman would take that action, but we want to have a few minutes for debate.

Mr. DALZELL. I will yield to the gentleman in a few minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. All right.

Mr. DALZELL. I was going on to explain the effect of the rule. It is to give to the House an opportunity to discuss and vote upon the question of oleomargarine legislation, there being a bill reported by the majority of the Committee on Agriculture and a substitute recommended by the minority. The rule does not contemplate any curtailment of debate or of the right of amendment, and gives the right of way subject only to appropriation bills and private claim bills, and those that would be privileged and ought not to be cut off. The majority of the Committee on Rules were of opinion that irrespective of any opinion that it has as to the merits of the proposed legislation, the House was entitled to an opportunity to discuss it. Now I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee. How much time?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. A few gentlemen here want a few minutes. I would like the gentleman to agree not to move the previous question, and allow a few gentlemen to discuss the matter.

Mr. DALZELL. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I should say give us thirty minutes on this side.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I said thirty minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Gentlemen will have an opportunity to discuss the merits of the matter hereafter. However, I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee thirty minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We may not use all of it. I only want a moment or two myself to say that the minority members of the Committee on Rules did not think that this bill ought to be made a special order for the date fixed. The rule as reported simply makes the bill a special order. It does not fix the time for a vote on it, and there is no limit to debate, so far as the rule discloses. It simply provides that on the 3d of February the bill shall be in order; that it shall be taken up and discussed.

It was contended that because of the importance of this measure the House ought to dispose of it in some way. Mr. Speaker, the position I take in this matter is, that it is not more important than hundreds of other measures that are pending here; and for myself, I am utterly opposed to picking out this particular bill and giving it priority over other meritorious measures pending in the House. For one, I voted against the rule, and I shall vote now against the adoption of the resolution. If there are gentlemen here on both sides, or on either side, of the House who wish to consider the measure, they can vote for this rule. If they are opposed to the measure, it seems to me there is no reason why they should vote to bring the measure before the House. My idea of it is that it should take its place on the Calendar, just as other measures, and, when reached under the rules, receive its consideration at the hands of the House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat, that there is no reason shown to my mind why this bill should be selected, why it should be singled out by giving it priority over other measures in the House, many of them of far more merit. I do not think this possesses any merit, and ought not to pass, but it is given priority over many highly meritorious measures, and they must stand aside until this bill receives consideration.

The gentleman presenting the resolution, and who actually drew it, asked the House of Representatives to say that it should be pending here until it was "passed" by the House of Representatives. The Committee on Rules, however, changed that language to provide that it should be a standing order until disposed of by the House of Representatives. Of course that is a proper amendment, and it should be agreed to if the resolution is to be adopted.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is all I desire to say, and I yield to my colleague on the committee five minutes if he desires it, and then I will yield to any other gentleman who desires to speak.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, it is true under the terms of this rule that we are only to vote for the consideration of the measure. Under ordinary circumstances I am perfectly willing for the House to take up the business that is on the Calendar and proceed with the consideration of it and dispose of it as the House sees proper. But there are some classes of legislation that I do not believe have any right in the House at all. There are some classes of legislation that are so revolutionary, so contrary to the rights of the citizens of this country, that I think every effort ought to be made to defeat them, from their inception to the end of the chapter. I believe this class of legislation comes under that head.

We have a vast deal of public business to transact before this Congress can adjourn. There are a number of important bills on the Calendars to-day that are not given the right of way or this unusual advantage in legislation. Then, why should we give this particular bill an absolute right of way over everything else except appropriation bills? Let the class of legislation go on that is contemplated in this bill, let the precedent be established that you establish by passing a bill in favor of legislating one industry out of existence in order to promote another industry, and what becomes of the business and the commercial interests of this country? It then does not depend on the resources of the country in which an establishment is carried on; it does not depend on the brains, capacity, and business ability of the men who conduct the industry, but it simply depends upon whether that industry can through political opinion secure legislation that will stifle its competitors and leave it in the sole possession of the field.

This is not the only bill of this kind that is on the Calendar or that has been introduced. Following the proposition to destroy the manufacturers of oleomargarine for the purpose of giving an enlarged market to the butter men of the country, we find a bill on the Calendar that proposes to do the same thing with what is known as "shoddy"—that is, to require a tax and supervision of clothes that contain cotton in them.

In other words, it is now proposed that we not only legislate in favor of the farmer and the cow, but that we legislate in favor of the wool grower as against the cotton grower. That bill has not been reported to the Calendar, but there has been such a bill introduced in the House. If this class of legislation goes on, the day will come when the wheat grower will want legislation to protect him against the corn grower, or the iron manufacturer will want legislation to protect him against the steel manufacturer. If we undertake to adopt resolutions in this direction, there is no end to them. I say that the one true principle upon which we can stand is the principle which comes down to us from the fathers, that the party which legislates least legislates best, and that so far as practicable we should leave the manufacturing, commercial, and business interests of this country unhampered by legislation, free to work out their own destiny. With these views, I believe we should commence the fight on this bill this morning and follow it to the end. [Applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the adoption of this rule. I rise, however, only for the purpose of explaining my position in regard to the subject-matter covered by the proposition. I am wholly and uncompromisingly opposed to this legislation and all kindred legislation.

I believe that at the root of this bill and this proposition lies a menace to the liberties of this country and an assault upon personal rights and freedom. It is a proposition to introduce into the forum of Congress a measure to permit the taxing power of the United States Government (when there is no necessity for raising funds) to be used for the purpose of destroying a great industry, and by consequence building up another industry. It is a simple attempt of the strong to crush the weak. It is a misdirection of Government power and purpose that may be used in the coming years for the overthrow of any other industry of this country. There is not an industrial right enjoyed by a citizen of the United States that may not be in this way assailed and overthrown by a merciless, corrupt, and wicked purpose.

I have been present at and cognizant of the entire discussion of this question in the House of Representatives; and when this bill shall come up for passage I will point out the dexterous, fraudulent, intriguing course that has been pursued from the beginning to the end. The parties interested in this movement in the first place launched their opposition to the manufacture of this article upon the proclaimed assertion that oleomargarine was a commodity injurious to the public health—placing the legislation they asked upon that score alone.

Driven from every position that they occupied, proof having come beyond a reasonable doubt that there is not a single iota of truth in the allegation, they are now here to ask this legislation of Congress upon the pretense that there is a fraudulent sale of one commodity denominated oleomargarine to the injury of another commodity known as butter, while they know that there are more pounds of fraudulent butter sold in the United States, 10 to 1, as a fraud upon the rights of the people than ever were sold under the denomination of oleomargarine. And the best evidence of their knowledge of all this is that they steadfastly refuse any amendment that will put polluted butter, diseased butter, corrupted butter, under the ban of the law of Congress.

But, Mr. Speaker, there was a public demand that this question should be heard; and while it is the popular song of the country that the Committee on Rules is in the habit of strangling legislation and refusing Congress the right to be heard upon these questions, I rise simply to point out that in the membership of the Committee on Rules there will be but one vote in any event—and that only upon a tie—in favor of the passage of this bill when it comes up. Yet the resolution is here for adoption, and I shall vote for it, but I hope to live to vote against the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is first agreeing upon the amendment recommended by the Committee on Rules.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on agreeing to the report as amended.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER. The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 96, noes 62.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I make the point of no quorum voting—no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, as the Chair understood, made the point that there was no quorum voting.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. My point was that there was no quorum present. I first made the point that there was no quorum voting and immediately changed my language and made the point that there was no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count the House.

The House having been counted,

The SPEAKER. One hundred and eighty members are present—a quorum.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask for tellers on the adoption of the resolution.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. TAWNEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 155, nays 71, answered "present" 6, not voting 124; as follows:

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I offer a privileged resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers the following resolution, claiming it to be privileged.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas there are now pending before the Senate numerous treaties proposing commercial reciprocity with other nations, by which customs revenue duties will be changed from those established by acts of Congress duly approved by the President of the United States; and

Whereas there are bills originating in the Senate now pending before that body regulating the duties imposed on articles from Cuba and the Philippines imported into the United States; and

Whereas resolutions have been introduced in the Senate and are now pending in that body declaring that the doctrine of reciprocity as stated in the act of October 1, 1890, known as the McKinley bill and the act of July 24, 1897, known as the Dingley bill, is the true doctrine, and that the various treaties pending in the Senate should receive consideration and action at the present session of Congress: Therefore,

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that the negotiation by the executive department of the Government of a commercial treaty whereby the rates of duty to be imposed on foreign commodities entering the United States for consumption should be fixed would, in view of the provision of section 7, Article I, of the Constitution of the United States, be an infraction of the Constitution and an invasion of one of the highest prerogatives of the House of Representatives.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against that resolution that it is not privileged. As I understood from the reading of it, it recites that certain bills had been introduced in the Senate.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I can not hear what the gentleman is saying.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. PAYNE. As I understood from the reading of it, it recites that certain bills and resolutions had been introduced into the Senate, and makes that the ground for a question of privilege. I suppose the inference to be that the highest rights of this body have been invaded by the introduction of those bills and resolutions.

My point is that the rights and prerogatives of this House are not invaded until the Senate actually sends to us some of those bills or resolutions or passes a treaty which invades the rights of this House, which, I agree with the gentleman, has the right under the Constitution to originate revenue bills. And I agree further that no other laws or treaties for the raising of revenues are valid under the Constitution unless they originate in this House; but my contention is that the prerogatives of this House have not been invaded by what some one may have done in introducing measures in the Senate until that body acts.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee on the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, resolutions similar to this have been presented from almost time immemorial in the House of Representatives, and they have always been held privileged. There has never been a Speaker who has occupied that chair who has not held that resolutions similar to this were privileged in their character.

The resolution declares that the Senate has no right to originate revenue bills; that under Article I, section 7, clause 1 of the Constitution of the United States all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose, or concur with amendments, as on other bills.

That is the clause of Article I under which I contend that the Senate can not take such action.

The gentleman concedes that if the Senate had already acted and had sent a revenue measure here the resolution I offer would be in order. But, Mr. Speaker, why should we await that action of the Senate? The resolution alleges that they have resolutions pending, that they have bills pending, and that they have treaties pending. Why should we sit and wait until the overt act is committed before we declare that it is the prerogative of the House of Representatives to originate revenue bills and arrange tariffs for this country? Mr. Speaker, I think that the very first moment this House can deliver itself of an utterance on this subject it should do so.

I shall not speak disrespectfully of the other body. It is not in order for me even to comment upon the transactions of the coordinate branch of our legislature; but if you read their debates you will find that already learned constitutional arguments have been made, one not later than three days ago, in which it is contended that the Senate has the right to do just what we say in this resolution that body can not do under the Constitution. Now, I have collated these precedents, Mr. Speaker, and if it is necessary I will refer the Chair to them. A number of them are cited in Hines's Parliamentary Precedents.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the gentleman's attention to the point made by the gentleman from New York. The question is submitted to the gentleman that the offering of a resolution or bill which might infringe upon the perogatives of the House, and even the advocacy of it on the floor of the Senate, does not involve that question and would not be an infringement nonconstant. The Senate might reject such a proposition. Now, if the gentleman has any authority to show action of the House where some one in the Senate introduced a resolution or bill, or in making a speech has attacked the prerogatives of the House, the Chair would be glad to refer to that authority.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have already stated, in answer to the contention of the gentleman from New York, that it is not in order for me to quote from the debate in the Senate in the last few days. But already they are contending and offering constitutional arguments that they can do exactly what is declared in this resolution that they can not do. Why should we wait until they have passed a resolution, until they have negotiated a treaty? Why should we wait until a treaty is negotiated by the President and Senate in which the tariff rates of this country are uprooted after Congress has passed tariff bills and established the rates of duty? Why should we wait until the treaty is passed by the Senate, in which they repeal the rates of duty fixed by Congress and enact other rates?

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that we are not compelled to do so; that we have the right to declare that they can not do that which they contend they can do in the face of this provision of the Constitution. If it be true that this body alone can originate revenue bills, we have the distinct right to declare it by a resolution. Resolutions almost exactly in the language of the one I offer have been brought time and again before the House of Representatives, and they have always been passed by it where action was taken.

Now, I do not care to argue it further. I insist that they have already done that which I allege they have done in the resolution. They have taken the steps, have made their arguments, have insisted that they have the right to prescribe tariff rates, and I think we should not wait and should not abandon our constitutional rights, the rights expressly and exclusively given to the House of Representatives. Without being disrespectful, I may say the Senate has already reached out for and absorbed almost every prerogative or power given to Congress as a single body, and therefore I say it is time for this House to assert its prerogatives and privileges.

That has been done a number of times in former Congresses. I will not take time to read the cases, but I had intended, if the House had not already referred the resolution which was reported by the Committee on Rules this morning, to enter quite elaborately into the discussion of this question, but I am content now not to do so. I will be glad to print in the RECORD what I intended to say, in order that gentlemen who feel an interest in the question may have the facts as they are collated from previous reports.

One report was made to the House by Mr. Hooper, signed by himself, by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and by Mr. D. W. Voorhees, of Indiana, all then members of this body in the Forty-first Congress. Another report was made in the Forty-ninth Congress by Judge Randolph Tucker as the chairman of the Judiciary Committee—a very able committee, presided over by that gentleman, and upon which the distinguished gentleman who is now doing me the honor of listening to me, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], served, and who concurred in the able report which Judge Tucker then presented to the House. It was a unanimous report. I believe it was not acted on.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JENKINS. And that is, if this House can, by the adoption of any resolution, control the action of any Senator or the action of the Senate itself?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No, sir; I do not think we can control them; but I think we have the right to protect the constitutional privileges given us, and that we ought not to abdicate or surrender our rights to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. JENKINS. Does not the gentleman think that this House should wait until a bill is acted upon?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Not when we are threatened by the Senate with action on treaties, and when argument after argument has been made and is being made to demonstrate that this body has not the constitutional rights claimed in the resolution I have offered.

Mr. JENKINS. Can we by the adoption of any resolution here prevent the consideration of anything that they may see fit to consider?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. We can assert our rights if we can not prevent them from taking action. The gentleman understands very well the proposition that I am putting before this House. Why should this House wait until the act is consummated, when we know that treaties affecting our prerogatives are pending there, and when they are saying that they have the right to pass them, and if they do pass them that they do not come to this House for its action?

Mr. JENKINS. Can we by the adoption of the resolution prevent them from considering the question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No; but we can call the attention of the country to the fact that they are violating the constitutional prerogatives of this body.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. You will not accomplish anything more than the mere assertion of our right by the adoption of this resolution, will you?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman accomplish anything more by the adoption of his resolution?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, we will accomplish this; we will have a report based upon a thorough investigation of the law and the history of that provision of the Constitution, which will go to the country in connection with the other side of the question, while your proposition is the mere assertion of the right, and lets it rest there. I think it would be more to the advantage of the House if, in connection with the assertion of that right, we give to the country the facts and the law upon which that right is claimed to be based. That is why I think it would be better for a report to be made by a Committee of the Ways and Means.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Minnesota overlooks the fact that this matter has been investigated time and time again. I have here reports, as I have already stated, as able as can possibly be made by any committee in this House. There are two of them, one made by the Judiciary Committee of the Forty-ninth Congress, by Judge Randolph Tucker, of Virginia, who went fully into the question and exhausted it in every legal aspect of the case, and which I intend to make a part of my remarks. Also a very able report made in the Forty-first Congress, signed by Mr. Hooper, a Republican, by the senior Senator from Iowa, Mr. ALLISON, and by the Hon. Daniel W. Voorhees, afterwards Senator from Indiana—two Republicans and one Democrat—then members of this body and who unanimously agreed that the Senate could not do that which is alleged in this resolution they are about to do.

Now, they have exhausted this question, and while I would not disparage in any degree the ability of the gentleman from Minnesota, I do undertake to say that no committee of this House can throw additional light upon this subject. The committee in the Forty-first Congress, by the report signed by Mr. Hooper, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. Voorhees, is complete, thorough, and exhaustive.

In the Forty-ninth Congress, several years later, this exhaustive report of Mr. Tucker, of Virginia, is made, in which he covered the entire constitutional aspect of this case, going back to the very foundation and establishment of the Government.

I do not undertake to say that the gentleman from Minnesota is not an able man, but I venture that we can not throw any additional light upon these two exhaustive reports upon the question now pending. We have no additional information or facts to offer since these reports were made, except that the Senate has more than once since the last report was made transcended its constitutional powers.

The Judiciary Committee of the Forty-ninth Congress was an unusually able one. Mr. Tucker, of Virginia, presided over it, and upon it with him were Mr. Hannand, of Georgia; Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas; Mr. Collins, of Massachusetts; Mr. Seney, of Ohio; Mr. Oates, of Alabama; Mr. Eden, of Illinois; Mr. Rogers, of Arkansas; Mr. Bennett, of North Carolina, all Democrats; and Mr. Taylor, of Ohio; Mr. Parker, of New York; Mr. Ranney, of Massachusetts; Mr. HEPBURN, of Iowa; Mr. Stewart, of Vermont, and Mr. Caswell, of Wisconsin, Republicans.

These able lawyers make this report which exhausts the subject from beginning to end. They reported a resolution, which is very brief, and which it will take but a moment to read.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman what bearing this has on the point of order?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman from New York does not object to it unless he desires to surrender to the Senate of the United States the prerogatives of the great committee over which he presides.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will allow me to break in upon him a moment——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I can not yield to the gentleman for a speech. I will be through in a minute. After this exhaustive discussion by the Judiciary Committee, that committee, composed of the gentlemen whose names I have given, as able lawyers as ever filled seats on the floor of this House, made their report and unanimously offered the resolution, as follows:

That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, can not negotiate a treaty which shall be binding on the United States, whereby duties on imports are to be regulated, either by imposing or remitting, increasing or decreasing them, without the sanction of an act of Congress; and that the extension of the term of the operation of the original treaty or convention with the Government of the Hawaiian Islands, proposed by the supplementary convention of December 6, 1884, will not be binding on the United States without like sanction, which was provided for in the original treaty and convention, and was given by act of Congress.

The second resolution it is unnecessary to read. The conclusion come to by the other committee, and signed by Mr. Hooper, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. Voorhees, is, briefly, this:

That this House maintains that it has the sole and exclusive privilege to originate all bills directly affecting the revenue, whether such bills be for the imposition, reduction, or repeal of taxes; and in the exercise of this privilege, in the first instance, to limit and appoint the ends, purposes, considerations, and limitations of such bills, whether relating to the matter, manner, measure, or time of their introduction, subject to the right of the Senate to "propose or concur with amendments, as in other bills."

Now, my resolution alleges that they are about to negotiate treaties without sending them to the House of Representatives, completely abolishing tariff rates already prescribed by act of Congress. Yet gentlemen say that until the overt act is committed this House has not the right to say that it is the prerogative of the House of Representatives, under the express letter of the Constitution, which I have read, to originate revenue bills, in which the Senate may concur simply with amendments, as in other cases.

Mr. Speaker, I will not ask to detain the House any longer. I think that if we are to preserve our constitutional rights and prerogatives we ought to declare now, we ought to declare when that resolution is reported—I do not know that it will ever be, but if it should ever be reported, we ought to declare then, as we declare now—that we will stand by the prerogative given to us by the Constitution of the United States, the Senate to the contrary notwithstanding. [Applause.]

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question before he surrenders the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman, of course.

Mr. LACEY. When the Dingley Act was passed limiting the power of the treaty-making branch of the Government in regard to reciprocity, and the Senate concurred in that act, was not that a concession that by act of Congress we could limit the power of the Senate and of the Executive in making treaties, and was not that a recognition that the matter was within the control of Congress?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Precisely. It was a recognition, as I understand, of the power of Congress in this respect; yet they propose now to undertake to do by treaty exactly what they agreed then not to do.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has made no answer to the point of order raised by me. The Senate is not responsible for the individual opinion of a Senator. There is freedom of debate in the Senate—I may say this generally without speaking of their practices over there—there is almost everlasting freedom of debate in the Senate. Of that the House has no right to complain. That invades no prerogative or privilege of this House. A Senator has the right to introduce bills. The President has a right to submit treaties; and, by the way, the treaties submitted to the Senate were all submitted under the provisions of the Dingley bill. They are not seeking by those treaties to act outside of the law passed by Congress. They are not seeking to confirm independent treaties, but treaties made under the Dingley law, which require the acquiescence and the vote and the action of the House of Representatives. Yet because the newspapers publish a speech purporting to have been made by a Senator, affirming something which is derogatory to and an invasion of the rights of this House, we are asked, and may be asked every day, to stop the orderly business of the House because its privileges are being violated.

Mr. Speaker, if there had been any precedent bearing upon this particular phase of the question, the gentleman, in hunting up the authorities, would have been able to produce one. But the question is so plain and reasonable that it does not need argument.

As to the other question presented, it seems that some time in the past the House, by a suspension of the rules, has passed a resolution on this subject. Mr. Speaker, upon so important a subject—a subject going to the foundation of the rights of the House, involving a matter of the highest importance in our national legislation—it seems to me it would be more seemly for the House, in the regular, orderly conduct of its business, to refer this resolution, as it did refer a like one this morning, to a committee for deliberation, so that they might present their report upon the subject.

And I think, Mr. Speaker, that no committee of this House would ever present a report on this question which did not embody substantially the report of Randolph Tucker made some years ago, from the reasoning of which I think any lawyer who will fairly read it will say there is no escape. But I want to see this question dealt with in a dignified manner. I want to see the action of the House accompanied with a report. I want to see it acted on after other members of the House have looked up the question and the precedents, as well as the gentleman from Tennessee, so that the debate may attract the attention of the country; for in this matter we are appealing, not to the Senate of the United States, we are appealing to the people of the United States, and presenting to them our opinion of our rights under the Constitution. And when we do that, let us not do it by printing a speech in the RECORD, or by scrambling over each other to vote for a resolution. Let the question be presented with deliberation and upon full debate. Let the members of this House present it fairly to the people of the United States; and when the time is taken to do this, I have no doubt the people of the United States will say that the Senate can not abolish this prerogative solely given under the Constitution to the House to originate revenue bills.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he is in favor of the resolution which I have had read at the desk?

Mr. PAYNE. I can not say from the reading of the resolution whether I am in favor of all its provisions or not. But I am in favor of asserting, as I have said, the prerogatives of the House. I do not believe that the Senate can pass a revenue bill under the guise of a treaty.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is what this resolution declares. If the gentleman favors it, why not adopt it?

Mr. PAYNE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule on this question unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to be heard.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not want to address the court if the court has made up its mind.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made up its mind.

Mr. DALZELL. But the Chair might be wrong.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that when he is once clear in his mind on a question like this it is better to rule on it and let the other business of the House go on.

The question first presented to the House for consideration is whether or not the resolutions offered by the gentleman from Tennessee are privileged resolutions. If so, it is because the prerogatives of the House are invaded. There is also presented the question whether we are entitled to go beyond the regular modes of procedure of the House in order to reach the desired result.

Now, there are three whereases in this resolution, each one of which shows that nothing has been done in this matter by the Senate. There is not a single averment in the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee showing a single specific legislative act on the part of the Senate. On the contrary, the averment in the resolution is simply to the effect that certain resolutions are pending in that body, but in no single case has action been taken upon it.

The Chair would state in this connection that this does not involve a discussion or a definition of the main question presented. It refers only to what has been done or is proposed to be done. The only thing, therefore, for the Chair to determine is whether or not, under the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee, a question of privilege is presented, and whether such resolution is in order under the rules of the House.

Now, up to last night there were pending in the House 10,511 bills and resolutions, and up to the same hour there were pending in the Senate 3,380 bills and resolutions. We all know, as a matter of fact, that not every bill or resolution presented in either body becomes operative as a law, and it will not do to assume that all of this number of bills to which the Chair has called attention will be passed. Nor will it do to say that the House has not been vigilant in the consideration of matters relating to its rights and duties under the Constitution. This very morning, for instance, the House directed one of its committees to investigate and report upon a question which related to its functions under the Constitution. There can be no complaint of the want of consideration of such matters on the part of the House.

There has been no slumbering by the House in regard to its rights. But the House has not undertaken to fortify itself by the adoption of such a resolution as that presented by the gentleman from Tennessee, and the Chair, after a careful examination of his resolution—a dispassionate examination of it—fails to find anything specified in the resolution to indicate any positive action on the part of the Senate which would entitle the resolution to the consideration of the House——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the Chair allow me to suggest in this connection——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Tennessee will allow the Chair to proceed for a moment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to complete his statement by suggesting that, after a careful examination of the resolution, the Chair has been unable to find a single instance as therein——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I thought the Chair asked me a question, to which I desired to make response.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman after he has completed his statement. The observation of the Chair was to the effect that there is no precedent cited by the gentleman wherein the House has felt that its prerogatives were being invaded. In the several cases presented by the gentleman, and where this question was considered by the House, there is nothing to show—not a single instance, as far as the Chair has been able to discover—where the House assumed to act before the Senate had taken such action as invaded the prerogatives of the House. It is true that there is a matter, as appears by the RECORD, which was once considered, where there was action taken as suggested by the gentleman, under a suspension of the rules.

Under individual suspension a gentleman, getting recognition, offered resolutions expressing his views, expressing his fears, calling the attention of the House to supposed dangers, supposed or proposed assaults upon its high privileges and rights; but that is not an authority in point; and if the gentleman can now cite to the Chair a single authority where action was taken by the House before the Senate acted or sent anything to the House the Chair would be very glad indeed to have it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I rose a moment ago in response to the suggestion of the Chair——

The SPEAKER. The Chair at that time had not completed his statement in regard to the suspension of the rules, and wished to do so, because there was one authority that might have been misleading. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I say I rose a few moments ago to state frankly, in answer to the suggestion of the Chair, that each one of the precedents which I had collated, and which are found in Hinds's Digest and in the rules, was a case where the Senate had acted. Therefore I drew this resolution as I did, stating they were now threatening to do the same thing, and I assumed that the question of privilege was created. And it seems to me, under reasoning, that we need not wait until the overt act is committed, in view of what transpires daily in the Senate of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thanks the gentleman for his statement.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is not in order for me to quote from the daily transactions of the other body, but of course I take it the Chair and every other member reads the debates in the Senate. If so, the Chair will find, as other gentlemen will find, that the other body are on the eve of doing—at least judging from the debates—exactly what has been done heretofore. Therefore, I thought the resolution, framed as I had framed mine, created a matter of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in view of the facts which he has stated, is very clearly of the opinion that this is not a privileged resolution. If the hand of the Senate is laid upon the prerogatives of this House, this House will act. There is no doubt about that, and it has already taken steps to be thoroughly qualified for doing it; but at this moment this great body is not justified, as it seems to the Chair, in taking such resolutions and passing upon them, and that the wise course for a great legislative body like the House of Representatives of the United States is to act with coolness and deliberation, and not strike back when not struck at.

The gentleman has his entire remedy, under the Rules of the House, by bringing his resolution before the Committee on Ways and Means or any other committee.

The Chair therefore sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I submit to the ruling of the Chair, of course.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman's statement.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I say I take no exception now to the ruling of the Chair; but inasmuch as the resolution which was introduced this morning, and upon which the Chair lays stress, has been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, I take it, under the ruling of the Chair, until the Senate does take action, that even the report of that committee upon that resolution would not be in order. However, we will decide that question when it comes up.

The SPEAKER. It will come up at the proper time. It is not now before the House or the Chair.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may amend and extend my remarks in the RECORD, and publish such parts of Judge Tucker's report as I may desire. I have spoken hurriedly and without due preparation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that he may extend his remarks in the RECORD, coupled with the right to print extracts from Judge Tucker's report upon this question. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Merely in order that we may have this matter before us.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, if the remarks are to be upon the point of order, I have no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I said I wanted to make extracts from the report of Judge Tucker, simply to have the matter before the House.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection to his printing Judge Tucker's report, but I do object to his going into an argument upon the point of order and printing those remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is the request of the gentleman from Tennessee objected to?

Mr. PAYNE. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. GROW rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. GROW. I simply rise for the purpose of suggesting to the gentleman from Tennessee that if he is not satisfied with the ruling of the Chair he can appeal.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the gentleman from New York desired the information to be given which he seems anxious for the country to have, he would not object to my request. It is a very unusual objection.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing now before the House.

REGULATIONS CONCERNING INDIANS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I call up a privileged report from the Committee on Indian Affairs and call for the reading of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up a privileged report, and the resolution will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution No. 104.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to transmit to the House all orders issued and regulations promulgated by him or any of his subordinates regarding the issuing or the withholding of rations from any Indians under the control of the United States, together with such reports and documents as may be on file in any office under his jurisdiction relating to the effect of said orders and regulations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I want to ask the gentleman a question on that. It is whether this will bring to the attention of the House the order issued requiring the Indians to keep their hair cut?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it will.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to have the resolution I introduced referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. I take it there will be no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. It will be so referred in the regular way. The regular order is the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar in charge of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House, Mr. HEMENWAY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the first bill.

JOSEPH H. PENNY AND OTHERS.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2978) for the relief of Joseph H. Penny, John W. Penny, Thomas Penny, and Harvey Penny, surviving partners of Penny & Sons.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims is hereby given jurisdiction to rehear and reconsider and determine the motion filed in said court by the claimants on the 15th day of April, 1898, for a rehearing and new trial of the case of Penny & Sons v. The United States and Sioux Indians, numbered in said court as Indian depredations No. 4634; and to that end the bar of the statute of limitations against said motion is hereby removed, and the said court is given jurisdiction to rehear and redetermine said motion in the same manner and with like effect as if said motion had been filed and presented within the time authorized by law and the rules of said court; and if said motion shall be sustained by said court, then, and in that event, the court shall proceed to retry and readjudicate the matter involved in said suit the same as if no former judgment had been entered therein.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have an explanation of the bill. I understand that this is a claim that has already been passed upon by the court and adjudicated.

Mr. GRAFF. Has the gentleman from New York read the report?

Mr. PAYNE. I caught that from the reading of the bill.

Mr. GRAFF. The matter is in the hands of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THOMAS], and I will yield to him.

Mr. DALZELL. Allow me to ask you a question. Is not this the same bill we had up in the last Congress, and it was defeated?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. We had it up, and did not come to a vote in the last Congress; and therefore I have brought it to the House at this time.

Mr. DALZELL. It is the same bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. It is the same bill, I will ask the Clerk to read the report of the Committee on Claims, as it explains the bill fully.

The report (by Mr. THOMAS of Iowa) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2978) for the relief of Joseph H. Penny, John W. Penny, Thomas Penny, and Harvey Penny, surviving partners of Penny & Sons, having had said bill under consideration, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill be passed.

The facts on which this report is based, as found by the committee, are fully stated in report No. 175, made to the House during the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress, which is incorporated in and made a part of this report, and are stated as follows:

Penny & Sons filed their suit, No. 4634, in the Court of Claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1891, claiming damages for Indian depredations in November, 1865, and in May, 1867. On a hearing had before the court on April 16, 1893, the case was dismissed, but the court made a finding of facts in the case as follows:

In November, 1865, near Sandhill stage station, Nebraska, Indians of the Oglala Sioux, about 50 in number, at 10 o'clock at night, ran from the herd of the claimants' cattle and drove off 20 belonging to them. In May, 1867, at a point 7 miles east of Julesburg, on the north side of the Platte River, Indians of the Brulé Sioux tribe, numbering about 50, captured and drove away the entire herd of cattle and 3 horses belonging to the claimants, all of which were recovered except 21 head of cattle and 3 horses, saddles, and bridles.

The court further found as a fact that at the time of said depredations the Sioux tribe were in treaty relations but were not in amity with the United States, and, because the tribe that committed these injuries were not in amity with the United States, the plaintiffs' petition was dismissed.

By chapter 538 of the acts of Congress of March 3, 1891, the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims is extended so as to authorize that court "to inquire into and finally adjudicate, in the manner provided in this act, all claims of the following classes: First, all claims for property of citizens of the United States taken or destroyed by Indians belonging to any band, tribe, or nation in amity with the United States without just cause or provocation on the part of the owner or agent in charge and not returned or paid for."

At the time of the decision of the case of Penny & Sons by the Court of Claims the question as to the circumstances under which an Indian tribe should be considered as in amity with the United States had not yet been adjudicated. In the case of Litchfield v. United States and Sioux and Cheyenne Indians (32 C. Cls. R., 585), and in the case of Salois v. United States and others (32 C. Cls., 68), and in the case of the same title (33 C. Cls., 326), decided in 1896 and 1897, it was held, on a full investigation of the facts and records in the War Department, that the Sioux Indians were in amity with the United States in November, 1865, when it is alleged that the first depredation complained of was committed, but were not in amity with the United States in 1867, when, it is alleged, the second depredation was committed.

Under this construction of the act of March 3, 1891, upon the facts found in the cases cited above, the plaintiffs ought to have recovered on their claims for the depredation committed in November, 1865, provided evidence was submitted to sustain the same, but ought not to have recovered for depredations alleged to have been committed in 1867.

After the decision of these cases, on the 15th day of April, 1898, the claimants filed a motion in the Court of Claims for a retrial of their case, citing the decision of the court above referred to, and claiming that they ought to have recovered for the depredation committed in November, 1865, under the law and the facts as disclosed in the foregoing decision, and that the court had erred in not so finding.

On hearing, the court overruled the motion for rehearing and new trial, holding that it had not jurisdiction to entertain the motion, on the ground, evidently, that the motion had not been filed within the time authorized by law and the rules of the court, and that therefore further proceedings were barred by the statute of limitations.

The purpose of this bill is to remove the statute of limitations and to authorize the Court of Claims to assume jurisdiction of the case for the purpose of hearing and trying the motion for a new trial, filed on the 5th day of April, 1898, and to retry said case if the motion for a new trial be sustained.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, as appears from the report of the committee, the only purpose of this bill is to remove the statutes of limitation and authorize the Court of Claims to review and rehear the motion for a new trial now pending in that court. It does not require the court to render any judgment, nor does it propose to control the discretion of the court in its ruling on the motion for a new trial, but merely to act upon the motion that is now pending in the court and enter a ruling one way or the other as the facts before the court may warrant. If the motion is well taken, under the facts as developed in the case, then I submit to this committee that the court ought to have the privilege of sustaining it and retrying the case. That is all we ask by the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. Do I understand this is an act of Congress the purpose of which is to compel a court to pass on a motion pending in that court, and either grant the motion or deny it? Is that the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. It is not. It is simply a bill removing the statutes of limitation, and authorizing the court to assume jurisdiction of the case and hear and determine the motion for a new trial now pending, and if the motion be sustained, then to retry the case.

Mr. DALZELL. Let me ask the gentleman this question. When was it that the court dismissed your first case? What was the date?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. I have not the date definitely.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In 1893, I think.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. It was along some time about then.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is so stated in your report.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Perhaps it was in 1893?

Mr. DALZELL. When was it that Congress passed the act enlarging the jurisdiction of the court?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. March 3, 1891.

Mr. DALZELL. That was prior to the first decision?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Yes, sir.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The case was brought under the act of 1891.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman misunderstands me. The court, as I understand, dismissed your petition in the first place because it had no jurisdiction?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. That is not the case at all. The court found as a matter of fact, as it was then advised, that the tribe of Indians committing the depredations was not in amity with the United States. Under the act of 1891, in order to give the court jurisdiction, it must appear that the tribe committing the depredation is at the time of the depredation at amity with the United States. The court found that at this particular date this tribe of Indians was not at amity with the United States, and that therefore no recovery could be had.

In a subsequent review of the question in other cases, on careful consideration, the court determined that at the time of the commission of the depredation in 1865, the first depredation complained of, this tribe of Indians was in amity with the United States; and, consequently, under the facts found by the court, the plaintiff ought to have recovered for that depredation and ought not to recover for the other depredation committed in 1867, because in 1867 this tribe of Indians was not at amity with the United States, as determined by the court in the several cases before it for adjudication.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, now, when was it that the court in this second investigation changed its mind about this matter?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. In 1896 and 1897. The question came up in another case before the same court, and then, upon the further investigation of the facts and construction of the law as then advised, the court found that in 1865, when the first depredation was committed, the Sioux Indians were at amity with the United States, and being at amity, as finally determined by the court, it is only asking an act of justice to require the court to review its former action and do right to these parties if it be found that an error has been committed.

Mr. DALZELL. I understand that. When did you come into court the second time?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Soon after the second decision. The plaintiffs in that action filed a motion in 1898, but that was filed too late under the law and rules of the court, and accordingly the court overruled it on the ground of want of jurisdiction, because it was not filed within the time required by law and the rules of the court.

Mr. DALZELL. Why was it not filed within the time required by law?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Because the question had not been decided within that time. They did not file it within the time required by law and the rules of court, because the decision had not been made in time.

Mr. DALZELL. One other question. Did the court the second time throw the case out of court on the ground that the statute of limitations had run?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Solely and entirely.

Mr. DALZELL. That is in the opinion of the court?

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to make a statement, in view of the fact that I was familiar with the facts at the last session of Congress?

Mr. DALZELL. In other words, the claimant has had two chances and the court has decided against him both times. Now he wants a third chance.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. That is not the fact.

Mr. DALZELL. That is the fact as you have stated it.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I remember very well the facts in this case as they were developed upon the discussion last winter. In seems that in 1865 and 1867 the claimants suffered injury from depredation by the Indians. In 1891 Congress passed an act creating a liability against the Government for that class of claims, and under that act these claimants filed a suit against the United States in the Court of Claims.

The act provided that where depredations were committed by Indians that were on relations of amity to the United States the liability existed; and in the trial of the case the record shows that the court found that the particular bands of Indians that committed these depredations were not at amity with the United States. That was a question of fact, and the court announced its special finding of facts, and upon the finding of facts the plaintiffs dismissed their case—apparently abandoned it.

Subsequently the court in other claims, it seems, found that in November, 1865, the same month that one of these claims originated, the Sioux Indians were at amity with the United States. But the dates are not identical, and the question upon which the bill hinged last winter was whether the subsequent decision of the court amounted to a practical adjudication of the vital question in the case when it was originally before the court—that is, whether at the particular time when this damage was committed, when these depredations occurred, the Sioux Indians were at amity with the United States.

I took the position last winter—and it seemed to me the reports of the decisions of the Court of Claims bore out that position—that the subsequent decision did not necessarily reach the date when these depredations were committed. Now, it occurs to me as a general proposition that if this Government expends money to maintain courts of adjudication it ought to stand by the judgments of those courts.

But in this case there seems to be an element of uncertainty. The gentleman who introduced the bill and reports it is a man in whose judgment and conservatism I have the utmost confidence, and I am not disposed to oppose the passage of this bill any further; but it occurs to me that the policy of this House ought to be settled, that when there has been once a fair adjudication of a claim against the Government before a court properly organized and constituted, that ought to be final. If this was to stand as a precedent authorizing or justifying Congress in overthrowing the judgment at every session of Congress I should say that the bill ought to be voted down. But with the understanding that it does not constitute such a precedent, that there are peculiar circumstances connected with the case, I shall not oppose the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. There are always peculiar circumstances with every case that comes here asking Congress to remove a bar to a judgment rendered by a competent court.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman from Indiana what reason was there for a lack of diligence in not bringing the case before the Court of Claims as other parties have done subsequently?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, I suppose the attorneys were not as resourceful as the attorneys in the other cases. They thought they were justly beaten, perhaps, in the first litigation, and so abandoned the claim.

Mr. PAYNE. Probably they were. I understand that this adjudication, the later one in the other case, was made in 1895?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In 1895 or 1896 on a different statement of facts.

Mr. PAYNE. What excuse is there for a lack of diligence on their part in not prosecuting the motion for a new trial until 1898?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand that under the rules of the court a motion for a new trial is required to be filed within two years, so that even then they would have been barred by that proceeding. But the author of the bill informs me that the original decision had not fully settled what constituted amity or what constituted belligerency as between the Federal Government and the tribes of Indians within its jurisdiction. That was a somewhat unsettled question; it was in a kind of nebulous state. They have subsequently settled that question.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Did not the court in the first place decide in this case that these Indians were not in amity?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; they decided that at these particular dates the Indians were not in amity.

Mr. PAYNE. And in another case, at some other date, but about the same time, the court decided that they were in amity?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In the same month, in acting upon another claim, it was decided that they were in amity.

Mr. PAYNE. But not on the same day?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not on the same day.

Mr. PAYNE. I should suppose that the question whether these Indians were in amity or not would be a matter that could be settled in five minutes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I presume that, in view of the predatory character of Indian warfare, it was pretty difficult to settle the exact status of these Indians.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that the first decision, that at the time of the first raid the tribe was not in amity, stands uncontradicted up to this time.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It does, and will stand unless Congress passes this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. But Congress can not change a fact of that kind by passing a bill.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The question is, have any new facts developed?

Mr. PAYNE. In another case, in the same month of November—but whether before or after the action on this case does not appear, and whether there had been any change in their relations does not appear—the court decided that these Indians were in amity. The presumption is that there has been no change in their relations. In one case the courts, after a hearing which we are bound to suppose was a full hearing, and we are to assume that the parties used due diligence, the court decided that these Indians were not in amity; and then in another case in the same month, after what we are to suppose was another full hearing, the court decided that they were in amity.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Let me explain to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] that the finding of the court set out the dates when hostilities commenced and when hostilities ceased. There is no question about that at all.

Mr. PAYNE. That does not appear in the report.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. I move that the bill be laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to say just a word about this case. With some hesitation I oppose the gentleman's motion; but I recollect having investigated this case in the last Congress, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] also investigated it, I think. It was debated at some length. The matter has been decided. The parties have had their day in court.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. The matter has not been decided, because by reason of delay a vote was prevented. The question was never brought to a vote, though the bill was favorably reported by the House committee.

Mr. CANNON. But the parties have had their day in court; the adjudication has been made, and they were beaten in an adjudication under the law.

A MEMBER. They had two days in court. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Now, somehow or other, there ought to be an end not only as to this case, but generally as to this class of cases. This is one of the Indian depredation cases. They have been piling up in the office of the Secretary of the Interior for many, many years. They piled up until there were forty or fifty or sixty million dollars of them. Finally Congress, after full discussion, sent this class of cases to the Court of Claims; and there was organized in the office of the Attorney-General a division that had charge of Indian depredation cases. Attorneys for the Government journeyed all over the country at great expense and took evidence; they are still doing it. But finally, in the fullness of time, adjudications were had under this law; and cases have been and are now being disposed of by the hundred—yes, by the thousand.

Great blocks of them have been turned down, but a great many of them have turned up; so that now there are on the urgent deficiency bill, as there will be on the general bill, appropriations to pay the judgments of the courts in this class of claims. But when the cases have been turned down by an adjudication of a court to which they were sent under the legislation of Congress, where the proof has been taken, the cases formally tried, and final judgments rendered against the parties—this is one of those cases, and there are hundreds of others—it seems unfortunately true that such an adjudication is not an end of the case or cases, but like hope they "spring eternal." They come up again and want to have another chance.

Mr. GRAFF. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CANNON. Most assuredly.

Mr. GRAFF. I only want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that this case involves twenty head of cattle. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Very well; suppose it does. I do not care whether it involves one, two, twenty, or a thousand. That is not the question. What we are to consider here is the general principle involved. The question is whether the Government shall provide special legislation for such cases. These are old claims. We all recognize them. They come up regularly every Congress.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a mere matter of computation. It is a matter that we can all determine for ourselves. We can study these cases, add them up, and see what the total cost is to be to this Government. It is not so much the value or amount of the pending claim as to what will follow if we establish such precedents. It is not a pleasant thing to have to oppose legislation of this character. But there are several able assistants all around me, gentlemen who keep their eye on legislation for the purpose of preventing extravagant appropriations in matters of this character.

We know very well that there are multiplied scores of persons watching, carefully, in this country amendments and propositions which come in here, upon our bills, looking to the expenditure of the people's money; and our duty—the duty with which we are charged here—is to see that that expenditure shall not be improperly made. Unfortunately, however, this is not the only proposition of this character that will come before us. It is common to say that "Uncle Sam" is the best paymaster in the world. No matter what the amount of the bill may be, he can foot it.

But, Mr. Chairman, we ought to ask here, no matter how small the amount may be—as in all other cases—where are we to stop? What is to be the limit of these expenditures? Is there justice in the claim, and is the Government under any obligation whatever to pay it? There seems to be a prevalent opinion that "Uncle Sam" will pay all claims of any character, no matter what they may be or how far they may reach. There are people who do say, however, that Uncle Sam is the poorest paymaster on earth. But that is very far from the truth. He is the very best on the face of the earth, but there are certain conditions——

Mr. LOUD. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. CANNON. In just a moment. There are conditions, I say, prevailing which we must consider. In the first place, before Uncle Sam pays a claim of any character we must determine its standing. If it is a legal claim, if it is a just one, he will pay it. But the fact of its legality must be established. In that case we provide for the payment. In the second place, as gentlemen are aware, we must appropriate the money according to law, and in the third place, when we consider questions of this character, if there is a doubt in the mind of the House, we send such cases to the Court of Claims—a court established at great expense by the Government for the purpose of considering matters of this kind. We all understand that we can not consider them here as thoroughly as they can be considered in a proper court. That court has jurisdiction to determine the claim. It makes its report upon the claim submitted to it and sends it to Congress for the appropriation.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa, as I understand him, wants to go back to get pay for his 20 head of cattle to the Treasury without reference to the existing law. Why not say frankly to him—and I am not assailing him in any way; I do not blame him; I would have done the same thing myself for a constituent; [laughter]; but the fair way, and in my judgment the only way, since Uncle Sam is an honest man and wants to be fair to all of his family as well as to himself—that the only way is to let this matter go before the court and be adjudicated by the proper tribunal.

Mr. LOUD. Now will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CANNON. With a great deal of pleasure. I believe that every one of these so-called Indian depredation claims, either by individual bill or by wholesale legislation changing the law, will be here until every one of them is paid, unless Congress now and from this on puts its foot down and says to these gentlemen, "You have had your day."

Mr. LOUD. But they will not do that, you know.

Mr. CANNON. Well, you say they will not do that——

Mr. LOUD. Twenty-six years' experience ought to teach the gentleman that.

Mr. CANNON. But is that an argument why everybody who comes and asks should receive? Of course this bill was here in the last session. It was not enacted. It is here this session. I do not know; these claimants may move over into my district and become my constituents, or the constituents of somebody else, and may come in in the next session. I am not faulting anybody. I am speaking of a condition.

In the absence of a constitutional amendment prohibiting this kind of thing you can not shut them out, and they will be passing back and forth through the years, this and all other claims, and the claimants will be swearing that Uncle Sam is the most fraudulent fellow on earth, but he is not; and I do not think the gentleman's question is an argument in favor of the passage of this bill, because, if they should be turned down in the court again and should move over into the gentleman's district or mine, there would be another bill presented if necessary.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I wanted to see if we could not solve this practically, in the opinion of the gentleman. Now, the gentleman is getting old. His time is too valuable——

Mr. CANNON. Well, I will say to my friend that I am 47 years old. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman and myself and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and perhaps one or two more, will soon go out. This bill, in the light of the history of the days that have gone, is quite likely to pass, is it not? That is, it will be here until men who are familiar with the subject are dead and gone, and then it will pass.

Mr. CANNON. Well, sometimes I think——

Mr. LOUD. And now is it worth the wear and tear and the spending of your valuable time?

Mr. CANNON. I sometimes think that when my friend from California and myself die wisdom will take its departure; but, after all, I do not know.

Mr. GRAFF. We hope the Republic will still live, after you are gone.

Mr. CANNON. After all, with 357 people here and 386 people soon to be here, I apprehend that gentlemen will perform their duty; and then my beautiful and reliable friend and colleague from the Peoria district in Illinois [Mr. GRAFF], for whom I have great respect, is a mere youth, and he will be here for fifty years, and I am willing to trust him.

Now, I have said all that I want to say about this case. I do not think it has any more equity than 2,000 other cases that have been turned down in the Court of Claims, that have had their day in court, and had a finding of the court against them.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. I yield first to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. It seems that the court rejected this claim upon the ground that this tribe of Indians were not in amity with the United States. Now, subsequently the court comes along and says, "We were mistaken," or says that indirectly.

Mr. CANNON. That is not the case.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. As I understand it, from this report, the court comes along in 1896 or 1897 and says that a state of amity did exist between this tribe of Indians and the United States back in 1891.

Mr. PAYNE. Some time during the same month.

Mr. CANNON. I have not looked at the case since last fall. Now let me tell you what I recollect about it. When the exact question involved was adjudicated by the court, for the taking of these cattle, the court found that at that time these Indians were not at amity.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. And rejected the claim upon that proposition.

Mr. CANNON. Rejected the claim upon that ground. Now, that was when the question was being tried in this case, when issue was joined. The question of facts was heard fully, and that was the finding of the court. Now, in another case at another time, when the question of amity at this exact time and in this exact case was not involved, the court indulged in some language that might possibly be construed to cover the time. In that case, however, that was tried at that time they found that the Indians were at amity.

Now, the gentleman says that that time was the same as this time. But this case was tried, and gentlemen will understand that in a matter of a day or two or three days it is more easy for a witness to make a mistake than one could imagine; and the question was not as to the exact date. They might be at amity one day and not at amity the next day. In the nature of things it is difficult to say, from the record that is made in another case, entirely different from this case, by the loose language of the court, what it would affect in the judgment of the court in the other case.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. That is the point I want to inquire about. Whether the language was loose in the last two cases or not, as we have heard it stated, I think, since this bill has been called up, in the two cases decided in 1895 and 1896 the court undertook to say that that tribe of Indians was in amity with the United States from a certain day to a certain date, covering the date these cattle were taken. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. CANNON. Well, now, in the other case, as I was not there and did not examine the evidence in the other case with this case, when the question involved was Were these Indians at amity? and after full trial, the court held that they were not.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question in all friendliness?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. How much is involved in this bill?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know.

Mr. SIMS. What does the chairman say?

Mr. GRAFF. My understanding is that it is 20 head of cattle.

Mr. SIMS. How many dollars?

Mr. GRAFF. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THOMAS] introduced the bill.

Mr. SIMS. I join with the gentleman in what he says, and I think there ought to be an end put to some of these things. I want to know if the gentleman will come in here and render such valuable service as this on a measure of this kind, if he will be present when a lot of bills respecting claims made before the Selfridge board comes before this House, relating to contracts where the parties received the money and gave their receipt in full—questions involving thousands and thousands of dollars, coming from the Committee on War Claims. If he can devote so much time to this measure, involving payment for 20 head of cattle, I hope he will be able to give us the benefit of his assistance in these bills about great ship contracts.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, before my friend was officially born, so far as this House was concerned [laughter], I was fighting the claims that he refers to, and have always fought them.

Mr. SIMS. They need still more.

Mr. CANNON. I agree with the gentleman. But is that any reason why the precedent should be made that every attorney who hangs about the corridors of this Capitol with cases and cases that have been turned down in the courts shall fly in by special bills or a general bill and seek to have a new adjudication made? I am quite sure I do not care whether this is $10,000 or $10. It is wrong in principle, where they have had their day in court and the matter has been adjudicated, to open it up again and again.

Mr. SIMS. But these gentlemen got the money and signed receipts in full, and are coming to Congress for thousands upon thousands.

Mr. CANNON. How does that affect this? Here is a great deal stronger case than that, because this is a case which has been adjudicated; that is a case of receipt for the payment of money, settlement, and it is a case of getting something notwithstanding settlement. But there was no adjudication of court there. There is here. And if I was inclined to specially plead and distinguish between the two cases, I would say that that is not nearly so strong a case as this, although I do not believe anything ought to be paid in that case, nor do I believe that anything ought to be paid in a case like unto it.

Mr. SIMS. And if the gentleman will only help me there will not be anything paid.

Mr. CANNON. I commend my friend to a few broken remarks I made about sixteen years ago upon that or a kindred case, when I was a younger man and had more time. I sometimes think that when I have all the time I want I scatter as bad as an old-fashioned shotgun. I did not have but twenty minutes in that case, and I recollect my remarks with some pride. I think it was about sixteen years ago.

Mr. SIMS. I will be entitled to an hour, and will give it all to the gentleman.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. I want to dispose of the bill. The subject has been fully considered, and if the Committee of the Whole wants to defeat the bill it can do so. All I ask is that the bill shall be disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. THOMAS of Iowa. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 37.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No quorum present, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point that there is no quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes have it; and the bill is laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 8759) to require cases of typhoid fever occurring in the District of Columbia to be reported to the health department of said district.

RASMUSSEN & STREHLOW.

The committee resumed its session.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5106) for the relief of Rasmussen & Strehlow.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $15,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the relief of Rasmussen & Strehlow, contractors on Government work, on account of damages done to the main Government building at the Pan-American Exposition grounds by the cyclonic storm of September 12, 1900.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, the facts in this case are as follows: Rasmussen & Strehlow were contractors for the erection of a building at the Buffalo Exposition. It was a large temporary structure, and when they had it partially completed an unusual storm came on and blew the building down. On account of its temporary character the plans were not sufficient to make it strong enough to bear the stress of the unusual storm that came upon it at the date mentioned in the report. That was on September 12, 1900, when it blew down. The contractors accordingly addressed a letter, which is incorporated in the report, to J. K. Taylor, the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, which is as follows:

BUFFALO, N. Y., September 12, 1900.

SIR: A cyclone blowing at the rate of 70 to 80 miles demolished nearly all of the framework of the main building between 1 and 4 o'clock this morning. Your superintendent visited and examined the wreck immediately, and he directed us to clear the wreckage and rebuild at once. We appeal to you and expect the Government to reimburse us for this loss, which was an act of God. We have taken all precautions to guard against damages, but we can not take the consequences of a cyclone. Your plans do not provide for such forces of wind pressure, and the wreck would not have occurred if the construction was heavy enough to withstand the conditions.

We place our loss at from $25,000 to $30,000. We shall immediately clear up and rebuild, but we look for you to pay us.

Trusting to your high sense of honor in this matter, we are,

Respectfully,

RASMUSSEN & STREHLOW.

Mr. J. K. TAYLOR,
Supervising Architect, Treasury Department.

Then the following letter from J. K. Taylor, the Supervising Architect, was received by them:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., September 14, 1900.

SIRS: Referring to a contract with you for the erection and completion of the United States Government buildings, Pan-American Exposition on the Niagara Frontier, the receipt of your letter of the 12th instant, addressed to the Supervising Architect of this Department, is hereby acknowledged, in which you state that by reason of an unusual storm at Buffalo, N. Y., on the morning of the 12th instant, nearly all of the framework of the main building was blown down.

Your statement is noted, that you will immediately clear up and rebuild, but that you look to the Government to reimburse you for any cost incident thereto.

The Government recognizes the promptness of your action in this regard and appreciates the seriousness to you of the loss and damage which you have sustained by the action of the elements; and while the Department will be willing to aid you in securing the enactment of legislation for your relief, it has no authority to bind the Government to pay you in excess of the amount of your contract for the completion of the work. If you will therefore forward to the office of the Supervising Architect of this Department a detailed statement of the cost entailed upon you, due and further consideration will be given thereto, looking to presenting the matter to Congress with favorable recommendation for the enactment of legislation for appropriation and relief.

A copy of this letter has been forwarded to the superintendent, with directions to gather all information affecting this transaction, in order that it may be of record.

Respectfully,

——— ———,
Acting Secretary.

Messrs. RASMUSSEN & STREHLOW,
74 West Chippewa street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Now I will read the letter from the Supervising Architect to the Secretary of the Treasury.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, December 6, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to call your attention to the fact that on September 12, 1900, a cyclonic storm materially damaged the main building at the Pan-American Exposition grounds at Buffalo, N. Y.; that such damage was not on account of any carelessness of the contractors, as the construction provided that the building be of very temporary character, and it was unreasonable to expect the contractors to provide such form of construction as would resist the violence of such unusual storm.

Two representatives from this office, immediately after the damage, made a careful estimate of the cost of replacing the damaged portion, and fixed the sum at $15,000. This office has received a written proposition from the contractors to accept such sum in full for the damage sustained. As it is doubtless an obligation of the Government to reimburse the contractors for the loss, I recommend that the attention of Congress be called to the matter, and that it be requested to appropriate $15,000 to reimburse the contractors, Rasmussen & Strehlow, for the loss sustained by them on account of damage caused by the cyclone referred to.

Respectfully,

J. K. TAYLOR,
Supervising Architect.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

In addition to that I have a copy of a letter from the director-general to these contractors in which the director-general, William I. Buchanan, of the Exposition says:

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION 1901,
Buffalo, N. Y., U. S. A., August 28, 1901.

GENTLEMEN: In reply to your request regarding the damage done to the United States Government building by the wind storm last September I have to say that, while the Exposition Company had no control over this building, nevertheless I have on many occasions observed the progress of the work carried on by your firm under the Government superintendent of construction, and I have no hesitancy in saying that, in my judgment, the manner employed by you for the erection of this building was a proper one and that the destruction of the main building by reason of the cyclone on September 12 was not due to any fault of yours, but to the fact that the intensity of the wind pressure could not be withstood by the building.

It is a pleasure for me to state that, notwithstanding your serious setback and loss that you suffered therefrom, that you completed your building on time, and I sincerely hope the Government will reimburse you for the loss you suffered.

Very truly, yours,

CARLTON,
Director of Works.

Messrs. RASMUSSEN & STREHLOW, Omaha, Nebr.

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION 1901.
Buffalo, N. Y., U. S. A., September 7, 1901.

GENTLEMEN: In reply to your request I desire to say that the great storm which visited Buffalo, N. Y., on the morning of September 12, 1900, seriously damaged several of the Exposition buildings then in course of construction, and that the Exposition Company believing, after full consideration, that these damages were caused through no fault of the contractors but as a result of an unprecedented storm, thought an allowance should be made the contractors for the extra work required by the Exposition to be done by them in order that the buildings should be put in proper repair.

The Exposition Company has nothing whatever to do with the Government building in any sense, and hence can in nowise assist you with regard to your claim in that direction, but I feel certain that you will be given a fair consideration with regard to the subject which you unquestionably deserve.

Yours, very truly,

WM. I. BUCHANAN,
Director-General.

Messrs. RASMUSSEN & STREHLOW, Omaha, Nebr.

Then in addition to that the condition of the buildings rendered it impossible for the contractors to protect themselves by obtaining cyclone insurance, and the amount which is asked in the bill is in accordance with the amount recommended to the Department. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman, the chairman of the committee, a question.

Mr. GRAFF. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman wherein this proposition differs from the construction by a contractor of a building in any State where he is overtaken by a cyclone and it is blown down?

Mr. GRAFF. It differs very materially. If the contractor for a permanent Government building was to commence the erection of that building, and while it was in an incomplete state it should be destroyed, he would be to blame because he could protect himself by cyclone insurance, which would be obtainable upon a permanent work in any stage of the progress upon the building which was intended to be used permanently. But this was a large balloon structure, and it was an unusual storm. The contractors constructed it in accordance with the plans that they themselves had not provided, but which were provided by the Supervising Architect.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. The theory upon which the recommendation in favor of this bill is made would cause the Government to become insurer for every contractor constructing a building where it was lost.

Mr. GRAFF. Not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It seems to me that when the Government pays so well for the construction of its buildings it does not come with a good grace from contractors to ask us to insure them against any loss by fire, storm, or flood.

Mr. GRAFF. Not at all. This was the construction of an immense temporary building, and the parties proceeded in the utmost good faith; they could not foresee this unexpected and unusual storm. The reason why the building was unable to resist that storm was because of the kind of plans made by the Supervising Architect, representing the Government.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the Architect say so?

Mr. GRAFF. The Architect says so in the letter I have read.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Does the gentleman recommend that the Government should pay all contractors for the erection of buildings for the Government when in a temporary state of erection a cyclone comes and blows them down, or they are destroyed by other inevitable means?

Mr. GRAFF. I would not recommend the payment to a contractor for a loss sustained through a cyclone unless under some such circumstances as these. The contractors were forced to build it so it could not resist the storm by the plans of the Government itself, and the contractors were unable to procure cyclone insurance for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Suppose the Government had authorized the erection of a building and entered into a contract with contractors for it, and the building was not fireproof and it caught fire and burnt up?

Mr. GRAFF. There is no difficulty about procuring ordinary fire insurance.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is there any difficulty about securing cyclone insurance?

Mr. GRAFF. There is no difficulty under ordinary conditions.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is there any precedent in Federal legislation for this sort of a bill?

Mr. GRAFF. I do not know of any other case just like this; but I have no doubt there are precedents in analogous cases.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to have the gentleman cite them.

Mr. GRAFF. There have been precedents in analogous cases where contractors have been compelled to do extra work. In the present case the contractors constructed two buildings instead of one; that is, they constructed the building which was completely demolished, and then they cleared away the wreckage and constructed a completely new building.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There is absolutely no analogy between the case the gentleman has instanced and this case. Where the Government has entered into a contract for the construction of a building, and afterwards changes the plan, so as to necessitate additional expenditure on the part of the contractor in order to erect such a building as the Government wishes, compensation ought, of course, to be made on account of the change of the plans. But what I want to know is whether there is any precedent in Federal legislation for the Government of the United States reimbursing a contractor on account of loss suffered by reason of accident—fire, flood, storm, or the public enemy—the injury taking place while the contract was in course of execution and the plans not having been changed.

Mr. GRAFF. I think there is. There are numerous cases——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wish the gentleman would cite one.

Mr. GRAFF. There are numerous cases where, as in this case, there would be extreme hardship in compelling the parties, without any possible means of protecting themselves, to make an outlay on account of damage for which they were in nowise responsible. There are cases where equitable claims under such circumstances have been paid, conditions having arisen which the contractor could not foresee and where he has proceeded in the utmost good faith in carrying out the contract. Congress in such cases has given relief on account of these equitable considerations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Would the gentleman be willing to enter into a bond guaranteeing that other claimants who may have suffered similar loss in that cyclone will not present claims here for reimbursement?

Mr. GRAFF. If the gentleman will sign such a bond I will join with him.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It seems to me that this is probably only one of a number of similar cases of loss suffered by contractors in the city of Buffalo.

Mr. GRAFF. I do not see any analogy between citizens who may have suffered damage by reason of this cyclone in the city of Buffalo and these contractors for the erection of a Government structure.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. In what amount do they ask to be reimbursed?

Mr. MERCER. In reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], let me say that I think there was a case at St. Albans, Vt., somewhat similar to the present one. In that case a public building in process of erection was partially destroyed by fire, as I now remember. It is understood that the Government as a rule does not insure its buildings. They are erected in a careful manner, and as a rule more money is expended by the Government upon public buildings than by private parties upon their structures. But in the case of the exposition at Buffalo a temporary building was erected by the contractors, following out the designs or plans of the Supervising Architect, and because those plans provided for a temporary building the contractors were not able to take out any cyclone insurance.

This storm, Mr. Chairman, was extraordinary in its velocity and force. A case of the kind is not liable to happen perhaps in fifty years; but that storm caught these men as that time referred to and did them damage, as they say in their statement, to the extent of $25,000 or $30,000. Two inspectors were sent to Buffalo from the office of the Supervising Architect to make an examination. They reported that in view of all the circumstances of the case, these people, having honestly and conscientiously done their work and finished it within the prescribed time, were entitled to a recompense of $15,000. Upon the strength of that report the Treasury Department has recommended reimbursement in this case.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Those inspectors were not legislators, and went to Buffalo on that duty probably as a matter of special favor. Now, I wish to ask whether anything was done on the part of the Government which prevented those contractors from guarding against this terrific wind?

Mr. MERCER. This building was of a temporary character.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Other buildings, I understand, were destroyed at the same time. The storm was pretty general, was it not?

Mr. MERCER. No other Government building was destroyed, so far as I know.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. But because a man erects a Government building, should he have special protection. Other citizens suffered loss in the same cyclone. Why should persons who engaged in the erection of a Government building have extra protection? They get ample pay for their work. I submit that there has been no precedent heretofore in favor of this species of legislation, and I think we should now be setting a bad precedent if we should pass this bill.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I should like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] a question. I understand it to be a rule of the Committee on Claims to report against the Government and in favor of the claimants where, if the Government stood in the situation of a private individual, legal liability on its part would exist.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Has the committee followed that rule in this instance?

Mr. GRAFF. I am not sure about that. There is in this correspondence an assurance in writing from the Supervising Architect, representing the United States——

Mr. SOUTHARD. He may not be a lawyer.

Mr. GRAFF. It does not make any difference whether he is or not. He knew the full effect of his recommendation.

Mr. SOUTHARD. But the chairman of the committee is a lawyer, and I am asking him this question.

Mr. GRAFF. The Supervising Architect advised the contractor to clear away the wreckage and go on with the construction of the building.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Was not the contractor charged with a knowledge of the law?

Mr. GRAFF. That is true; and therefore I say I am not quite sure that from a legal standpoint there would be a liability in this case. But I say that this is one of the strongest equitable cases ever presented before our committee, and I am somewhat astonished that there should be any objection to it.

Mr. SOUTHARD. But I would like to ask the gentleman to state a case, if he can, where there would be a semblance of liability on the part of anybody if under the circumstances to which he refers an action were brought in any court of this country with reference to this matter.

Mr. GRAFF. I have just stated, Mr. Chairman, what I believe to be a proper construction of the law in this case. It is almost impossible to conceive of any man being placed in the condition which has been placed upon the party who asks relief in the pending bill.

Mr. SOUTHARD. But, as I understand it, this work is being done under a plan which has been prepared in advance.

Mr. GRAFF. Certainly; just as the report shows.

Mr. SOUTHARD. And, of course, this party understood what he undertook to do. In other words, he is a party to the contract.

Mr. GRAFF. I think so.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Then I ask the gentleman to inform the House or the committee where there is any semblance of liability which arises on the part of Congress to make restitution in a case of that character? How could this be demanded in the case of a corporation, for instance, standing in the place of this party?

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, it would be utterly impossible to present all of the cases which come before the various committees of the House—and especially before the Committee on Claims—from the same standpoint. It was apparent to the committee, after due consideration of the case, that the report which has been presented should be considered favorably and adopted by the House. We have to consider bills of every character, coming from all parts of the country.

A MEMBER. Is it not true that even presumably permanent structures may be destroyed by a storm?

Mr. GRAFF. Of course; no one can dispute that; but it is also equally true that Government structures erected upon a permanent basis are not likely to be destroyed by anything short of an earthquake.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GRAFF. I will yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I simply wish to ask a question. Let us suppose the case of a carpenter who undertakes by contract to erect a structure, and the structure is destroyed before its completion. Now, how is such a case a precedent for this case? Where is the ground upon which the carpenter could exact payment for the loss of the destroyed building? If the gentleman can show that he has the legal right to recover and can harmonize his bill with the carpenter's right, if he has any, I will support it with pleasure.

Mr. GRAFF. Because the man has no remedy at law he must come to Congress; and in our committee we are to consider whether the equities are strong enough to move us to recommend favorable action by Congress.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You say I had a case similar to this. That was a case where there were a lot of stamps on tobacco. The stamps had been bought——

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the Government had the money——

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the stamps had been put on the tobacco——

Mr. GRAFF. And tobacco and stamps both were destroyed by fire without the fault of anyone.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They had not been removed from where it had been stamped—it had not been sold—and the stamps and the tobacco were both burned, our stamps were burned before we could use them, and the Government had the money, and we asked the Government to give us back our stamps or the money, and Congress gave the claimant the money cost of the stamps.

Mr. GRAFF. And the reason in that case why you could not procure insurance was because you could only procure insurance for the value of the goods without the additional value which the stamps placed upon the goods gave them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That was one of the reasons; but the main reason was that the Government had our money, and we wanted to get our money back for the stamps burned before we had used them. That and this case are not on a parallel, it seems to me.

Mr. GRAFF. It is a very similar case, because the contractors had put in the value of the materials upon this Government building and were proceeding in the erection of it. There is no legal liability in any of the cases that are presented to Congress. If there were, why, the parties would have recourse to the courts.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. MADDOX. Did the Government prescribe the specifications for the building, and was the contractor building according to the specifications?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, exactly.

Mr. MADDOX. And they were too weak to sustain the structure?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, and admittedly so by the letter of the Supervising Architect.

Mr. MADDOX. Is not that the real point in the case that takes it out of the general rule?

Mr. GRAFF. It strikes me so, and I have endeavored to urge that reason.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I understand the gentleman does not place this on a legal obligation, but purely upon a question of quasi-good morals, or something of that kind.

Mr. GRAFF. I am placing it upon an equitable ground.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What would you say to the application of this principle to the transportation of our troops to the Philippine Islands or any other port? Suppose the company transporting them had insurance on the vessels and it proved afterwards, after a disaster had sent the ship to the bottom, that the insurance could not be collected. Then would you say it would be the duty of the United States Government, under the theory of the committee reporting this bill, that the United States should reimburse the ship company for the loss of the vessel?

Mr. GRAFF. I do not see any similarity between the two cases; because in the case of the vessel the company would be the owners of the vessel, but here the material is placed in a building situated upon ground which belongs to the Government. The title is in the Government; but the contractor, under the strict terms of the contract, is not entitled to pay until he completes the building.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You stated a few minutes ago that the architect had compelled the contractor to build the building according to his plans.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And that the architect was the employee or agent of the Government.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And by reason of being compelled to go on in accordance with the plans of the Government's agent he could not get this insurance, and by reason of not getting the insurance the loss is a dead loss to the contractor. A rather unusual case in that respect.

Mr. GRAFF. That is it.

Mr. CANNON. Now, let me ask my friend—I want to understand what was the price for this building—about how much?

Mr. GRAFF. I will ask the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] if he knows?

Mr. MERCER. I forget the exact amount.

Mr. CANNON. Somewhere near $300,000, was it not?

M. MERCER. I do not think it was so much as that.

Mr. CANNON. Not so much as $300,000? Now, I want to ask my friend——

Mr. MERCER. Perhaps the gentleman from New York [Mr. RYAN] can state.

Mr. RYAN. I have forgotten, but I think it was in the neighborhood of $300,000.

Mr. MERCER. Perhaps it was.

Mr. CANNON. I think so. The Government of the United States made plans and advertised for bids for the construction of this gossamer building.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes; and these parties were the lowest bidders.

Mr. CANNON. These parties were the lowest bidders?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes; sir.

Mr. CANNON. And the report says on that kind of a building they could not get cyclone insurance.

Mr. GRAFF. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. They knew that when they took the contract, did they not?

Mr. GRAFF. I presume they did.

Mr. CANNON. Presumably they knew that, and in taking the contract and acting upon it they became their own insurers. Will my friend tell me how much more it cost the Government to construct this building on account of its gossamer appearance than it would if it had an insurable status?

Mr. GRAFF. I suppose that these parties did not contemplate a cyclone. I presume they did not.

Mr. CANNON. Well?

Mr. GRAFF (continuing). Or they would probably not have bid at all. But they certainly would not have taken the risk of a cyclone destroying the building, for instance, at a still later stage, when they might have lost not $15,000 but a great deal more than that. None of the parties contemplatedthis unusual storm.

Mr. CANNON. Well?

Mr. GRAFF. They obtained the contract because they bid the lowest, and hence they made the least profit of any of the other contractors. So far as any strict legal liability is concerned, I am not here to urge that; but I do say that it did strike me as a very strong equitable claim. And my experience is that when one of the great departments of the Government recommends a claim, either as to the amount or its favorable consideration, that the committee are generally warranted in acting favorably upon that recommendation, because in the great majority of cases referred to the different departments—and it is our custom to do that in every bill—an unfavorable report comes back. In this case the amount recommended to be allowed by the Supervising Architect—$15,000—is much less than the amount which the contractors themselves thought, at the time of the clearing away of the wreckage, that they were entitled to.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if my friend will allow me. I understand the facts to be that these parties, after competition, got the contract to build this gossamer building, knowing it was a gossamer building, for $300,000.

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, I do not think it was gossamer.

Mr. CANNON. Anyhow, it blew away.

Mr. GRAFF. They did not contemplate it would fall down of its own weight. That building would stand a reasonable expectation of an ordinary storm in that locality. There was not anything about the construction of the building or about the surroundings which would suggest to these people at the time they signed the contract that they were liable to meet with this disaster.

Mr. RYAN. There has not been such a storm in Buffalo in twenty years.

Mr. CANNON. I want, if I can, without being switched off or paralleled, to see if I understand it. These contractors, with their eyes open, contracted to build this exact building according to certain plans and specifications for $300,000 within a certain time, and gave bond, and while the building was being constructed they furnished the materials according to plans and specifications?

Mr. GRAFF. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. They proceeded?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And during that time a hurricane came along, or a cyclone, and blew the building down?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. And it did $15,000 damage?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. And notwithstanding that they went on and kept their contract, as they were bound to do, or be liable for damages to the Government for failure?

Mr. GRAFF. You do not find any fault with that?

Mr. CANNON. I do not find any fault with that.

Mr. GRAFF. No.

Mr. CANNON. They did exactly what they contracted to do?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And as they could not be insured, and they knew it, presumably they became their own insurers. Now my friend comes and says, "I am sorry for these people. Let us give them $15,000." Well, I do not care much about $15,000, but I submit to my friend, on principle, that if this bill passes all contractors for the Government doing work on public buildings and engineer work on rivers and harbors and all other kinds of work will understand that if by accident or otherwise something happens, that a different rule will exist in their case from that which exists between an individual and themselves in a case between a contractor and the Government. In other words, we now make a new departure.

Mr. MERCER. The gentleman from Illinois knows better than that, because Government contractors can obtain insurance on buildings to protect themselves.

Mr. CANNON. Why, contractors have obtained insurance, as ordinarily wise men would do, although I know a great many of them say that "they charge so much that I can insure myself cheaper," and no doubt these parties became their own insurers. Anyway, they had to look out for themselves.

Mr. GRAFF. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. GRAFF. I am informed by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] that these gentlemen are honest, straightforward men.

Mr. CANNON. I hope so, and no doubt they are.

Mr. GRAFF. They appear to be ordinary men—average contractors.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know whether they are worth a million or not.

Mr. GRAFF. They do not look to me like they were men of wealth or accustomed to any large transactions.

Let me ask the gentleman a question. I am informed by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MERCER] that these gentlemen are honest and straightforward men.

Mr. CANNON. That does not make any difference.

Mr. GRAFF. I have no doubt the bond they had to give the Government was secured through the medium of their friends. Now, they went on there and completed that contract, and they had this unexpected misfortune. While it is true, as the gentleman says, that they made the contract with their eyes open, does the gentleman think it occurred to them that there might be a cyclone at Buffalo which would endanger the building?

Mr. CANNON. That is a risk in business. If I was the contractor and my friend agreed to pay me for the work, there would be no $15,000 coming to me.

Mr. GRAFF. That is not the question. I asked the gentleman whether he thinks, in all honesty and candor, it occurred to these men that there might be a cyclone in Buffalo before they completed the structure?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know whether it did or not; but the Government nowhere insured them against a cyclone.

Mr. REID. Let me suggest to the gentleman that there is a material distinction between that contract and the ordinary contract where the contractor undertakes to erect a structure and turn it over to the owner. Here the plans and specifications were furnished to the contractor by the Government of a building that was intended to be temporary in its character.

Mr. CANNON. But the contractors knew the temporary character of the building.

Mr. REID. They did, and they did everything that was required to be done, and constructed it according to the plans and specifications furnished by the Government.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and have been paid $300,000 or more.

Mr. REID. There was an assumption through the officials of any liabilities that should occur through unusual sources, inasmuch as it was intended to be merely a temporary structure.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I do not at all admit that, because that same implication would carry to every contract that the Government makes.

Mr. REID. Not unless it is a temporary structure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman says that they could not get insurance against cyclones. Was there any evidence before his committee that they applied for cyclone insurance?

Mr. GRAFF. There was; that they at that time asked for special cyclone insurance.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then they had anticipated that there might be a cyclone there?

Mr. GRAFF. Well, perhaps they did.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman knows that the ordinary insurance policy excepts cyclones.

Mr. GRAFF. They usually have the insurance against fire in one policy and insurance against cyclones in another policy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the standard policy excepts damages from cyclones. There are special policies that must be especially applied for if damage by cyclone is insured against. If these gentlemen had applied for a special insurance, then when they made the contract with the Government they had in contemplation the fact that there might possibly be a cyclone.

Mr. GRAFF. Possibly; but they may have been in the habit of putting cyclone insurance, together with fire insurance, on all of their risks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Perhaps so, if they came from the West.

Mr. GRAFF. They might have done it without thinking that it would possibly occur. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. GRAFF. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri five minutes.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the Committee on Claims to pay this bill, or have it referred to the Court of Claims, which is the same thing, amounts simply to this: That when a contractor undertakes to build a building for the United States Government he is to be insured a profit from the beginning. Whereas if he builds a house for me, or any other private citizen, he is to take the ordinary chances on the weather, earthquakes, and on all the other accidents that we are liable to in this world, and he makes a profit or sustains a loss, according to the issue.

I am not against paying any reasonable or just claim. It is an exceedingly ungracious performance to fight any member's private bill here, but I wish to suggest to all parties concerned that from Missouri and Kansas, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia, the only places where there was any civil war from 1861 to 1865, there are in the neighborhood of $4,000,000,000 of claims pending here, and most of them are absolutely just. Men living in Missouri, Virginia, and Kentucky, that were just as loyal as men living in Maine or Massachusetts, all through that region, sustained financial loss during the war, and had bills pending here for twenty, thirty, and some for forty years. They could not get a hearing and could not get a report, and if peradventure they succeeded in getting a hearing or a favorable report on them, then certain gentlemen on that side of the House entered into a collusion and got up a bogus debate in which they frittered away the time, so that none of these claims could ever be heard; and some of the most distinguished men on that side of the House are the very men that run that bogus debate.

Mr. MERCER. Is this debate now going on a "bogus debate?"

Mr. CLARK. I think there has been a good deal of "bogus debate" over there to-day. I have not taken part in it, however.

If the Committee on Claims will begin with the oldest claims pending in the House and report upon them seriatim, in the order in which the claims accrued, then when we get to this Buffalo claim I shall be perfectly willing to see it tried on its merits. I will say this—and I speak for a very large number of people——

Mr. OTEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, sir.

Mr. OTEY. I wish to say to the gentleman that the Committee on Claims considers cases as they are brought to them by members of the House or by the parties interested. Many of these people having claims do not go before the committee.

Mr. CLARK. I had in my charge just as legitimate a claim as ever came before the House—exactly such a claim as one which went through here by a species of log rolling, in favor of a college down in Virginia.

Mr. OTEY. Did the gentleman go before the committee?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, sir.

Mr. OTEY. This year?

Mr. CLARK. No; I secured a report in favor of that claim. I undertook to bring it up here on the last days of the Fifty-third Congress, just as I was going into temporary retirement for two years. I undertook to bring that claim up here at a time when there were only five men in the House. I asked unanimous consent for its consideration, when, lo and behold, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], now the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, lifted up his mellifluous voice and killed my bill by objecting to it.

"What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander." There is no reason under heaven why men who happen to be located in Buffalo, N. Y., should be able to get claims through here when we can not get through claims in behalf of loyal men who did more to sustain the Union than anybody in Massachusetts or Maine or that whole northern country—men living in Missouri, Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Kansas—who took their lives in their hands every day, almost, during the war.

I have a bill here now proposing to pay $1,500 for groceries that a Union regiment took away from a Union man——

Mr. MERCER. Wet or dry groceries? [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. Both. The colonel of that regiment has certified over and over again that the claim is just. He has certified time and again that the man the goods were taken from was loyal and that he ought to have his money. That man is a bankrupt, but he can not get his claim through this House because the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means or his able lieutenant from Pittsburg [Mr. DALZELL] or some of the other distinguished leaders on that side of the House enter into a scheme here to squander the time so that we can never get the bill considered.

Now, the claimants in the present case have no more right to their money on this kind of a contract and upon this kind of a showing than a contractor would have who undertook to build a house for me at an agreed price and came out a loser to the extent of $500. Such a man might just as well come here and demand from me $500 because of his loss. People have to take knowledge of the fact that there are storms in this country, that there is wet weather occasionally. These things all happen in the ordinary course of business.

Pass this bill and every Government contractor from this day henceforth, if he should come out a loser, will be here asking Congress to recoup him for his losses. There is no sense in it.

Mr. GRAFF. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 46, noes 27.

DAMAGES BY EXPLOSION IN CHICAGO, ILL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5094) for the relief of the persons who sustained damage by the explosion of an ammunition chest of Battery F, Second United States Artillery, July 16, 1894.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $15,845.23, being the sum found just by a board of officers convened at Chicago, July 17, 1894, under Special Orders, No. 72, issued by command of Major-General Miles, of the Department of the Missouri, which sum is recommended by him, with the concurrence of the then Major-General Commanding the Army, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to pay the awards of said board, according to the following schedule, as set forth in their report made on November 3, 1894, and published in Senate Executive Document No. 21, third session Fifty-third Congress, to wit: P. J. Ryan, $1,307; Charles R. Cave, $1,840.61; Edward C. Huling, $742.26; Jacob R. Custer, $717.83; Herman Lehman, $829.75; Herman Grossman, $770; Philip W. Raber, $1,848.99; F. A. Devlin, lessee, $160; estate of Samuel B. Foster, deceased, $1,699.50; Amelia H. Dodge, $1,495.84; Frederick A. Howe, $893.06; Helen Palmer, $946.75; James Wright, $1,213.68; W. H. Godair, $258.04; J. W. Morrison, $47.77; Mrs. J. E. Ellen, $25; W. W. Morrill, $50; Silas H. Finch, $54.39; David Mayer, lessee, $45; Newton Morganroth, $125; estate of H. N. Stephens, deceased, lessee, $12.55; John W. Byers, $105.33; Edward D. Murray, $100; Arthur W. Allyn, $99.15; Emilie J. Smith, trustee, $19; T. A. Keene, $50; Hannah Sullivan, $40; Armory Warehouse Company, $18; W. F. Horn, agent, $25.91; Alice York, $305; total, $15,845.23.

Mr. GRAFF. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in 1894, during the so-called Chicago riots, there were ordered to Chicago various troops of the United States, including various artillery batteries. In July, 1894, while one of those batteries was taking a practice march for exercise some 4 or 5 miles from camp, down Grand Boulevard in the city of Chicago, near Fortieth street, one of the caissons exploded. It happened to be at the noon hour and in a residence neighborhood. No one was upon the street at the time, and no loss of life was sustained except by some of the soldiers.

The explosion of this ammunition chest filled with artillery ammunition resulted in great damage to the adjacent houses. General Miles, in command at that time in Chicago, ordered a board to convene for the purpose of reporting upon the cause of this explosion and another board to convene for the purpose of reporting as to the damages caused by the explosion. The board which was to report upon the damages made a full report to the Secretary of War, who transmitted that report to the Fifty-third Congress in its closing days, with a recommendation that the amounts set out in the report be appropriated and paid by Congress. A favorable report was made upon the case in the Fifty-third Congress; and that report, I may say, was called up under a suspension of the rules, but the bill never became a law.

The same bill was introduced in the Fifty-fifth Congress and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, to which the bill of the Fifty-third Congress had been referred. The Committee on Military Affairs in the Fifty-fifth Congress and again in the Fifty-sixth Congress reported (following the recommendation of the Secretary of War) in favor of the payment of the claim and the passage of the bill. In this Congress I reintroduced the bill and had it referred to the Committee on Claims, the committee to which, as the Speaker of the House informed me in the last Congress, the bill should originally have gone.

The amounts carried in this bill are not the amounts which were claimed by the property owners, but are the amounts which the board appointed by the War Department found were the actual damages due the property owners. They do not include any damages for personal injuries or anything of that kind.

Mr. GRAFF. Did the board sit in Washington or Chicago?

Mr. MANN. The board was convened at Chicago and sat there, making a personal investigation of all these claims for damages.

It so happened, Mr. Chairman, that this explosion was a short distance from where I was living at the time. The explosion, as I know from personal knowledge as well as from the report of the War Department on the subject, wrecked many of the houses. Windows in nearly all the houses within half a mile from that point in the city of Chicago were broken and destroyed. In my own house the same thing occurred. But there was no allowance for damages thus occurring, except where the houses damaged were upon either side of the street, immediately adjoining the place where the explosion occurred. No one else, I think, than parties thus interested, with a few exceptions, made any claims for damages.

In addition to the board which was appointed for the purpose of passing upon the question of damages, General Miles also appointed a board to pass upon the cause of the explosion. That board reported that they had examined the matter carefully; that they had examined the witnesses who were presented to them, and after a full consideration of all the conditions prevailing they found that the explosion and the consequent damage were due to a defective fuse in one of the shells in the caisson, and recommended that the matter be brought to the consideration of the proper authorities for remedy.

But, Mr. Chairman, a similar condition of things occurred on another occasion. There was another explosion of practically the same kind at Camp Sheridan about the same time. This was found to be due to a faulty construction of the fuse, just as in the former case, to which I have referred. Boards were convened—boards of military men—to consider the question in both these cases. Their reports are practically the same. There is nothing in this report of the House committee in regard to the reports made by them. It has not heretofore been considered advisable that the reports in either case shall be given out to the public, because it was not deemed proper that it should be made public that there was in reality a defect in our ammunition.

Mr. GRAFF. Will my friend and colleague allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAFF. I would like to ask if the incident to which my friend refers, with regard to the presence of these troops in the city of Chicago, was a mere incident, or were these troops then marching through the city for the protection of the property of the city?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. There was no pretext of the necessity for the marching of this battery through the streets of the city at that place any more than if a like command had paraded the streets of Washington or any other city in the Union under ordinary circumstances. The only point is that by some defect in one of the ammunition chests there was an explosion which produced the losses to which I have referred.

Mr. GRAFF. I would like to ask my friend if this was the residence portion of the city, through which the command was passing?

Mr. MANN. Yes; the residence portion of the city, and very large damage was done there, as I have just stated, to the property of residents in that part of the city.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have glanced over the report of the committee, and of the board which considered this matter, and nothing appears, so far as I have been able to discover, either from the report itself or from a careful inquiry in regard to the matter, as to whether the Government of the United States or its officers who were in command at that time were guilty of dereliction of duty or of carelessness which would make the Government liable, as a private individual would be liable under similar circumstances. I find nothing here as to the carelessness of any of the employees or officers of the Government which would make the Government liable under the circumstances.

Now, I would like to get the facts of the case clearly in mind. I would like to ask my friend and colleague if he has any information upon that point which will enable the House to act upon a question of this kind as we ought to act upon all questions presented for our determination.

Mr. MANN. There was a board appointed under an order issued by General Miles, July 17, 1894, immediately following the explosion, and I will be very glad to insert in the RECORD the order under which that board was convened.

Mr. CANNON. I should be glad to hear it read, if it covers the point of carelessness.

Mr. MANN (reading)—

> The board will investigate and make a report upon the explosion of a caisson of Light Battery F, Second Artillery, while on a practice march through the streets of this city on the 16th instant. A full and exhaustive examination will be made of everything bearing in any way upon the question before it. The board will sit without regard to hours.

I have obtained from the War Department, after a good deal of persuasion, an extract from the report of the board. I have never been able to obtain the full report of the board, and I do not think it has been desirable, up to the present time at least, to make it public. I have, however, the extract from the report.

> As the result of its investigation the board finds—

And then follows a statement of the facts in regard to the explosion. The report then proceeds:

> This platoon was marching south in a column of sections.

And it describes the method of marching and the explosion, and then reads, as I read before to the House:

> That the explosion was due to the ignition of a defective base fuse of a common shell, and the board recommends that the defects referred to in these proceedings be brought to the attention of the proper authority, with a view to their speedy correction.

How much of that report may have been omitted I do not know. We were refused an opportunity to see the original report of the board, in the War Department.

Mr. CANNON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Right upon this point, because it is material, does not my friend think, when the Government is called upon to reimburse the various citizens who were injured, that carelessness ought to be shown upon the part of the officers of the Government, and if there was any squeamishness about it that it is quite in the power of a committee of this House, or of the House itself, to ascertain the facts? For anything I know, there was no carelessness.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, the board reported in this case and in the other case where the same kind of ammunition was used and an explosion occurred that it was the result of poor ammunition, improperly constructed ammunition.

Mr. MORRIS. That was negligence in itself.

Mr. MANN. It certainly was negligence on the part of the Government to have artillery trotting around in the residence portion of any city with improperly constructed ammunition which was liable to explode and which did explode, causing damage to life and property.

The soldiers who were killed at this time were in the discharge of their duty, and their families received pensions; but it seems to me that it was purely a case of negligence.

Now, I may say, Mr. Chairman, as I remarked before, a bill was before the House in the Fifty-third Congress, on a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, and it failed to obtain the necessary two-thirds vote. But at that time there was no member of this House advised that the board had ever made a report at all finding that the explosion was the result of a poor and improperly constructed shell.

I ask leave to insert the report from which I have read.

The report referred to is as follows:

Proceedings of a board of officers appointed by paragraph 1, Special Orders, No. 72, dated Headquarters Department of the Missouri, July 17, 1894, as follows:

SPECIAL ORDERS, No. 72. } HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI, Chicago, Ill., July 17, 1894.

A board of officers to consist of Maj. Edward B. Williston, Third Artillery; Maj. Wallace F. Randolph, Third Artillery; Capt. George S. Grimes, Second Artillery; Capt. Allyn Capron, First Artillery; Capt. Sydney W. Taylor, Fourth Artillery; First Lieut. Eli D. Hoyle, Second Artillery, recorder, will convene at Camp Miles, Chicago, at 2 p. m. this day or as soon thereafter as practicable.

The board will investigate and make report upon the explosion of a caisson of Light Battery F, Second Artillery, while on a practice march through the streets of this city on the 16th instant. A full and exhaustive examination will be made of everything bearing in any way upon the question before it.

The board will sit without regard to hours.

By command of Major-General Miles:

J. P. MARTIN,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Official.

E. L. HUGGINS,
Aid-de-Camp.

CHICAGO, ILL., July 18, 1894.

The board met, pursuant to the foregoing orders, at 9 a. m. in the office of the inspector of artillery, Headquarters Department of the Missouri.

Present: All the members and the recorder.

It was the intention of the board to proceed to Camp Miles, Brighton Park, Chicago, where Light Battery F, Second Artillery, was then stationed, to pursue an investigation, but owing to the fact that most of the important witnesses of the explosion of the caisson were at that time absent from Camp Miles, taking part in the funeral ceremonies attendant upon the removal of the bodies of the victims of the explosion to Fort Sheridan, the board adjourned to meet the next day, July 19, at 9 a. m.

Meantime the troops to which four members of the board and the recorder belong were ordered to march to Fort Sheridan, Ill., and the board could not be assembled.

FORT SHERIDAN, ILL., July 23, 1894.

The board met at 3 p. m., the earliest moment practicable.

Present: All the members and the recorder.

The board then proceeded with the business before it and continued its investigation on the 24th, 25th, and 26th days of July.

As a result of its investigation the board finds as follows:

That a battalion of light artillery, consisting of Light Batteries A (Grimes's) and F (Vose's), Second, and F (Taylor's), Fourth Artillery, under command of Maj. W. F. Randolph, Third Artillery, left Fort Riley, Kans., July 8, 1894. Batteries A and F, Second Artillery, each had four 3.2-inch guns, and the chests were filled with shrapnel and common shell. Battery F, Fourth Artillery, was armed with the 1.5-inch Hotchkiss revolving cannon, with fixed ammunition, and therefore need not be further considered in this report. The journey was by rail over the Chicago and Alton route, and upon arrival in Chicago, July 10, the batteries named were placed in the Lake Front Park, where Light Battery E (Capron's), First Artillery, was already encamped.

On July 12 Vose's Battery (F, Second Artillery) was sent to Camp Miles, near Brighton Park, Chicago, marching the distance under orders of the commanding general Department of Missouri. The mounted troops made several practice marches through the streets of Chicago. A platoon of Light Battery F, Second Artillery, commanded by First Lieut. E. E. Gayle, Second Artillery, was part of a column commanded by Capt. George A. Dodd, Third Cavalry, which left Camp Miles on a practice march July 16.

This platoon was marching (south) in a column of sections, pieces in front, at a slow trot on Grand Boulevard, near Fortieth street, over a smooth roadway, when the first caisson (second carriage of the platoon) exploded, instantly killing Artificer Donovan and Private Doyle, Light Battery F, Second Artillery (who were seated on the limber chest of the exploded caisson), and Farrier Galler, Troop B, Seventh Cavalry, which was next behind the platoon of artillery. Private Stoltz, Light Battery F, Second Artillery, was fatally injured and died the following night. Sergeant Leiner and Privates O'Donnel and Allen, Light Battery F, Second Artillery, were seriously wounded, and several others were slightly injured and powder burned.

Nine horses were killed by the explosion or destroyed on the spot on account of their serious injuries, and the caisson was completely demolished. The houses in the vicinity were more or less injured, but it is believed that no civilians received other than trifling hurts—the street being comparatively empty at the time.

* * * * * * *

After mature consideration of all the evidence before it, the board is of the opinion that the explosion of the caisson of light battery in the city of Chicago on July 16, 1894, was due to the ignition of a defective base fuse of a common shell, and the board recommends that the defects referred to in these proceedings be brought to the attention of the proper authority with a view to their speedy correction.

* * * * * * *

The board recommends that the cartridges be carried in a light sheet-copper box, made to fit in the middle compartment of the chests and furnished with lid and with handles, so that it can be easily lifted out and cleaned. A box of this description will conduce to the safety, convenience in handling, and preservation of the charges, and will permit field artillery to cross deeper fords without the necessity of removing the cartridges from the chests.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say to my friend I think it is very unfortunate that we have to rely upon a garbled report, not even garbled by my friend, but garbled by the Department, when confessedly the full report has not been produced or seen. What the full report might show, I do not know.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would not be understood as acquiescing in the idea that this is a garbled report. I do not know what portion of the report is omitted. It may be something that has no relation to this question. I can not say about that. It seems to me the report is full enough to show that this trouble was caused by the negligence of the Government.

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me one other question, if I recollect aright, the Army was lawfully in Chicago at that time, upon duty under the orders of the Commander in Chief, the President of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Well, if the gentleman desires me to answer that question, I may say that the Army was in Chicago on duty by command of the President of the United States, but not lawfully in the opinion of Governor Altgeld, who was then governor of the State of Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. I understand; but nevertheless the Commander in Chief sent them there, and I think everybody understands that they were there lawfully.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Ought not the question to be, not whether the Army, or that portion of it, was in Chicago lawfully, but whether this caisson was lawfully at the point where it exploded, and what was it doing there? The question is whether it was not there simply on a voluntary parade of some kind, and not in the discharge of any army or official duty. That is the question, it seems to me, and not whether the troops were in Chicago lawfully.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's suggestion is certainly a good one. Of course, this caisson was not where it was by virtue of any order, so far as the War Department was concerned.

Mr. CANNON. After all, when the Army goes to Chicago or any other place and remains a considerable length of time, I suppose that the exercise, the drills, the practice is all included in that order. I do not understand they would have to go into a dungeon and be locked in.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, of course the Army was in Chicago, probably lawfully. The question is precisely the same as if an artillery battery from Fort Myer, the one that parades through the city of Washington, should have an explosion here. The Army is lawfully located at Fort Myer by virtue of orders from the War Department. The Army was lawfully sent to the city of Chicago. It went out on a practice march. It was not engaged in any performance of duty at the time, so far as war or the suppression of riot or anything of that sort is concerned, and this case would not involve that point. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and the bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY E. M'DONALD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4988) for the relief of Mary E. McDonald.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Mary E. McDonald and Stephen C. Brown, owners of the McDonald hatching jar and McDonald universal hatching jar, the sum of $2,468.11 each, the same to be compensation in full for the use by the United States of all hatching jars invented by the late Marshall McDonald, and for all rights in said jars now possessed by the said Mary E. McDonald and Stephen C. Brown, and for the right of the United States to hereafter use the patents on said jars.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Mary E. McDonald, widow of Marshall McDonald, late Commissioner of Fisheries, the sum of $5,000, the same to be compensation in full for the use by the United States of the McDonald egg-transportation crate, the McDonald improved cod-hatching box, the McDonald hatching bucket, the McDonald trout can, and of all other inventions of the said Marshall McDonald, and for their transfer to the United States.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out, in lines 6 and 7, the words "two thousand four hundred and sixty-eight dollars and eleven cents" and inserting the words "one thousand two hundred and thirty-four dollars and six cents;" and that the words "five thousand dollars," in line 4, section 2, of the bill, be stricken out and the words "two thousand five hundred dollars" be inserted.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. OTEY. I just ask to have the report read, Mr. Chairman.

The report (by Mr. OTEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims has had under consideration House bill 4988, and respectfully report the same back with the recommendation that it do pass with amendments as below.

This bill has been fully considered before in the Fifty-sixth Congress and was unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims in that Congress, with certain amendments, which are concurred in by your committee.

The facts appearing are as follows:

From March 2, 1882, to date the United States Fish Commission has bought and used 2,331 hatching jars, all of which were covered by patent owned by Marshall McDonald and Stephen C. Brown. On these jars no royalty or other money was ever paid to the patentees, all such payment being left to the equitable consideration of Congress.

The total cost of these jars, complete, to the United States was $2,725.78. Of the 2,331 jars used by the Fish Commission 1,000 of them were complete and 1,331 were furnished without the fittings. At the same time the patentees were selling, and always have sold, the same complete jars to other parties at $5 each and the jars without the fittings at $2 each. At the price paid by other parties these jars would have cost the United States $7,622 instead of $2,725.78, the amount actually paid by the United States. The difference in favor of the United States has thus been $4,936.22, and the bill as amended provides that this sum be divided equally between Mary McDonald, the widow of the late Marshall McDonald, and Stephen C. Brown.

The claim has been carefully considered by the committee, and is regarded as just and equitable. The United States bought these jars for $4,936.22 less than may be justly termed their market value, and by their use a very large amount of money has been saved. The Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries states that before the invention and use of these jars two attendants could look after about 1,000,000 shad eggs, and that now, with the McDonald jar, over 25,000,000 eggs are managed by five attendants, instead of fifty attendants, as would be required without the McDonald hatching jar.

These jars have so increased the production of certain fish (shad, for example) that their cost in the markets has been reduced to such an extent that they are now within the reach of many poor people, to whom they are a cheap article of food. The Fish Commissioner states that by an expenditure of only $25,000 annually they have been enabled to increase the value of the annual shad catch not less than $1,000,000. Without the McDonald hatching jars this work would have cost many times $25,000.

In addition to the shad-hatching jar, Marshall McDonald was the patentee of a number of other useful and labor-saving inventions used and now in use by the Fish Commission. Among these inventions may be mentioned the McDonald improved cod-hatching box, the McDonald egg-transportation crate, the McDonald trout car, the McDonald improved hatching bucket, the McDonald transportation crate, and others. It is impossible to give in specific figures the saving made by these inventions.

The McDonald cod box, perfected in 1887, is now the only form of apparatus used in hatching the eggs of the cod, pollock, flatfish, and other marine species. Up to 1887 about 30,520,000 cod fry were hatched and distributed by the Fish Commissioner. Since that time, including the present season, 625,000,000 have been hatched and distributed. Gratifying results have followed the use of many other of these inventions, and the Government has saved many times $5,000 thereby. Not one dollar has ever been paid by the Government to the patentee for the use of any of these inventions. The bill provides that Mary McDonald, widow of the patentee, shall receive $5,000, the same to be in full compensation for the use by the United States of all of these patents, except the hatching jars, and for their transfer to the United States.

The committee recommend that the bill be amended by striking out, in lines 6 and 7, the words "two thousand four hundred and sixty-eight dollars and eleven cents" and inserting the words "one thousand two hundred and thirty-four dollars and six cents;" and that the words "five thousand dollars," in line 4, section 2, of the bill, be stricken out and the words "two thousand five hundred dollars" be inserted.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to know about this bill.

Mr. HAY. The first question, I apprehend, is on the amendments proposed by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to be recognized?

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask a question or two. I want to know about it, and I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HAY. The question is whether or not the amendments offered by the Committee on Claims should first be passed upon. This is a mere formal matter, and I think it can be done at once.

Mr. CANNON. Well, no.

Mr. HAY. What does the gentleman want to know?

Mr. CANNON. I want to know who owns this patent.

Mr. HAY. Well, these patents are now out of date.

Mr. CANNON. Well, then, what does the gentleman mean by this language in the bill, "and for the right of the United States to hereafter use the patent on said jars?"

Mr. HAY. It means just what it says, I suppose. I do not see why the Committee on Claims put that language in the bill. I presume they took it from a former report, because this bill has been here for three Congresses, and been reported favorably each time from the Committee on Claims, and this is the first time that it has come here since the patents expired.

Mr. CANNON. When was the patent issued?

Mr. HAY. I can not tell when the patent was issued, but I am reliably informed that they have expired.

Mr. CANNON. Well, now, is not this the truth about it? Was not Marshal McDonald—if that is the name—Fish Commissioner for many years?

Mr. HAY. I do not know for how many years he was Fish Commissioner.

Mr. CANNON. And was he not Fish Commissioner at the time of using his own patent?

Mr. HAY. No. Some of these patents were obtained by him before he was Fish Commissioner, and some of them while he was Fish Commissioner.

Mr. CANNON. Is this for the use of those jars before he was Fish Commissioner or while he was Fish Commissioner?

Mr. HAY. For their use all the time.

Mr. CANNON. Were they used—can the gentleman state from his knowledge that these patents were used before he was Fish Commissioner?

Mr. HAY. I can not; but I have a communication from the present Fish Commissioner, in which he states that they were used.

Mr. CANNON. I have not found it.

Mr. HAY. And I would state to the gentleman from Illinois that I suppose his point is because he was Fish Commissioner at the time, and was in the service of the United States, that he was not entitled to any compensation.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, what is the fact; I would like to know how many patents there are, when issued, when used by the Government, when they expired, who owned them then, and who owns them now?

Mr. HAY. It is impossible for me to reply to the very many categorical questions asked by the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Well, No. 1. How many patents are there?

Mr. HAY. Seven or eight.

Mr. CANNON. Has my friend knowledge of that?

Mr. HAY. I have not a certain knowledge.

Mr. OTEY. Here is a list of them. They are not put in the report, but they are referred to there. There is the transportation apparatus.

Mr. CANNON. When was that patent issued?

Mr. OTEY. I can not tell you.

Mr. CANNON. Nor when it expired?

Mr. OTEY. No.

Mr. CANNON. Now, the next one.

Mr. OTEY. I can not tell the gentleman when the patents were issued nor when they expired, but Mr. Bowers says that these things were adopted by Professor Baird in the work of the Commission, with the understanding that no royalty was to be paid for the use, but that the matter was to be left to the equitable consideration of Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Then it runs way back to the time when Professor Baird was commissioner—way back in the early eighties.

Mr. OTEY. That shows that McDonald was not then in the employ of the Government.

Mr. CANNON. I recollect he came in about 1885. Mr. Baird died, if I recollect, in the late seventies. Now, then, we have got to the point that these patents of McDonald's were used in Baird's lifetime, which was in the late seventies, and while he was official commissioner, with the understanding, says Mr. Bowers, that no royalty was to be paid.

Mr. OTEY. Yes; but what else?

Mr. HAY. They were used from March 2, 1882.

Mr. OTEY. Mr. Bowers says that no royalty was to be paid for its use, but the matter was to be left to the equitable consideration of Congress. That is what we are doing to-day.

Mr. CANNON. That was about forty years ago, and you gentlemen have not published in your report——

Mr. HAY. I beg the gentleman's pardon, not more than twenty years ago, not quite twenty.

Mr. CANNON. Professor Baird died before that, but say twenty years ago, if that was it, one-half of forty. But it is a statement before the House and a correction, whereas this alleged matter is not even in the report. I will take the report and read it, and I will defy any man to tell who was the owner of the patents, or how many there were of them.

Mr. OTEY. Here is a list of them.

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking about the report. That is a private letter, and not even official.

Mr. OTEY. It was furnished to the committee, but the committee did not think it was necessary to have it printed.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to have it read.

Mr. OTEY. Let us have it read.

Mr. CANNON. Wait a minute, and we will have it read later. This bill reads now:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Mary E. McDonald, widow of Marshall McDonald, late Commissioner of Fisheries, the sum of $2,500, the same to be compensation in full for the use by the United States of the McDonald egg transportation crate, the McDonald improved cod hatching box, the McDonald hatching bucket, the McDonald trout can, and of all other inventions of the said Marshall McDonald, and for their transfer to the United States.

Now, the gentleman says the patents have all expired, but he does not know when. I want to ask who owned the patents; did the widow of the official commissioner own them?

Mr. HAY. The widow was the sole legatee under the will.

Mr. CANNON. Is there any evidence of that fact?

Mr. HAY. I do not know as there is any evidence in this particular record.

Mr. CANNON. Was there ever an executor or administrator appointed?

Mr. HAY. No; I do not think there ever was any administrator. I think the executor qualified.

Mr. CANNON. Has my friend any knowledge whether the alleged patents, that I should think likely expired before the official commissioner's death——

Mr. HAY. Not before his death; but they have expired now.

Mr. CANNON. Has my friend any knowledge whether the legal title ever vested in the widow of Marshall McDonald?

Mr. HAY. No; I have not.

Mr. CANNON. Is there any member of the committee that can give us this information?

Mr. HAY. I do not see that that is pertinent.

Mr. CANNON. Pertinent? What is the use of giving the widow of the late official Commissioner this amount of money unless she owned something? You admit that the patents have some time since expired, but it does not appear that the widow ever owned them, Now, somebody else may have the title in Virginia or Washington or New York.

Mr. HAY. Nobody else owns the patents; the United States has control of them.

Mr. CANNON. Some other party may have owned the patents at the time for which you are now proposing to compensate the widow; and at the next session of Congress the former legal owner of these patents may come in for compensation.

Mr. HAY. If there were such an owner he would of course have come here and asked a hearing. The gentleman asks why should this widow be paid? Because the United States Government has for twenty years used these patents and has thereby saved a large amount of money; and because the man whose brain conceived them and who gave them for the use of the Government has never had a dollar for any single one of them or for the use of any one of them.

Mr. CANNON. Now, for the sake of the argument, I deny that the beneficiary in this bill, Mrs. McDonald, ever owned any interest in these patents.

Mr. HAY. I did not say "Mrs. McDonald;" I said "Mr. McDonald." The gentleman is very ready to put into my mouth words which I did not use.

Mr. CANNON. The bill proposes to pay to Mary E. McDonald, widow of Marshall McDonald, late Commissioner of Fisheries, the sum of $2,500. Now, if we are to give this widow, who, I have no doubt, is an estimable woman, $2,500, let us put it upon the true ground—that we give it on account of her being the widow of the late Commissioner——

Mr. HAY. That is not the point.

Mr. CANNON. But if we are to give this lady $2,500 for a patent which she owns, let us give it to her and purchase the patent. On the other hand, if we are to give the legal representatives of Marshall McDonald a sum of money for the use of such patent, let us know who these people are.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman desires to put it in that form, I am willing to have the bill changed to make this sum payable to the legal representatives of Marshall McDonald.

Mr. CANNON. Now, then, we get down where we deal with men and not with a woman.

Mr. HAY. Mrs. McDonald is the sole legatee of her husband, and will receive this money, no matter in what shape you put the language.

Mr. CANNON. It is not so stated here.

Mr. HAY. It is a matter of fact within my knowledge. I am willing to change the bill so as to read in the way the gentleman suggests.

Mr. CANNON. What I mean to say is just this: It may be that compensation ought to be made for the use of these patents, commencing during the time when Spencer F. Baird was Commissioner—a number of years before Mr. McDonald became Commissioner. But I want to know what the patents are, and how long they were used, and what the Government gets now, if it gets the right to use them. In other words, I would like to have this Committee of the Whole refer back the bill to the Committee on Claims and let them give us an intelligent report and tell us what we are to get for our "whistle."

Mr. HAY. The gentleman knows that if this bill is "referred back," as he says, that will be the last of it in this Congress.

Mr. CANNON. Not at all.

Mr. HAY. If the gentleman does not know it I do.

Mr. CANNON. It ought to be "the last of it" unless we can find out what we are getting or have received heretofore.

Mr. HAY. The Fish Commissioner, in a letter to the committee, says that these patents have been used since March, 1882. As I said before, this is an equitable claim for the use of patents which the Government has used for twenty years without paying a dollar for such use; and, as this report states, it appears from the statistics in the office of the Fish Commissioner that by the use of these patents thousands of dollars have been saved to the Government. Therefore, I say this is a perfectly equitable and just case.

Mr. CANNON. It may be that the Fish Commissioner is very reliable touching ancient history. I would not necessarily be bound by his guess touching current matters.

Mr. HAY. I do not know to what the gentleman refers.

Mr. CANNON. I mean just this: I have not heard the communication of the Fish Commissioner read——

Mr. HAY. We will read it, if you so desire.

Mr. CANNON. On matters happening back in 1882 and prior thereto this gentleman may be very good authority. I am not necessarily bound by his advice.

Mr. HAY. You mean you do not think much of the Fish Commissioner.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman has quoted the Fish Commissioner. I think very highly of him as a very clever gentleman, but I do not regard him as a great authority touching current matters.

Mr. HAY. He knows of these inventions, patents, etc., having been used in his Department every day. I suppose he is authority upon that when he tells the committee that he is using these patents now and that they have been used in that office for years.

Mr. CANNON. I want to be entirely candid with my friend. These patents, according to my friend's statement, have expired. If they were used as early as 1882, they expired before the late century closed. Seventeen years, I believe, is the lifetime of a patent. So that while this bill purports to give patents to the Government it does not give us anything.

Now, if in fact, we legally or equitably owe the legal representatives of Marshall McDonald anything, I am willing to pay the amount, but I want to know what it is for and what the facts are about it. If, on the other hand, Marshall McDonald did such extraordinary service to the Government that we ought to make his widow (who, I have no doubt, is an excellent woman) a present of several thousand dollars, let us put the matter upon the true ground.

Mr. OTEY. Will you vote for the bill in that shape?

Mr. CANNON. No; but I say let us put it on the true ground.

Mr. HAY. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to, there being—ayes 48, noes 7.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10368. An act to provide for the removal of snow and ice from cross walks and gutters in the city of Washington, D. C.;

H. R. 2008. An act to authorize the city of Duluth, Minn., to construct and maintain, or cause to be constructed and maintained, a car transfer over the Duluth Canal, and for that purpose to occupy certain lands of the United States; and

H. R. 9342. An act to amend the code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901.

The committee resumed its session.

JAMES M. CHISHAM.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4471) for the relief of James M. Chisham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reimburse, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $708.99 to James M. Chisham, for loss sustained by him as postmaster at Atchison, Kans., on account of the failure of the Atchison National Bank, of Atchison, Kans., where he had the funds of the Government on deposit as postmaster.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say only a few words in connection with the pending bill.

In 1898 Mr. Chisham, the beneficiary of the bill, was appointed postmaster at Atchison, Kans. The postmaster was informed by the Post-Office Department that it would be necessary to deposit the funds belonging to his office in a national bank instead of in the savings bank. The deposits of the receipts of the post-office were accordingly made in the national bank of that city in the name of J. M. Chisham as postmaster.

In 1899 this bank failed, and the postal authorities informed Mr. Chisham, the postmaster, that the loss to the Government, which amounted to $1,417.99, by the failure of this bank would be charged against his individual account. The affairs of the bank were settled subsequently, but it only paid about 50 cents on the dollar, and the amount remaining due to the postmaster from the loss of the postal funds in that institution is $708.99, which is the amount called for in this bill. Affidavits of the postmaster and of the receiver of the bank were filed with the committee, and I understand the bill was referred to the Department and was favorably recommended.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, has been carefully considered by the committee, and I am satisfied that under the circumstances there will be no objection to its passage.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, with his consent.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand the gentleman, he states that the postmaster was under some sort of an obligation to make the deposits of money arising from his office in a particular institution to which the gentleman has referred.

Mr. CURTIS. That is correct. As I have stated, he was informed by the Department that he must make his deposits in a national bank. He desired to make the deposits in a savings bank, where he did his individual business.

Mr. CANNON. Is it not true, I would ask the gentleman, that a postmaster must deposit funds belonging to the United States in a Government depository, or else keep them in his own charge; and if there be a loss, under such circumstances, how could the Government become liable where the Government official had exercised the authority and the discretion which was conferred upon him by the Department?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, as I have already stated, this official was informed by the Post-Office Department that he must deposit the Government funds in a national bank instead of in a savings bank where he had been transacting his business for many years. I am informed there was no Government depository at Atchison at that time.

The question is a plain one. There can be no misunderstanding as to the responsibility of the Government to make good this loss. The bill has been carefully considered. It has met the approval of the committee after a careful consideration, and therefore, Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the committee with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise and report to the House for its consideration the several bills which have been before the committee during this session.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HEMENWAY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report to the House the following bills, with the recommendation that they be passed, viz:

A bill (H. R. 2978) for the relief of Joseph H. Penny, John W. Penny, Thomas Penny, and Harvey Penny, surviving partners of Penny & Sons; and

A bill (H. R. 5106) for the relief of Rasmussen & Strethlow.

Also, the bill (H. R. 5094) for the relief of the persons who sustained damage by the explosion of an ammunition chest of Battery F, Second United States Artillery, July 16, 1894, reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Also, the bill (H. R. 4988) for the relief of Mary E. McDonald.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole was considered, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The committee also reported the bill (H. R. 4471) for the relief of James M. Chisham.

The bill was considered, as reported from the committee, and agreed to.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I move that all of the votes just taken upon the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole be reconsidered, and that that motion lie upon the table.

There being no objection, the motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. KLUTTZ, by unanimous consent, asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies the papers in the case of John W. Gray, Fifty-sixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 1633. An act to increase the limit of cost of the post-office building at Butte, Mont.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 238. An act for the relief of Arthur R. Henderson—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1949. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to appoint George H. Paul a warrant machinist in the Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 4,000 additional copies of Bulletin No. 184, of the Geological Survey, lately issued, entitled "Oil and Gas Fields of the Western Interior and Northern Texas Coal Measures and of the Upper Cretaceous and Tertiary of the Western Gulf Coast," by George I. Adams, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House, and 1,000 for free distribution by the Geological Survey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HEATWOLE. I am directed by the same committee to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate concurrent resolution No. 16.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota, by direction of the same committee, also asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 4,000 copies, in pamphlet form, of the report on the "Iron-ore deposits of the Lake Superior region," by C. R. Van Hise, being pages 305 to 434 of part 2 of the Twenty-first Annual Report of the United States Geological Survey, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for distribution by the Geological Survey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask if that is a concurrent resolution?

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate concurrent resolution.

Mr. HEPBURN. There seems to be no reference in the resolution to the concurrence of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that it is in the usual form:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring)——

Mr. HEPBURN. That part was not read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Also House concurrent resolution No. 5.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Also Senate concurrent resolution No. 10.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota, chairman of the Committee on Printing, also asks unanimous consent, by direction of that committee, for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The resolution was read, as follows:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEATWOLE, a motion to reconsider the several votes by which the various resolutions were agreed to was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees.

ENID AND ANADARKO RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CURTIS (when the Committee on Indian Affairs was called). Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to call up the bill H. R. 3104.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3104) to grant the right of way through the Oklahoma Territory and the Indian Territory to the Enid and Anadarko Railway Company, and for other purposes.

The bill was read at length.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend as follows:

Line 13, page 2, strike out "three" and insert "two."

In line 14 strike out "ten" and insert "eight."

On page 3, line 13, strike out the word "President" and insert "Secretary of the Interior."

In line 26, page 3, strike out the word "President" and insert "Secretary of the Interior."

In line 10, page 7, after the word "Indians," insert the words "in their tribal relations."

In line 15, page 9, strike out the words "fifty miles" and insert "one-tenth."

In line 15, page 9, strike out the words "three years" and insert "one year."

In line 16, page 9, after the word "act," insert "and complete its road within three years after the approval of the map of location by the Secretary of the Interior."

In line 15, page 10, after the word "rights," insert "franchises."

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order against this bill, and, pending that, I desire to ask the gentleman some questions.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly. I have no objection.

Mr. McRAE. The point of order I make is that this bill is not properly on the House Calendar, and therefore not in order. The question I desire to ask the gentleman is, Why is it necessary to introduce a special bill while we have a general law authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant rights of way through Indian territories?

Mr. CURTIS. I will answer the question of the gentleman. In the first place——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman whether there are any public lands through which this right of way goes?

Mr. CURTIS. I will answer the gentleman. In the first place, upon yesterday, by unanimous consent, this bill was transferred from the Union to the House Calendar, because it takes no Government property and makes no appropriation. The land through which the right of way is asked, according to a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Holden vs. Joy (17 Wall., 250), belongs to the Indian tribes. The same question was raised in the case of the United States vs. Reese, in the western district of Arkansas, and the court held that "all the estate is in the Cherokee Nation of Indians." As the other tribes in the Indian Territory hold their land by patents from the Government, the title is in the tribes. In the general law it is provided that settlement shall be made with the allottees in possession. Therefore I think it quite clear that this bill should be on the House Calendar. As to the second point, it is true that in 1899 we passed a general law granting rights of way through Indian reservations in the Territories, including the Indian Territory, but upon investigation it was found that there were several defects in that law so far as the Indian Territory is concerned. Under that law the tribes were given no voice in the proceedings to take their lands for right-of-way purposes. It did not give them a day in court. Again, no authority is given in the general law to mortgage the rights, franchises, and property of the railroad companies.

Mr. McRAE. Does not the gentleman think that the better course would have been to amend the general law rather than introduce this special bill?

Mr. CURTIS. I will come to that in a moment.

This bill was submitted to the Department; they considered all the amendments suggested and recommend the passage of the bill. They also requested me, in a letter, to introduce a general bill. That bill I have introduced. It is now being considered by the Department, but the company intending to build this road desire that the right of way be granted at once for the reason they have already built 60 miles in Oklahoma. They have 100 miles surveyed, and are anxious to go to work at once. In view of all the circumstances, the Secretary of the Interior recommended the passage of the bill, indorsed all the amendments, and the passage of the bill is also recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs, after careful consideration by a subcommittee composed of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHELDEN], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. McRAE. I realize the necessity for building railroads through the Indian Territory and if the charters can not be granted under the general law, this bill ought to pass; and therefore I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. The following is a part of the Secretary's letter on that point:

The general right of way act of March 2, 1899 (30 Stat., 990), and the additional station grounds act of April 25, 1896 (29 Stat., 109), are probably justly subject to all the criticism made in your letter, except, perhaps, the one which questions the validity of that provision in the act of 1899 governing the determination of the compensation to be paid for the right of way. I believe it is very much better for all concerned that the railroad rights of way in Indian Territory should be obtained and held under general legislation of like application to all instances of a like character; but if it is anticipated that the difficulty and delay incident to the enactment of proper general legislation will be materially greater than those incident to special acts applicable to each case, I realize that the construction of proposed railroads in that Territory will probably be facilitated by the former practice of resorting to special legislation.

If there are no further questions, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PROHIBITING THE SALE OF ARMS, INTOXICATING LIQUORS, AND OPIUM TO ABORIGINAL NATIVES OF PACIFIC ISLANDS.

Mr. SPERRY (when the Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate bill 1747.

The SPEAKER. Is this by authority of your committee?

Mr. SPERRY. Yes, sir; by the unanimous vote of this committee.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1747) to prevent the sale of firearms, opium, and intoxicating liquors in certain islands of the Pacific.

Be it enacted, etc., That any person subject to the authority of the United States who shall give, sell, or otherwise supply any arms, ammunition, explosive substance, intoxicating liquor, or opium to any aboriginal native of any of the Pacific islands lying within the twentieth parallel of north latitude and the fortieth parallel of south latitude and the one hundred and twentieth meridian of longitude west and one hundred and twentieth meridian of longitude east of Greenwich, not being in the possession or under the protection of any civilized power, shall be punishable by imprisonment not exceeding three months, with or without hard labor, or a fine not exceeding $50, or both. And in addition to such punishment all articles of a similar nature to those in respect to which an offense has been committed found in the possession of the offender may be declared forfeited.

SEC. 2. That if it shall appear to the court that such opium, wine, or spirits have been given bona fide for medical purposes it shall be lawful for the court to dismiss the charge.

SEC. 3. That all offenses against this act committed on any of said islands, or on the waters, rocks, or keys adjacent thereto, shall be deemed committed on the high seas on board a merchant ship or vessel belonging to the United States, and the courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction accordingly.

Mr. SPERRY. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks for the reading of the report, which will be done in his time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I reserve the point of order. I would like to ask if this bill is called up in the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It has come up under a call of committees, being on the House Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is on the House Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It is on the House Calendar.

Mr. SPERRY. This is a unanimous report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Has the Chair asked the gentleman if he is authorized by the committee to call up this bill?

The SPEAKER. He has so stated.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Do I understand that there is no tax on the Government in the bill, no expenditure or appropriation of money in the bill?

Mr. SPERRY. No, sir; not any.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. And it is the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. SPERRY. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. As I understand, the gentleman has asked for the reading of the report. We could not hear what was said.

Mr. DALZELL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked for the reading of the report.

Mr. DALZELL. Is this the same bill that was passed by the last House?

Mr. SPERRY. It was passed by the last House by a majority vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks for the reading of the report, which will be done in his time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1747) to prevent the sale of firearms, opium, and intoxicating liquors in certain islands of the Pacific, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass:

This is a bill enacting that no person subject to the authority of the United States shall give or sell arms, ammunition, intoxicating liquors, or opium to the aboriginal natives of certain islands in the Pacific Ocean within the boundaries named in the bill. These islands are said not to be under the control of any civilized nation.

The bill has been carefully considered by the committee, and hearings have been held upon the subject. The late President, in his message at the beginning of the last session of Congress, referred to this subject and heartily approved of the principle involved in the bill.

Ex-President Harrison says, among other things, in reference to this matter:

"It does seem to me as if the Christian nations of the world ought to be able to make their contact with the weaker peoples of the earth beneficent and not destructive, and I give to your efforts to secure helpful legislation my warmest sympathy."

Numerous petitions have been received favoring the passage of this bill; and such petitions are not confined to any special locality, but come from all sections of the country, containing the indorsements of societies and individuals in twenty-three or more States, and also from the District of Columbia and Hawaii, and from many American missionaries at work in foreign lands. These petitions are not intended for the United States alone, but they ask all the Governments that have twice united in treaties of 1890 and 1899, in protecting the natives of Africa against intoxicants, to take further action, separately and together, to protect all uncivilized races.

This bill received a large majority in the House of Representatives last session. It is similar to the present English law on the subject, and has the indorsement of the State Department. In fact, the Department is now negotiating with other nations to unite in a general treaty on the lines suggested by this bill, but, as it may take several years to complete such a treaty, Congress is appealed to.

In view of the above, and the general demand throughout the country for the passage of this act, your committee report this bill with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Connecticut yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. SPERRY. I will.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does this bill apply to the Philippine Islands?

Mr. SPERRY. This bill has no application to the Philippine Islands. The islands which this bill is to cover are the islands about the New Hebrides, and they are not within two or three hundred miles of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. GRIGGS. To whom do they belong?

Mr. SPERRY. To no civilized nation on earth.

Mr. GRIGGS. Then what have we got to do with them?

Mr. SPERRY. We simply say to our people that they shall not indulge in the sale of opium or intoxicating liquors for the purpose of so infuriating these tribes that they may kill the civilized portion of the people that are on those islands.

Mr. OTEY. Where are the islands?

Mr. SPERRY. Within the boundaries named in the bill.

Mr. GRIGGS. Will the gentleman allow me a further question?

Mr. SPERRY. Yes.

Mr. GRIGGS. Will my friend from Connecticut explain to me how the United States courts can take jurisdiction of what is committed outside of the United States?

Mr. SPERRY. Yes; it is provided in the bill that they shall be tried on board of a merchant vessel, or on board any other vessel of the United States.

Mr. GRIGGS. Any vessel that is flying the American flag?

Mr. SPERRY. Yes.

Mr. OTEY. Are these islands covered by the Constitution? [Laughter.]

Mr. SPERRY. Yes; the vessels are. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut if this is the first step toward taking sovereignty and control of those islands?

Mr. SPERRY. So far as I know, Mr. Speaker, there has been no attempt made to pass any measure except that which we passed in the last session of this House. The Senate has passed this bill unanimously.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Let me ask the gentleman from Connecticut if these are the New Hebrides to which Dr. Johnson made his famous journey? [Laughter.]

Mr. SPERRY. These islands, which are contained within the boundaries named in the bill, are mostly within the New Hebrides.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Connecticut yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. SPERRY. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut if England has passed like legislation with reference to her citizens selling intoxicating liquors and opium?

Mr. SPERRY. Precisely the same.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is any law in the State of Connecticut that prevents the selling of these goods in that State? [Laughter.]

Mr. SPERRY. In the State of Connecticut we not only sell them, but we manufacture them as well. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was read the third time.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, Mr. KLEBERG demanded a division.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 187, nays 21, answered "present" 7, not voting 141; as follows:

BRIDGE ACROSS CURRENT RIVER, ARKANSAS.

Mr. VANDIVER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 74) to authorize the Southern Missouri and Arkansas Railroad Company to build a bridge across the Current River in Arkansas.

The bill was read, as follows:

SEC. 5. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railroad trains or cars over the same, and over the approaches to the same, upon the payment of reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any of them desiring such use, shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid, and upon the rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters at issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon a hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

SEC. 6. That this act shall be void if the actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within two years.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, in an address delivered about the first of the year on the great men and women of the world who had passed away during the year 1901, the Rev. Dr. Radcliffe presented to the minds of his audience a great array of those who were prominent in art, in literature, in science, in the drama, in theology, as rulers of great nations, and, in fact, in every path of life. When he mentioned the names of the great statesmen who had passed away, prominently among them was the name of BROSIUS. It is to bear testimony to the life, the work, and the character of this great statesman, MARRIOTT BROSIUS, that we have gathered here to-day.

Lancaster County, Pa., has always been justly proud of the men who have represented it in this House of Congress, all of whom have been men of ability and integrity, some of whom have been very prominent in the history of our nation—one, the greatest leader this House has ever known—but of all the members from this county none has been so faithful, so conscientious, so pure, so devoted to the interests of his county, his State, and the nation as was MARRIOTT BROSIUS.

Eastern Pennsylvania has always been influenced to a very great extent in its religious and financial life by the Quakers who early settled there. Henry Brosius, who emigrated from England in the year 1780 and settled in Philadelphia, was a Quaker. He was a great-grandfather of the late MARRIOTT BROSIUS, who was born in Colrain Township, Lancaster County, on March 7, 1843, the same year in which Lancaster County was made an independent Congressional district, and it was a matter of no little pride to him that his ancestors, both paternal and maternal, were of sturdy Quaker stock. His mother died when he was 7 years old and for a few months he resided with an uncle. After a period of some two years his father married again. His stepmother performed the duties of a mother well and Mr. BROSIUS always had the tenderest feelings for her. Mr. BROSIUS remained at home until shortly before the outbreak of the civil war. Young BROSIUS was always patriotic in spirit, and although his early years were spent on a farm, he was ambitious for a more exalted station in life. He became a student, confining himself closely to intellectual pursuits, and at the age of 16 entered the Chestnut Hill Academy, but was allowed to remain there only a short time, as the outbreak of the civil war stirred in him that enthusiasm for the defense of his country which compelled him, although contrary to the beliefs of his ancestors, to join the Army and take sides in the struggle for the preservation of the Union.

In November, 1861, he became a member of Company K, Ninety-seventh Pennsylvania Infantry, under Captain Wayne. He was mustered in as a corporal and served continuously for almost four years, remaining with this regiment until he was mustered out of the service. I will not attempt at this time to give an account of his Army life more than to say that he was recognized as an earnest, conscientious, and brave soldier. He was wounded, from the results of which he was ever afterwards unable to lift his right arm above his shoulder. His whole Army record is written in the record of the Ninety-seventh Regiment. He was ever at his post, active and vigilant as a sentry, brave and courageous in battle. He was a model soldier. Mr. BROSIUS lost his father while he was in the Army, in the year 1863.

Upon his return home from the war he immediately resumed his studies at the Millersville Normal School, where he remained until 1867. After teaching school for a short time in Chester County, he took up the study of law with the Hon. Thomas E. Franklin, ex-attorney-general of Pennsylvania. He graduated from the University of Michigan with honors in 1868 and was immediately admitted to the Lancaster County bar, where he was always recognized for his excellent equipment, superior native talent, and conscientious, painstaking interest in all matters which came before him. Those who knew Mr. BROSIUS are all familiar with his wonderful gift of oratory, and it was this which led him to accept the position under the order of Good Templars as lecturer of the organization, and for a year or more he was continuously on the platform in behalf of this organization.

Mr. BROSIUS did not take an active part in politics until 1882, when he was sent as delegate to the Republican State convention, at which time he was nominated as Congressman at large from the State of Pennsylvania. The Republican party that year was unsuccessful in their endeavor to elect their ticket and Mr. BROSIUS was defeated. In 1888, however, he became a candidate in his own county for the position of Congressman from the Tenth district, which resulted in his nomination and election. From that time to the time of his death there was no material opposition to Mr. BROSIUS remaining in Congress. As to his life in these halls of Congress I will leave to those who associated with him here to bear testimony. As a public speaker Mr. BROSIUS had a national reputation and was in national demand. He was the centennial orator in Lancaster on the Fourth of July, 1876. He delivered the address on the occasion of the unveiling of the statue at the national cemetery at Antietam, and also delivered the memorial orations on the battlefield of Gettysburg in 1895 and at Arlington in 1896 and 1900.

He was essentially a scholarly man. His reading covered a wide range and he possessed a splendid memory, which enabled him to enrich his public utterances with constant and appropriate quotations from the world's illustrious writers. The honorary degree of LL. D. was conferred upon him in 1893 by Ursinus College.

MARRIOTT BROSIUS was not a politician but a patriot. His heart was wrapped up in the welfare of his country. He was a lover of home and the home circle. He was a statesman in the broadest sense, having no interest of his own to serve but always interested in the welfare of others. He was beloved by the people of his county. The farmers, the manufacturers, the merchants, the women, and the children of the county which he represented loved him and had every confidence in his desire and ability to serve them faithfully and well. At a meeting of the bar association, held in Lancaster after the death of MARRIOTT BROSIUS, Justice J. Hay Brown in his remarks, said:

His good qualities ought to be remembered here and recalled from time to time, in order that they may be emulated. As a citizen, soldier, lawyer, statesman, husband, and father, he was pure, brave, successful, able, affectionate, and God-fearing. More than this can not be said of mortal being, and though he fell at his work when the rays of the day's sun were still shining upon him, and before the shades of eventide had gathered about him, his life had not been lived in vain.

In conclusion I would say, may the purity of his life and the honesty of his actions be an incentive to those who follow him in these halls of Congress, to be and to do that which is true and right.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, in paying my brief but sincere tribute to the memory and worth of my fellow-member of this House, and my comrade, I am reminded of those lines:

Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north-wind's breath,
And stars to set; but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O death!

MARRIOTT BROSIUS was one of the many notable examples this House has known of worthy ambition, integrity, industry, and courage peculiar to America. He came from a county of Pennsylvania that can point with pride to many illustrious and brave men who have been honored by their country—men who have been leaders in the two great political parties of the present and past. She has given to the Army a Reynolds, Heintzelman, and a Franklin. A county known all over this broad land for the honesty and uprightness of her people and as a garden spot in agriculture and patriotism—old Lancaster.

He came of Quaker ancestry and was born in Lancaster County in 1843, receiving such education as the public schools of his neighborhood and a small academy afforded him. When only 18 years of age the civil war broke forth, threatening to destroy the Union made by our fathers, and like thousands of young men abandoning college or store, farm or trade, with the paternal kiss and God bless you my son, of father or mother, the tender parting and sweet promise of "to the end" from the maiden of their choice, thinking no less of them loving their country the more, their loyal spirits flamed into defiant wrath, bounded eagerly and rejoicingly away, taking on the yoke of patient endurance, becoming heroes under privations, danger, conflict, wounds, and suffering.

He enlisted as a private soldier in the Ninety-seventh (three year) Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and had for captain a grandson of Mad Anthony Wayne. The regiment fairly won its right to be placed among the 300 fighting regiments of the Union Army. From the volume I take the following:

The regiment lost in killed and wounded 519; of disease and accident 186. It took part in 15 battles and a number of skirmishes. In the fighting May 18 and 20, 1864, near Bermuda Hundred, the loss was 29 killed, 186 wounded, 22 captured; a total of 237. During the battle no less than 7 color bearers were shot

Of the part taken by this regiment at that time another writer has said:

That 300 men of the Ninety-seventh, under Colonel Pennypaker, were ordered to assault the intrenchments and retake the lost position, without considering the rifle pits behind which the enemy lay. The force was ridiculously inadequate. Every man of the 300 knew that some one had blundered, and that he was marching into the very jaws of death, but it was—

Theirs not to make reply,
Theirs not to reason why,
Theirs but to do or die.

The charge was made across the intervening wheat field. Pickett's men reserved their fire until the gallant band was within 100 yards, when they opened a murderous fire from six fieldpieces and hundreds of muskets. The reaper, whose name is death, was doing terrible destruction. The noble fellows pressed onward, and not until their gallant leader had been twice wounded and more than half their comrades lay stretched on the stubble, was the order given to fall back. Of the 300 men who engaged in the charge 125 returned. It was out of this fearful encounter that Sergeant BROSIUS came wounded almost to death. The wound was received as he stooped to pick up a wounded comrade. The ball passed through the right shoulder blade and through the ball of the right shoulder joint. Then followed months of great suffering. He lay for three months on his left side with his right arm across his breast. He was transferred from one hospital to another. The wound did not heal. Finally he reached the general hospital, and after four long months of intense agony the wound received the proper treatment and his heroic life was preserved. Weeks of suffering followed; then came convalescence.

He was discharged December 28, 1864, and on February 28, 1865, was commissioned second lieutenant for bravery on the field of battle.

After his return from the Army, with his shattered constitution, Mr. BROSIUS found new demands, new difficulty, and new duties devolving upon him. His father had died during his absence, and a widowed mother with small children turned to him for counsel and aid. He did not falter, but resolutely and manfully assumed the new responsibilities with all a loving son's affection and devotion.

When the war was over, when the battle-scarred, the maimed, hacked, hewn, decrepit of the blue and the gray came out of the hell fire of those horrible days, when our great leader said, "Let us have peace," it found a ready response in his heart. He wished to see a full deliverance from the resentment and bitterness of war, a peace that would include fraternity and union, the peace of righteousness, the fraternization of that spirit which sees how the fatherhood of the Divine includes the brotherhood of the human; a union under whose sway liberty throughout all the land shall walk hand in hand with justice.

It could be well said of him—

The sternest and swiftest when armies are launched
And the onset of daring is shouted
Are tender as woman's when wounds should be staunched
For the broken and ruined and routed.

After the war he attended a normal school and took a course at Ann Arbor University, choosing the law for his profession. He read under the late Hon. Thomas E. Franklin, and was admitted to the bar in 1868. He was distinguished in his profession among his fellow-citizens for industry, probity, and public spirit. He was known throughout his own and other States for his eloquence on the platform, and was selected as the orator on many great public occasions.

Mr. BROSIUS's integrity, clean character, and devotion to concession and harmony in the State Republican convention of 1882, when he said in a brief speech, "I love my party better than any wing or faction of it, and only less than I love my country," won a deserved recognition when he was made, without the slighest premonition, the candidate for Congressman at large. It was the year in which General Beaver was defeated for governor. Mr. BROSIUS went down with the rest, but ran 7,600 ahead of his ticket.

He first came to this House as a member of the Fifty-first Congress, and was reelected to the Fifty-second, Fifty-third, Fifty-fourth, Fifty-fifth, Fifty-sixth, and Fifty-seventh, receiving a majority of 14,000 over his competitor at his last election.

My acquaintance with our deceased member antedates our meeting in the halls of Congress some thirty years. While we both served in the Union Army during the war, I did not make his acquaintance until a few years after its close, when we became closely associated in Grand Army work. That association was kept up until I came here as a fellow-member in the Fifty-fifth Congress.

I think I but voice the sentiments of the members of this House who knew him when I say that Mr. BROSIUS made friends because of his manliness, his devotion to duty, his love of fair play, his gentle qualities of heart, his readiness to oblige, his fair, honorable, and generous treatment of a political opponent, and his love for his friends.

He was popular with his party, and in many Presidential campaigns in which he took part in other States than his own he was known as "The man eloquent from Pennsylvania."

Mr. BROSIUS was at times a great sufferer, and I doubt not many members of this House have noticed that he never raised his right arm, but without knowing that it was the result of the terrible wound he had received in the defense of his country. I remember at a breakfast given to some noted ex-Union soldiers at Philadelphia, July 1 of the centennial year, among those present were Horace Binney, Sergeant, Generals Devins and Hartranft, and others. There was a quiet sentiment and interest among these men that had served their country in its hour of danger that some expression should go out to our late foes that would strengthen the desire to bury all animosity between the sections. Mr. BROSIUS was to respond to the toast "The American flag." He arose, pale, weak, and trembling, supporting himself by his left hand on a chair, paid a wonderfully eloquent tribute to the flag of our Union, and gave utterance to the sentiment of all present when, in closing, he said:

To this exalted fellowship of equal rights, duties, charities, opportunities, and rewards we welcome the whole gathered South; our hands are outstretched with kindest warmth. Hasten the day when in like mood they grasp and hold—when we shall be one people in the fullest sense, as we are in political form—the time when conscience and equity shall reign supreme.

He never faltered until the last word, then sank exhausted to his chair.

His life, so full of hope, of praiseworthy ambition, of promised usefulness to his country, of need to his loved ones, answered the call of God's messenger, and we are reminded, as with him, so with all.

One by one our days are weaning,
From things earthly go toward Gorgeous harvest days of gleaning,
In the full tracts of the Lord.

Mr. BROSIUS was very domestic in his habits; his home was the center of his affections. Faithful as husband and father, he has left behind him in the hearts of widow and children the tenderest memories of love and devotion. Among his people and comrades he was a much-loved citizen and one of whom they were very proud.

He loved his fellows and their love was sweet.

As a fitting close to this faint tribute, it would not be inappropriate to use the words quoted by him in this very Chamber two years ago at the memorial services over a departed colleague:

That while green grass will cover his grave, blue skies bend over it, sweet birds sing near it, and the place will be hallowed ground, yet greener than the grass, fairer than the skies, sweeter than the birds, more hallowed than the grave itself will be his fragrant memory enshrined with supreme sacredness in their heart of hearts.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, when MARRIOTT BROSIUS died the State of Pennsylvania lost a favored citizen, Lancaster County a beloved son, and this House a conspicuous member.

Wherever he served his people he was at all times found useful, and his service was appreciated and approved by them. His representation of the great agricultural county of Lancaster was an accomplished success, and his party commended him to the nation by unanimously renominating him many times. He was devoted to his native county and all the people therein, and they in turn manifested great devotion to him. He was a neighbor to every person in his district, because he knew them all, and they in turn reciprocated his friendly familiarity to the fullest measure.

An acquaintanceship of thirty years, with but 40 miles dividing his home from mine, with almost daily intercourse between the two places, enables me to speak of Mr. BROSIUS as one who knew him well. I knew of him as a brave soldier. He was but a lad when he volunteered for the Union's sake. His enlistment was in a regiment in part recruited from my native county (Chester), and I have often heard his comrades speak of him. His service lasted longer than three years, when he returned, badly wounded but grown in strength, to take up the life he quitted when his country made its appeal to him. When the war had ceased the Government tendered him a commission as a second lieutenant in the Regular Army for bravery in battle, thus not consenting to part with him without first having blessed him. While only a plain soldier, he had done his full duty, and with his comrades acquired the first place in the affections of a grateful people. To his last day those affections were never diverted from him, because he had earned them, and one of the great comforts of his life was the knowledge that he had so earned them.

When the great occasion which demanded his service had disappeared, he immediately set about a preparation for the pursuits of civil life. The three years spent in his country's cause forced him to greater activity that he might be ready to take his place amongst the brilliant men who had already made his home famous. He had been raised amongst business people, and had learned well the advantages which come to those who labor diligently and intelligently. From the plain and simple surroundings set before him while a boy, from the sincere and earnest ways of those who brought him forth and directed his first steps, Mr. BROSIUS was impressed with feelings of tolerance and kindness that invited people to his side and induced them to remain. He also learned from these sources the habits of mind that distinguished him amongst his fellow-men.

He was at all times free from duplicity in his behavior and strictly truthful in his speech. His dealings were always open, and no man ever charged him with an attempt to practice a deceit. In the cause of his client, he exhibited the same faithfulness as he did in the representation of his district.

He was modestly ambitious for himself and his household that they might take a foremost place amongst respectable and well-meaning people. He aspired only to make his public and private service entirely acceptable, and in this aspiration he was eminently successful. His gentility, which added to his attractiveness, was the same whether at home or abroad, and strangers and kinsmen alike will be pleased to testify that it was habitually present.

Mr. BROSIUS was constant in his advocacy of every principle he adopted and was never tempted to forsake it that a personal advantage might thereby come to him. In his public declarations he was positive and determined, and in the treatment of every proposition submitted to him he showed great reflection, a complete analysis, and a thorough knowledge. He was brilliant in the discussion of his subject, artful in the use of language, and possessed a power of persuasion that made him a formidable adversary. It can be said of him that he was at all times and upon all occasions a sensible man.

As a lawyer in Pennsylvania Mr. BROSIUS was prominent, displaying the same characteristics, the same virtues, and the same great earnestness and zeal which everyone who knew him here recognized. While he was actively engaged in the practice of the law he held a commanding place amongst his professional brethren, who acknowledged his legal learning and admitted his capacity. He worked as diligently at the bar as he did in this House and always enjoyed the confidence of the court. That he was a successful lawyer the records of the courts of Pennsylvania will bear ample testimony.

There were perhaps but few men in this House more favorably known than my late colleague. The labor which he employed in and about all the duties attending Congressional life is not easily detailed and would be difficult to properly estimate. The vexatious and irritating labor which every member of Congress has at times to perform did not seem to distress him, but he maintained through it all that same composure and politeness which characterized and distinguished him. He was helpful to his constituents, individually and collectively. Many of the young members of Congress appealed to him for advice, which he gave not only willingly but cheerfully. After years of patient labor in Congress, he had just reached a position where his use to his country and his State would have been very important.
